In the German advance to the east from Mariampol nine Russian officers and 1350 soldiers were taken prisoner. Four machine guns also were captured. To the northeast of Lomza the Russians thre wbombs which did not explode but which developed asphyxiating gases.

The Russian authorities officially have circulated a report concerning the humiliation of Russian non-commissioned officers in thep resence of German officers. This is an absurd falsehood, and unworthy of discussion.

I. C. C. CHAIRMAN SAFETY ADVOCATE

New Head of Body Personally Investigates Accidents.

LED IN NEW HAVEN PROBE.

Mr. McChord Was For Twelve Years an Active Member of the Kentucky State Railroad Commission—Described as Well Informed and Courageous. Aided in the Regulation of Rates.

Washington.—Charles C. McChord, who has just been elected chairman of the interstate commerce commission, brings to his new office the knowledge of affairs gained from a wide field of personal and official experience. Previous to becoming a member of that body four years ago he had twelve years' active experience as railroad commissioner of Kentucky.

Soon after admission to the bar of Kentucky he was elected prosecuting attorney of Washington county and was twice re-elected. During his entire twelve years' service on the Kentucky railroad commission he was its chairman.

The associated railroad commissioners of the United States twice elected him president of that body.

He carried through to enactment his bill conferring upon the Kentucky commission authority and power to regulate the railroads of that state.

This was at a time when the unprecedented excitement and passion existed in Kentucky, which resulted in the assassination of Governor Goebel and forced the legislature to remove its sittings from Frankfort to Louisville.

Since he has been a member of the interstate commerce commission he has reorganized and systematized the safety work of the commission into what is now known as the division of safety, all of whose work has been under his supervision. Railroad accidents are now made the subject of thorough investigation, and Mr. McChord personally holds the hearings in the most important cases. Examination is made under his direction of new inventions covering the field of block signals, automatic train control and safety devices of like character. In fact, every factor which enters into the problem of making railroad travel more safe is given consideration and study by the division of safety.

He personally examines each instance of violation of the hours of service act, and the safety appliance act which are reported each year by the inspectors of the commission and authorizes and supervises their prosecution. He prepared an analysis of the causes of delay to trains on all railroads of the United States so that any railroad manager could determine the subjects requiring attention in order to bring about efficiency in operation. As a result, in one year the reduction of train delays and excess service was nearly 50 per cent.

To him largely is due the fact that the attitude of leading railroad managers toward this branch of the work of the commission has changed in a marked degree.

Mr. McChord was selected by the commission to preside during the investigation into the financial wrecking of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad company. In the report made to the senate on the subject Commissioner McChord called attention to the obligation resting upon the directors of railroads to keep themselves informed of the financial operations of the systems with which they are connected and insisted that the primary duty to regulate a railroad rests upon the directors.

Mr. McChord's part of the work of the commission in the regulation of rates has been generally recognized as strong, fair and impartial. He is the author of some of the most important opinions in the rate cases decided by the commission during the past four years.

DOG FINDS $1; TAKES IT HOME

Shep Is Honest, but Thinks Everything Belongs to His Master.

Muncie, Ind.—Edward Gottlieb of Muncie has a shepherd dog which for intelligence he believes cannot be surpassed. It is not unusual for the animal to bring home things that he finds in the streets, but the other day it surpassed all its previous endeavors by coming home with a brand new $1 bill in its mouth. It is said the dog picked up the money in South Walnut street, in the center of the business district. Mr. Gottlieb is now endeavoring to find the person that lost the money.

"Shep does not mean to be dishonest," said his owner, "but he thinks that everything of value he sees should belong to me."

Got There Strong.

"My dear, these are very strong cigars you bought for me."

"Well, the man asked if I wanted 'em strong. Naturally I thought you would prefer something strong and durable. But that's just like a man. Next time I'll get 'em weak and see if that will suit you."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Unusual Conditions Produce Unusual Results

In every section of this country one may find unusual conditions. There exists in Fulton a condition of more than unusual interest, in that it affects the business life and community interest to a greater extent than a cursory glance will show.

This condition is the practice of business men who patronize the large city newspapers by inserting therein their advertising.

The Evening Times challenges any person to produce a newspaper printed anywhere near a large city that does not secure for its advertising columns the full and complete patronage of local merchants, and, in addition, the business of merchants in the nearby city.

In Fulton there has been, and there still exists, a complete reversal of the usual order of things. Here one may find in the city newspaper columns a large amount of the advertising patronage of local merchants and business men, in direct opposition to logical and good business rules.

The city newspaper gives to this community comparatively nothing in return for the money spent for advertising in its columns, whereas, YOUR local papers give to Fulton real tangible assets—industries that bind and build up the town.

The time has come for a reversal of the order of things. True, there has been improvement, but yet, Mr. Merchant, the Eyes of the People are Watching for a Greater Change.

Seven German Corps Fighting to Save the Austrians from Rout

Emperor William Tells Hungarian Leaders He Will Not Desert Them—New Battle Starts

London, April 14.—Frederik Rennet, correspondent of the Daily News at Petrograd, telegraphs:

"Great masses of German reinforcements still are attempting to save the desperate situation of the Austrian main army. Several new corps are spread along the position from the upper Pilitza to the Dunajec to defend the region of Cracow.

"Other and earlier German reinforcements, believed to be entirly Bavarian, who wre too late to prevent the Russians occupying the entire ridge of the middle Carpathians from Mezolaborcz to Uzok, have joined General Litzinger's army, which now is composed of seven German corps, supported by Austrians from Transylvania. They have begun a formidable attack on the left wing of the Russian army which invading Hungary.

"There has been terrific fighting since the end of last week for the possession of the mountain section of the Stry-Munkacz road. The Russians hold the village of Koziomoka and the immediate slopes nearest the road, but the Germans have recaptured 992 Metre Hill.

"Close fighting, with great losses, continues here, which is the only section of the eastern Carpathians remaining in the enemy's hands. This local check, however, has not stopped the Russsian southern advance.

"It is believed the Kaiser personally assured the Hungarian leaders that he will treat their cause as his own, and he ordered his troops to yield nowhere.

"The personal impatience of the Kaiser in the face of the great strength of the Russian spring campaign now developing is seen in his insistence that Field Marshal von Hindenburg attempt another general attack from East Prussia. Considerable artillery fire is developing on the border of Northern Poland after months of silence. Infantry on both sides still is hampered by the sodden ground.

BRITISH DESTROYER DASHES UP DARDANELLES

London, April 14.—A Tenedos despatch received here from the Reuter correspondent and dated yesterday says:

"The British torpedo boat destroyer Renard entered the Dardanelles yesterday on a scouting mission and ran up the straits at high speed for more than miles, penetrating the waterway probably further than any of the British ships have yet done. A heavy fire was directed at her, but the destroyer wai not hit.

"The British battleship London, which followed the Renard into drew most of the enemy's fire. The batteries on the Asiatic side, especially the howitzers behind Erenkeui, were active, but those on the European side were quiet. Possibly the Turks have withdrawn part of their artillery on the European side in order to be able to mass it quickly at any spot the allied armies may choose for a landing.

"The battery bombarded by the Triumph on Saturday apparently is permanently out of action.

PRESERVE AS WELL AS IMPROVE

"In our labors let us keep in mind that it is our duty, so far as our powers go, to preserve as well as to improve. While we seek to adapt the machinery of government to changing conditions, we are still to presrve the great body of rights and liberties which have grown through many centuries of political and judicial development, and under which we have so long been blessed by peace, order, justice and individual liberty and opportunity. It is not for us to tear down institutions based upon the customs and growing out of the life of the people whom we serve, merely for the purpose of substituting in their place creations of our own devising, however confident we may feel in the success of the experiments we may lontemplate. No wise legislator will undervalue the power for peace and order and progress which lies in the traditions of respect, the conformity of custom, and the habit of obedience among a people towards their own established though, perhaps illogical, institutions. Where changes are needed they should be made fearlessly and thoroughly, but in such a manner, with relation to existing conditions of opinion, as to be natural developments from the life of the people of the state; and in a state with such a history as ours the burden of proof rests always upon the advocates of change."—Hon. Elihu Root in his speech accepting the presidency of the constitutional convention.

VON WIEGAND ACCUSED OF DISTORTING VIEWS

Rome, April 14.—The Tribuna this evening says that the New York World's correspondent, Karl von Wiegand, who was received by the Pope, is known for his semi-official relations with the Germans and had Americanized his name to "Vigand" so that the Pope thought he was speaking with an an American for an American newspaper.

Unfortunately the Pope's neutralist ideas were distorted by the interviewsr's "asides," and thus the clever German journalist, acting for the German interests in America and elsewhere, succeeded in turning the Pope's pacifist intention into the exact channel wanted by the Germans in America.

The New York World on Sunday published a long article by Karl H. von Wiegand, its correspondent, dated Rome, April 6, via The Hague, April 9, giving an interview which the correspondent had with Pope Benedict.

The principal point in the interview is that the Pope is made to appear desirous of peace at any price without regard to the justice of the settlement. The interviewer makes the Pope's chief desire seem to be th rapid ending of the war, ignoring any question of its just ending. According to Mr. von Wiegand, the Pope declare that he ha alreay sent such a message to President Wilson through one of the latter's friends.

The interview, according to the correspondent, was arranged in Berlin and was set for Easter Sunday morning, but the World correspondent missed train connections when traveling from the German capital and was delayed nine hours in Switzerland, arriving in Rome only on Sunday night. The Pope hearing how greatly disappointed the World correspondent was at missing his appointment, graciously consented to receive him on Easter Monday afternoon, when the interview took place.

Writers of Letters That Have Appeared in The Evening Times are Accused by the City Official of Being "Too Odious to Disclose Themselves." He Wants the Authors to Come Into the Open.

George M. Fanning, City Attorney, has addressed to The Evening Times a letter which may or may not have been intended for publication. Whatever his intentions were the letter is deemed of sufficint public interest as to warrant the printing of it verbatim.

In the letter the reader will see that Mr. Fanning invites inspection of his public acts, and deprecates the methods used by The Evening Times correspondent who asked of the City Attorney certain questions.

The reader will note as well that "the great majority of people" accuse the editor of The Evening Times, or some one in the office, of writing the letters that have been published. In making this statement Mr. Fanning and "the great majority of people" are in error. To make known the names of these gentlemen who wrote the letters to which Mr. Fanning objects would be to commit a breach of confidence—an unpardonable offense. The editor of The Evening Times can at any time place a finger upon the author of the letters, but in order to do so he might have to step from the building where this newspaper is published. The author or authors of the (to Mr. Fanning) objectionable letters is not a portion of The Evening Times force.

Mr. Fanning's letter follows:

To the Editor of the Times:

Dear Sir:—

My attention has been called to a communication from a so-called "taxpayer," which was published in your issue of the 12th inst.

I am a public servant, and any question addressed to me by a taxpayer concerning city affairs, or my conduct, is pertinent, and one which should receive consideration, as I am bound to account to the people whose interests I represent. Any person interested in city affairs can inquire of me as to any of my public actions, but there is no reason why they should go to a newspaper and ask it under the name of "taxpayer." Anonymous communications are always a stench in the nostrils of any honest man and characterizes the communication as coming from one who is too odious to disclose himself, and, therefore, receives little or no notice at the hands of well meaning and thinking men.

Now, Mr. Editor, the great majority of people who read these articles, believe that you, or someone in your office, writes them. If this is true be frank enough to admit it; if it is not true do not be made the catspaw of a person who hides behind the word "taxpayer." If the article is written in good faith the author should not be afraid to disclose himself. In the first place the article is purposely garbled, unless, of course, the representative of the Times who was present at the meeting, did not perform his duty properly and report the proceedings as they occurred.

This incident, as far as I am concerned, is closed. As I stated before, any person interested in City affairs of which I have knowledge, can come to my office and they will receive fair and courteous treatment, and be advised as fully as I am capable of so doing.

Very truly yours,

GEO. M. FANNING.

FUN-RAYS
By Ray I. Hoppman

SLANG.

SOME highbrows draw the line on slang—they just can't stand the "vulgar" twang of mutilated chestnut. They do not like the terms we use—the classic phrases we abuse; but, then, that doesn't matter. Why should we be so straight laced that we can't say "paste this in your hat" because it isn't proper? Why should we can such happy words as "feed that chatter to the birds," or draw the chalk on "copper"? I like to hear a fellow sling a little "phoney" talk and bring a smile to your smiler. Oh, partner, throw a little slang (there's snap and action to its twang) and be a gay worth-while. There's music to the slangy speech—(it's not the kind the schoolmarms teach)—but, hoop la! we should worry! I can't see how it's such a sin to substitute "jay finish" for grin, or "shake a leg" for hurry. It grieves me when a fellow talks so carefully and proudly balks at phrases out of order. It gets me, friend, so doggone mad I'd like to run the straight laced lad across the Southern border. It makes a fellow feel at home to gayly chirp "nobody home!" to some dense friend, uncertain. It's good to say a thing or two, to bring your real self into view, and draw aside the curtain. A little slang talk now and then is relished by the wisest men, and that does down for ages. That little proverb ought to be absorbed by all humanity, from hairless babes to sages. The man who slings a little slang will get in solid with the gang (a tip, right off the handle). 'Twill make your tongue as versatile—as easy rolling as a wheel—as lighting as a candle.

Opinions

Facts vs. Hysteria

The misrepresentation and abuse heaped on Governor Whitman in New York city for insisting that a direct state tax was necssary this year because the state treasury had been depleted by his immediate predecessors has been extnded to the Legislature because of the passage of bills to create exemptions under the labor law for the benefit of canning factories.

One who was not familiar with the provisions of the bills or of the nature of the canning business would imagine from some of the exaggerated statements in certain New York papers that the Legislature had been guilty of passing a bill compelling women to work seventy-two hours a week, twelve months in the year. Whether there was a deliberate attempt to create that impression, or whether the authors of the attacks were ignorant of conditions under which work is carried on in canning factories, the result is the same.

The rural sections of this state are dotted with canning factories to which farmers in the immediate vicinity sell peas, corn, tomatoes, and a few other vegetables. These crops ripen very quickly, and the problem of the canner is to handle them in a short season without loss or waste. The solution of this problem is, of course, important to the farmer also, for his prosperity in a great measure depends on the sale of his products to the canning factories.

The bill creating exemptions under the labor law is intended to meet the peculiar conditions of the canning business, a business that so far as this labor feature is concerned is in operation only a few months in the year.

The bill has the approval of the Utica Press which is an independent paper politically, and which is published in a section where canning factories are numerous, and therefore is familiar with labor conditions in the industry. It says:

Everyone familiar with the agricultural communities surrounding canning factories realize that the weather controls the products, and that one day there will be little, and that another day there will be much, and that no human hand or influence can prevent it in either case. That there should be more leeway in a canning factory than in a cotton mill is obvious on its face.

It might be added that there are hundreds of people in rural communities who will beg lad of the opportunity to work seventy-two hours a week during the short season when the canning industry is at its height for the sake of the extra money that they can earn. This point may not seem important to critics of the bill, but it is nevertheless worth considering in a land where it is not a crime for the individual to exert himself to earn an honest dollar.—Rochester Democrat & Chronicle.

"MADE AT HOME" WEEK

During campaign week for the Chamber of Commerce old time Fultonians heard of "home-made" products which the good people never dreamed were manufactured in this city. Then a suggestion loomed up that Fulton should have a made-at-home week. In a recent publication a "made at home" week was interestingly described. The description follows:

Lessons in community reciprocity were learned, economic problems were solved, trade was stimulated and public progress given an onward spurt by means of the "Made in El Paso Exhibit" held during the week of January 11 to an extent that surpassed the most sanguine hopes of the committee.

To all live and growing cities looking for means of developing public spirit and promoting the purchase of home-made products El Paso recommends a display of "Made at Home" goods as a top-notcher. The El Paso Herald says that it proved a revelation to many local people.

"Not only was the public informed of the different classes and kinds of articles made here, their price, uses, name of manufacturer, etc., but great interest was aroused in the idea of giving preference whereever possible to the article 'made at home,' of 'helping the man who helps you,' and impressing the fact that the concern whose payroll, taxes and general contributions help in the city's prosperity assits in the upbuilding of the community.

"The housewives got into the game. Within a few days grocers began to receive calls for 'Made in El Paso brooms, flour, canned goods, etc., whereas, no inquiry from the housewife had ever come before as to where the article came from. A number of local firms reported within less than a week that their sales for local consumption had more than doubled.

"The exhibit was held in the show windows and arcade of the White House Department store and in booths erected in the street fronting the store. A total of sixty-five exhibits was shown, ranging from machinery, ores and smelter products, brick, lumber, and building material, to photographs and hand-painted china. Many firms expended amounts as high as $200 in producing attractive, specially made exhibits; several showing the process of manufacture and erecting temporary machinery for the purpose, with workmen in charge.

"It is estimated that not less than $2,000 worth of orders for goods was taken on the ground or resulted immediately from the displays. Scores of kinds of goods made in El Paso were placed before the public that had formerly been unknown to any extent.

"Less than thirty days were taken in arranging for the exhibition, and its entire cost, outside of the expenditures by exhibitors in getting up and maintaining their displays, was less than $1,500. It is estimated that fully 75,000 persons visited the exhibition."

COURSE OFFERED IN FRUIT GROWING

A course of study in fruit-growing by means of advanced readings has just been started by the New York state college of agriculture at Cornell. It announces that such a course offers an opportunity for systematic home study of fruit-growing.

The course is conducted by means of a textbook and through correspondence with the university experts on the subject, and it is stated that the only expense connected with it, except for the necessary postage, is a nominal sum for the textbook which is to be used. Individual attention is given to each member of the course by one of the investigators in the department of pomology at the college who will grade the answer papers and make comments and suggestions designed to assist those who carry on the work.

This advance reading course is offered in response to a growing demand for home study, the demand being shown by an increase of 51 per cent. in the enrollment for the reading course for the farm, during the past year. The college authorities point out that any resident of New York state who may desire to study fruit-growing or other agricultural subjects should write to the college of agriculture for information in regard to these studies. It is further stated that the only requirement for entrance is a desire to learn.

Sunday and the Unitarians

To the student of religious development in the United States there is keen interest in the way the Rev. Billy Sunday has stirred the resentment of the Unitarians of New Jersey, who, having no church in Paterson, have hired Orpheus Hall, four blocks from Sunday's new tabernacle, and will have a revival of their own while his is going on. The formulation of their indignation comes from the Rev. A. R. Shelander, a Unitarian pastor at Passaic, who says:

Sunday called us "fools" and "mutts" in Philadelphia and rubbed it in hard, and we thought it advisable to be prepared for him here. We are not afraid of what he is going to say, nor do we fear that he is going to hurt us. We expect to gain by him.

We can't conjecture to save our lives how the late William Ellery Channing would have answered the "fool" charge, or just what demurrer Ralph Waldo Emerson would have entered. Probably Charles W. Eliot, an aged gentleman, of which Billy Sunday may have heard, would ask for a bill of particulars on the "mutt" indictment. He knows many languages, but he doesn't know Billy Sunday's. Our rough guess is that neither Meadville nor the Harvard Divinity school will take any formal action. —Brooklyn Eagle.

CITY PAYS CASH FOR IMPROVEMENT SUGGESTIONS.

Cash bonuses for employees of the city of Oakland, Cal., who make suggestions for the betterment of the service in their various departments are advocated by the civil service board. As a preliminary step employees who make good suggestions are to be given special credit in their efficiency rating. The board has sent a letter to the head of each city department as follows:

"The civil service department of the city of Oakland wishes to mark the new year by asking each man and woman in the city service for definite constructive suggestions for the improvement of the manner of doing the city's work, such suggestions to deal with any or all of the following subjects: Organization, methods of work, efficiency markings, salaries, vacations and leaves of absence, promotions and examinations.

"In estimating the value of plans proposed the department will have the aid of committees from the offices and employees. Special credit will be given for every suggestion adopted, which will materially affect the person's efficiency rating.

"If this plan brings forth enough of profit to the city a system of cash bonuses will be worked out for its further development."

BEAUTIFYING A TOWN.

Ridgewood, N. J., Co-operates With Railroad In Removing Eyesores.

Ridgewood, N. J., has taken up beauty culture and within six months or so will be qualified for the double red star of any Baedeker on "The Scenic Beauties of New Jersey Towns." Some $200,000 of good looks is about to be added to it, and when everything is completed the inhabitants declare that Garden City will not even be in the same class.

For some six years, since a collection of old buildings was torn down around the railroad station, there has been a bare spot that troubled the more artistic souls of the place. Finally George Orcut, one of the artistic residents, assistant to the president of the Erie railroad and one of the leading citizens of Ridgewood, began to agitate for a park in place of the collection of sticks, stones and ugliness. The Woman's club of Ridgewood, which always has had a hand—several of them, in fact—in any civic improvement, increased the agitation, and the mayor, Donald Garber, called a mass meeting, to which the town turned out bodily. A vote was put through 4 to 1 to make Ridgewood one of the most beautiful towns in the state.

Mr. Orcut interested the Erie railroad, since the improvements were to take place on part of its grounds and around its station. The railroad agreed to help. Ridgewood estimated that the improvements would cost $150,000. The Erie was less modest and said it would be $240,000. The plans grew as they talked about them until the final agreement was a cost of $260,000, the town to raise about $80,000, the railroad the rest.

There are some eight acres around the station, which will be made into a beautiful park. The old station will be torn down, and a new one with covered platforms, to cost about $30,000, will be put up. The tracks will have to be shifted somewhat and the grade crossing done away with, an underground tunnel being substituted. Other improvements along the main street will be made and the whole town done over and put in apple pie order.—New York Press.

Town's Ugliness Kills Family Life.

Declaring that Pittsburgh's hilly topography is most favorable to artistic and sanitary homes, Albert Kelsey, a Philadelphia architect, told the congress of women's clubs in Pittsburgh that what is needed is a higher birth rate, especially among the middle classes, who are in a position to give their children a wholesome if not an elaborate rearing. Mr. Kelsey said that most town plans in this country suffer from monotony and that in part at least this accounts for the fact that women will prefer to put their money into theater tickets and the movies rather than into caring for families.

Social Clearing House in St. Louis.

St. Louis is the first city in the United States to establish officially a general co-operative clearing house of all organizations interested in the welfare of the city.

Mayor Henry W. Kiel recently announced the formation of a mayor's conference to which all organizations active in public matters (about 350) may send delegates. This plan is the suggestion of representatives of leading organizations of the city. The conference will meet on call of the mayor for the discussion of all important movements for the city's progress.—Survey.

Join the Back Yard Farmers.

"An hour's work every day in the back yard will serve substantially to reduce the high cost of living," says C. L. Smith of Portland, Ore., agriculturist for a railroad company. "The profit that can be made from the back end of an ordinary city lot is hard to realize. It is possible to grow not only all the fresh vegetables needed for the ordinary family, but to produce enough small fruits and vegetables to supply them through the greater part of the winter."

EQUAL RIGHTS

"Under our system, from generation to generation, the constitutional convention is the interpreter of the conscience of the people of its time in its answer to this vital and all important question. What is the moral law that rules our state and through what limitations shall our exercise of public power be made to conform to that law? In entering upon the performance of that solemn and lofty duty, let us seek for a new birth in our souls of unselfish patriotism and strive for the power of clear vision and right thinking. We have in America one unchanging guide in the political philosophy of that great instrument which gave birth to the nation. "All men," says the Declaration of Independence, "are endowed by their creator with inalienable rights." "Governments are instituted to secure these rights." This is a distinct denial and reversal of the theory which was held by the ancient republics and is still widely held and advocated, and which begins with the state as the basis of civil society and derives the rights of the individual only as a member of the State. With us the rights of the individual citizen are not derived from the state but are independent of it; and all the powers of government find their justification only in their adaptation to secure the rights of the individual. The freedom of the individual will is limited only by the equal rights of all other individuals.

"The rights of the individual citizen to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, are held by indefeasible title. He cannot rightfully be deprived of those rights by legislators or executives or majorities or armies. To secure the equal rights of everyone of the 10,000,000 people of the State of New York is the end and object of all that we are to do; and an affirmation of the sacredness of those equal and inalienable indjvidual rights, is the primary maxim of the political morality which is to direct our conduct."—Elihu Root.

TENT CATERPILLARS

School children in New York State destroyed 830 million tent caterpillars last year, according to figures just tabulated. They collected 4,150,150 egg masses, or rings, of this pest, which causes a loss of many thousands of dollars each year to one of the state's most important crops.

The rural education department of the state college of Agriculture at Cornell is responsible for the correctness of the figures, on the basis that each egg mass averages 200 eggs. A school of 13 pupils in Clinton county collected 55,525 egg clusters; one, of 30 pupils, in Sullivan county collected 20,000 clusters; and another, of only 10 pupils in Tompkins county, collected 13,000 egg rings.

Now is the Time to Act.

Entomologists say that the egg rings should be collected and destroyed within the next three weeks, before they hatch. The tent-caterpillars have been abundant during the past two years and promise to do considerable damage in the coming season, say the scientists, who urge that in fighting this pest, as in other things, on ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.

The eggs of the apple-tree tent-caterpillars were laid lasst July by the parent moths in rings around the smaller twigs of apple, peach, wild cherry, and even plum trees. They appear now as dark colored enlarged knots, or lumps. On close inspection they are seen to be covered with an impervious coat of varnish-like substance, which has kept the eggs fully protected from the weather during the winter. Twigs which bear the egg masses should be clipped off or peeled off with the fingers. If the eggs are not destroyed the caterpillars will build their white-webbed tents in the branch crotches, and will defoliate the trees again this year.

The work of the school children in the campaign against the tent caterpillar may be encouraged by contests between various schools, or between different grades in the same school, if both teachers and pupils will take interest. In addition to the pleasgreatest numbe rlifimm mm mmbbb ure of winning by bringing in the greatest number of egg clusters, there is further incentive of a knowledge that the work not only saves money to the state, but keeps the trees green and sightly.

The college authorities say that an egg collecting contest of this sort would be particularly appropriate for boy scouts either between patrols or between individuals in a single patrol. The point is emphaized, however, that the work must be done soon, or from the present time until the apple buds begin to burst, if it is to be effective.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dread disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

"THE TIMES" WANTS TO KNOW WHO HAS LIVED HERE THE LONGEST

The Evening Times would like to know who has lived longest in Fulton and its immediate vicinity—say within a radius of six miles of city hall.

Write The Evening Times a letter, if you are an old resident, and tell us some facts about your early days. The Evening Times will publish the letters from the oldest residents. The Times wishes to secure as many interesting facts as possible. The publication of one incident will remind other old-timers of other incidents. so let the letters come, addressed to Publisher, The Evening Times, Fulton, New York.

We offer—To the person showing the longest continuous residence in the city or its vicinity, absence of less than one year, or service in the army or navy not counted against the pioneer, we will send The Fulton Evening Times free for the remainder of his or her life. To the second oldest pioneer we will send the paper for three years free, and to the third, one year free.

Mrs. J. French Asks to Be Awarded Third Place

Who has lived here the longest? Have you? Has your neighbor? At any rate, why not allow readers of the Evening Times know all about your life? Why not do as other old women and men have done, and as Mrs. J. French, who lives on R. F. D. 5, has done—by writing a letter in detail of your life.

Mrs. French has the following to say:

I was born in 1856. I may stand a chance of winning third place in The Evening Times contest for being the oldest person. If I don't win third place it is all the same to me.

The first thing I remember was to hear my people say that my face would change. I was at the time playing in the sand and the weather was very hot. I was sweating some and I thought I felt my face changing, so I ran into the house and climbed up in a chair, looked in the glass and I couldn't see that my face had changed a bit, or if it had changed it was not for the best.

I can remember the Civil War. Our family was at my grandparents' home, when my father and brother bid goodbye to my mother and two sisters and one brother. Then they went away and when we left for our home they were all crying. My youngest sister said to me, why don't you cry? It counts some times to be young, for it was not very long until I understood more about the war and my father and brother's absence and then I began to look for them to come back. My little sister and I would run out of the house and into the roadway many, many times a day to look for our father and brother. They stayed in Oswego—I don't know just for how long, but my grand parents went down there, taking along with them my mother, my sister and myself. I remember going upon the camp ground where the tents were all set in rows, just like corn hills. At least that's the way the camp looked to me. We found a tent here my father and brother and some people from our neighborhood were talking. There were men walking around carrying guns. I started to go behind a tent and the man with a gun said, "Get back there, or I'll shoot you." I looked at him for a minute and then walked back. I didn't say anything to my folks about it, as it seemed too much for me to understand.

I remember a whole road full of women and men walking down near the lake. The men were going to have a good dinner. The men entered a big tent where there was an awful long table but I couldn't see my father as the men all looked alike to me. While I looked a woman drew to my attention a big piece of beef and a big piece of bread. My piece of beef was as big as my bread.

TO PARDON ALL DERELICTS.

Many Old Inmates of Georgia Prisons to Be Released.

Atlanta, Ga.—One of the last official acts of Governor John M. Slaton, who will be succeeded this spring by Governor Nat E. Harris, will be the pardoning of some hundreds of Georgia's forgotten prisoners, who have been in prison so long that about all their friends and kindred have died.

The governor recently visited the state farm at Milledgeville to learn something about these human derelicts. As they approached one by one to lay their petitions before the governor they seemed very weary.

The governor found convicts who had been imprisoned for twenty-five years or more, learned that their friends were dead, that nobody remains to bring their petitions before the pardoning board; that in fact they are human beings utterly forgotten. He talked with them and then had details of their lives prepared, and now he is considering their petitions.

"Those who I think deserve parole," the governor says, "have expiated fully any crime they have done. While I am opposed to maudlin sentiment in paroling prisoners, I found at the prison men who have lived without complaint or violation of the rules for twenty-five years or more. They are exhausted, worn out old people after half a lifetime in prison. They almost have forgotten what it is to have liberty. They are listless, and their faces have lost animation. They simply are very tired. I think consideration might well be shown for them."

MISSING LINK HORSE FOUND.

Discovery of Three Toed Fossil Reported to Scientists.

Berkeley, Cal.—The missing link in the evolution of the horse has been discovered in the miocene strata of the southern Sierra Nevadas, it was reported to the Pacific coast division of the Paleontological Society of America in convention here.

The fossil form discovered by J. P. Buwalda of the University of California is that of a three toed horse of the merychippus type, said to have been long sought by scientists to fill the gap in the history of the horse. It is said the fossil fits precisely the description of the hypothetical animals which scientists have maintained must have existed in horse history.

President Henry Fairfield Osborn of the American Museum of Natural History in New York said that fossils of the merychippus of the miocene period had been found in the western Dakotas and Nebraska, but not before in California.

Cookery Points

Save on Your Sugar.

Now that the high price of sugar is bemoaned it behooves us to remember that there are other sweetening agents, molasses and honey, which can virtually take its place. When baking apples use a teaspoonful of strained honey to each apple instead of sugar, and in fruit pies and sauces also use this sweetening agent. When making gems and muffins a teaspoonful of honey in place of sugar will answer just as well. Cakes and desserts are the great sugar consumers of housekeeping. Some can be made without it and with results which are just as satisfactory.

Honey Blancmange.—Dissolve three tablespoonfuls of cornstarch in a little cold milk and add it to one pint of boiling milk. Boil until thoroughly cooked, then add one-half cupful of honey and a few drops of vanilla; stirring thoroughly. When cold serve with cream.

Honey Rice Cups.—Make a thick custard by boiling a cupful of washed rice in slightly salted milk, cooking until the rice is dry and tender; then stir in one well beaten egg, a tablespoonful of honey and a few drops of vanilla; lastly two tablespoonfuls of cream. Beat until light and pour into shallow cups and set away until cold. Before serving turn out and hollow out a small piece on the top, fill with any kind of canned fruit or jelly which is open, put in the oven a few minutes and serve with cream.

Old Time Molasses Cookies.—One cupful of melted lard, one-half cupful of warm water, two cupfuls of molasses, one teaspoonful each of soda, ginger and cloves, a little salt and flour enough to roll thin.

Golden Orange Cake.—Mix one-half cupful of butter or clarified drippings, one cupful of New Orleans molasses, one beaten egg, juice, pulp and grated rind of a small orange, one teaspoonful of soda (dissolved in a scant half cupful of cold water), two cupfuls of pastry flour and a little salt and bake in a shallow pan in a hot oven. Rub the top with a little orange marmalade.

The Cooking of Fish.

It is well to remember in preparing fish that boiling is the most insipid and wasteful way of cooking fish. To be made at all palatable a rich sauce is needed for all kinds of boiled fish except salmon and bluefish, which are so oily in themselves that boiling does not hurt them. Never try to boil a fish whole, as the head of a boiled fish is about the most unsightly object that can be offered a hungry family. If you must boil, bear in mind that if fish be put in cold water the juices are drawn into the water, and if cooked in rapidly boiling water the fish breaks on the outside before the middle is done. If the fish breaks and looks unsightly remove the bones and flake it, piling it lightly on a platter and pour the sauce over it. If it comes out unbroken serve on a folded napkin, with the sauce in a sauce boat. Allow about six minutes to a pound in boiling.

All varieties of fish need accompaniments of starchy foods, like bread and potatoes, and white fish need also fat or butter to make them desirable as food. Because of the tannin in tea it is better not to serve tea at the same meal with fish. The juices of fish—shellfish particularly—are of so alkaline a nature that lemon juice or vinegar afford the neutralizing agency in the form of a desirable condiment.

Fish bake through more evenly, brown better and are more easily served if placed upright in the pan instead of on one side. Fish that are short and broad, like shad, may be propped in place with stale bread or pared potatoes.

Sponge Gingerbread.

Pour one cupful of best molasses in mixing bowl or dish and stir into it (molasses) one teaspoonful of baking soda (saleratus), dissolved in a little hot water, and follow with one-half cupful of sour milk or buttermilk (use the one most convenient). Add one generous tablespoonful of melted butter and one teaspoonful of ground ginger. After stirring all well together add flour to conveniently handle on board and roll out. Cut in squares about one-half inch thick and bake in a reasonably quick oven.

Baked Barley.

Soak six tablespoonfuls of barley in cold water overnight. In the morning put the barley in an earthen dish and pour three and a half pints of boiling water over it. Add salt as desired, bake in a moderately quick oven about two and a half hours or till perfectly absorbed. When half done add four or five tablespoonfuls of sugar mixed with grated lemon peel. It may be eaten warm, but is pleasant served cold, molded in cups and served with cream or nut cream.

Apple Fritters.

Slice thin two medium sized sour apples. Make a batter of one and one-third cupfuls of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-quarter teaspoonful salt, one egg and three-quarters cupful of milk. Mix and sift dry ingredients. Add the milk gradually and egg well beaten. Stir in the sliced apples and drop by spoonfuls in hot fat which will brown a cube of bread in sixty seconds. Drain on brown paper and sprinkle with powdered sugar.

For cuts of all kinds apply Hanford's Balsam of Myrrh to cleanse the wound, stop the bleeding, and to assist nature in healing. Always have it on hand ready for accidents.

A Thumb Print Fantasia.

"You seem very much interested in those thumb print records," commented the man at police headquarters.

"Yes," answered the visitor. "I can't help feeling the greatest curiosity about how one of those things would sound if you put it on a phonograph and played it."—Washington Star.

Unusual Conditions Produce Unusual Results

In every section of this country one may find unusual conditions. These exists in Fulton a condition of more than unusual interest, in that it affects the business life and community interest to a greater extent than a cursory glance will show.

This condition is the practice of business men who patronize the large city newspapers by inserting therein their advertising.

The Evening Times challenges any person to produce a newspaper printed anywhere near a large city that does not secure for its advertising columns the full and complete patronage of local merchants, and, in addition, the business of merchants in the nearby city.

In Fulton there has been, and there still exists, a complete reversal of the usual order of things. Here one may find in the city newspaper columns a large amount of the advertising patronage of local merchants and business men, in direct opposition to logical and good business rules.

The city newspaper gives to this community comparatively nothing in return for the money spent for advertising in its columns, whereas, YOUR local papers give to Fulton real tangible assets—industries that bind and build up the town.

The time has come for a reversal of the order of things. True, there has been improvement, but yet. Mr. Merchant, the Eyes of the People are Watching for Greater Change.

THREE TEACHERS ARE APPOINTED

Public School Faculty for '15-'16 Elected by Board of Education

Miss Florence M. Alt, teacher of German in the high school; Miss Frances A. Kane, 3d grade teacher in the State St. school, and Miss Elizabeth B. Cunnan, 3d grade teacher in the Academy St. school, declined reappointment for the coming school year. These teachers have been very strong members of the faculty and their loss will be felt.

The Board of Education has elected the fololwing teachers to the vacant positions: teacher of German, Miss Jessie R. Bahringer of Cattaraugus, N. Y. She is of German parentage and has always spoken the language in her home.

The two vacant grade positions have been filled by the election of Miss Lucille Dryer of Fulton, now teaching at Ithaca, N. Y., and Miss Kathleen Dalton of Oswego, for two years a teacher at Herkimer, N. Y., and for the past year a substitute teacher in the city schools.

The handwork in the city schools which includes metal and leather work as well as basketry and sewing under the able supervision of Miss Nancy Cook has developed in a remarkable manner during the past year and a new department of handwork created which will be under the supervision of Miss Cook.

For supervisor of drawing in the grades and teacher of drawing in the high school, Miss Alla K. Brewster of Lake Placid, N. Y., has been chosen. MANATAUK HOTEL VOTED OUTSIDE TOWN LIMITS

Clayton, April 14.—Clayton taxpayers recently showed unmistakable evidence that they desire to have a summer hotel here. The resolution to place the Manatauk hotel outside the corporation limits was overwhelmingly carried. The vote was 196 for and 14 against.

The election was called to vote on a resolution allowing the Manatauk hotel property, which is located only a short distance inside the corporation line, to be excluded from the corporation. The village has its full number of licensed places to sell liquors, and as the Manatauk was to open this summer it was desired to traffic in liquors. This could not be done inside the corporation but the owner can secure license now that it has been voted out. It is understood that the lease of Fred C. Wheeler, who is to open the hotel was signed on the condition that should he be unable to procure a license, his lease was void.

The Manatauk has been closed for a number of years, but it now looks as though everything will turn out satisfactory, and a large number of men are busy now getting the place in readiness.

NO DECISION GIVEN IN INJUNCTION PROCEEDINGS

Justice DeAngelis was to have handed down a decision yesterday in the case of William Moon of the Seneca River Power Company against the Fulton Light, Heat and Power Company, and the Fulton Board of Public Works. Eugene M. White of Phoenix, counsel for the plaintiff asked for twenty days in which to prepare a brief and consequently the decision will not be known for some time, unless Mr. White decides to abandon the brief.

Mr. Moon applied for a permanent injunction restraining the Board of Public Works and the local electric company from completing a contract made for lighting and power in the city, on the contention that the contract was not awarded in accordance with the specifications listed for bidders.

T. M. RIPLEY TO SPEAK HERE

At Dinner Whose Date Will Be Announced Soon by Pres. McCully

T. M. Ripley, who has many, many friends in this city, has been secured by R. L. McCully, president of the Fulton Auto Club, as the main speaker at a club dinner to given on a date that will be named later by Mr. McCully.

Mr. Ripley, being a member of the engineering corps of the State Commission of Highways, is at least doubly qualified to speak upon the subject assigned to him, that of building state roads in the Adirondacks. Another point in favor of the speaker is his pleasing personality and manner of addressing an audience.

Mr. Ripley's letter of acceptance follows:

Watertown, N. Y.,
April 13, 1915

Mr. R. L. McCully, President,
Fulton Automobile Clug,
Fulton, N. Y.,

My dear Mr. McCully:

Your favor of the 8th relative to my giving you a talk on the State Roads in the Adirondacks, received.

I should be pleased to come to Fulton and give you this talk, if you will kindly give me a notice several days ahead or a week ahead as to when you desire me there.

I can make this talk more interesting to you if you can furnish a piece of wall space about seven or eight feet square, upon which I can place a map of the northern part of New York State. Such a map will, I believe, be large enough so it can be seen by all present, and with its use my talk on the roads will be far more interesting.

With kindest regards to you and all my old friends, I remain,

Yours respectfully,
THERON M. RIPLEY.

Identified.

In many parts of England and especially in the villages of the Black country it is quite a common thing for a man to be known so exclusively by a nickname that his real name is forgotten. A gentleman had occasion once to ask a potter for the whereabouts of a certain John Williams.

"John Williams?" repeated the man thoughtfully, knitting his brows. "I have heard tell of it. John Williams—it is familiar. I say, sir," he explained, as if seized by a sudden inspiration, "do he be married?"

"That's so," was the reply.

"And hez three of a family?"

"I believe so."

"Well, sir, I'm John Williams."

One Thing He Couldn't Do.

Milking a cow is not an easy task for an unpracticed hand. Leslie Stephen, the famous English literary light, was once on a long tramp in Switzerland, accompanied by his friend, Dr. Morgan. They missed their way and found themselves, parched and hungry, far from any dwelling place. At length they came across a cow, from whom they determined to extract some nourishment, but after trying their best for an hour, each holding on to her horns in turn, they had to abandon all hopes of milk. This, remarks Dr. Morgan, is "one of the very few occasions on which I ever saw Stephen fairly thwarted."—London Spectator.

FOUND GOOD ROADS; FULTON TO NEW YORK

R. L. McCully, president of the Fulton Automobile Club, returned from New York city yesterday morning after an automobile trip from this city in company with Jas. Terry of New York. The men left Fulton Saturday at 10 o'clock and arrived in Albany at 6.30 in the evening. Mr. McCully reports the roads between this city and the capital in fine condition, with the exception of a three mile stretch near Herkimer where a detour was necessary on account of the erection of a bridge.

The trip was resumed Sunday morning from Albany an dthe metropolis was reached at 6 o'clock in the evening. The last leg of the trip was made in a blinding rain storm but the roads were in good shape until Peekskill was reached where another detour was necessary.

When Poland Drank Hard.

Poland was a great country for hard drinking in the old days. Its last king, Stanislaus II., was solemnly warned by the grand hetman, Branicki, that he must never expect to become popular unless he got drunk at least twice a week. Pan Kemarezewski, who could empty a bucketful of champagne at a draft without noticeable consequences, once in company with Pan Soulejkowski, high chamberlain of Volhynia, disposed of a whole butt of old Hungarian wine at a single sitting. One held his beaker under the bunghole until it was full and then drank while the other filled his beaker, and so, turn and turn about, they achieved the feat.—London Chronicle.

WALTERS BILL MAY FAVOR THE PUBLIC MARKET

City's Delegation Receives Assurance That Bill 59 Will Take Care of All Interests

A delegation comprising President Whitaker and Secretary Heydecker of the Fulton Chamber of Commerce and Messrs. Butts, O'Brien, Fanning, Hartnett, Stranahan, Paddock, Morin and City Engineer Hill, went to Albany yesterday for the purpose of a conference with Speaker Sweet and Senator Walters. On the way down the party was joined by County Attorney Gallagher, Superintendent Howard, Supervisors Vant and Nichols.

The Walters bill provides for the disposal of all canal lands not now in use and states that the city shall be given first chance to buy the lands and in the event of the city's refusal to buy the abutting property owners have the next chance. Section 59 of the bill states, however, that the schedule shall not apply to lands for which application has been made before April 1. The lands at the Oneida street bridge here have been applied for by Messrs. Gage, Massaro and Foster, abutting property owners, who wished to buy the land for the purpose of enlarging their plants, etc. The Chamber of Commerce wishes the site or part of it, at least, for a city market which has already been planned extensively. The building proposed shall be a modern structure in every respect with the ground floor enclosed and fronting on Oneida st. The interior is to be divided into stalls which can be closed in the winter and taken down in the summer, and the upper floor is to be an auditorium, seating at least 1,000 and which can be used for public purposes. It is not known at present how much of the state land the city will require but the trip was made yesterday to point out to Senator Walters and Speaker Sweet the injustice of Section 59 which, if incorporated in the bill when the measure passed would prevent the city from getting any of the land unless the property owners so desired.

In arguing the question Senator Walters made it plain that no action would be taken which would directly injure some property owner and the local delegation explained that that was not their purpose.

Senator Walters gave the matter his fullest consideration and then promised the local delegation that the section objected to would be withdrawn. This action will also affect the sale of canal lands in Syracuse and Rochester where certain lands have been applied for by private interests.

The Chamber of Commerce wishes to make plain its intention in the matter. If the property owners in question need the land it will be divided evenly. The land will not be ready for the construction of any building of any kind for some time as it will have to filled in and the bridge at Oneida st. removed. Contractor Rosoff has the contract for the removal of the bridge. and he started work with a gang of men Monday.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, April 14.—During the present week the several members of the legislature who some time since introduced what they believed to be highly important resolutions, are likely to make an attempt to have them acted upon. A number of resolutions of this nature have been awaiting final disposition since the early weeks of the session. Both senators and assemblymen have introduced them.

On January 18, Senator Bennett introduced a resolution calling for a joint legislative committee to investigate the civil administration of the State and to report to the legislature of 1916. The resolution carried an appropriation of $10,000. It is now in the custody of the Senate committee on finance.

On February 15 Senator Bennett also introduced a resolution providing for a legislative committee to ascertain if the number of employees of the senate and assembly could not be reduced and the amounts expended by both houses for printing and supplies be made materially less. The committee on finance of the upper house also has this resolution in its custody.

The senate finance commitee has still under consideration the resolution presented by Senator Thompson which provides for an investigation of organizations receiving money for charitable purposes. This resolution was introduced on February 16.

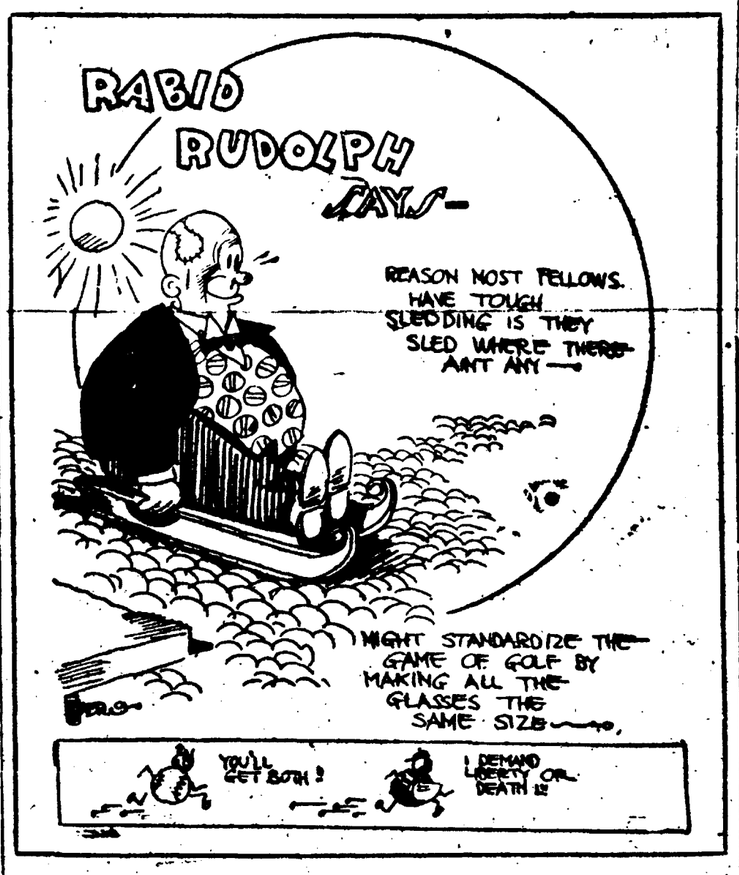
No action has as yet been taken on the resolution introduced by Senator Burlingame, introduced on March 4, which provides for an investigation of the organization and affairs of the national guard of the State. The resolution carries an appropriation of $5,000.

Although introduced on March 22, no action has been taken relative to the resolution of Senator Bennett which provdided for a committee of seven to investigate the workings of the Workmen's Compensation Law and report to the legislature of 1916. This resolution carried an appropriation of $10,000.

Another of the resolutions introduced by Senator Bennett and presented March 24, which provided for an investigation into the fiscal affairs of the city of New York to ascertain if its officials had exceeded the constitutional debt limit, is still before the Senate finance committee.

On the Assembly side there are diverse resolutions awaiting the dispositions of the members. Aside from resting undisturbed in the committee of ways and means, nothing has ever come of the resolution by Assemblyman Conkling providing for an investigation into the preparedness of the United States for war, witt special reference to the defenses of the port of New York.

The resolution by Assemblyman McKeon calling for an investigation into alleged slanderous attacks upon the Roman Catholic church, is still in the custody of the assembly judiciary committee. The same committee has thus far refused to report the resolution by Assemblyman Fish calling for an investigation into the condition of the unemployed and the causes of the lack of employment.



The resolutions by Assemblyman Evans, to investigate the Civil Service Commission; of Assemblyman Cotter to investigate the telephone rate; of Assemblyman Bloch to investigate the effects of the abolition of capital punishment; of Assemblyman Pratt to investigate the question of highway bridges and that of Assemblyman Graves to investigate the insinuations that sinister influences caused the passage of the amendment to the Workman's Compensation law, still remain undisposed of also.

BRITISH AGREE TO PAY FOR CARGO AND VESSEL

London, April 14.—The Wilhelmina case was settled yesterday by Great Britain agreeing to pay the American owners of the cargo the price they would have received in Hamburg, besides the additional expenses caused by counsel fees and delay. Sir Edawrd Grey, British Foreign Secretary, and Mr. Walter Hines Page, American Ambassador in London, agreed upon a referee to decie the price. The representative of the American owners, W. L. Green & Co., of St. Louis, Mo., expresses complete satisfaction with British fairness in the case.

The Wilhelmina, an American steamship, cleared from New York for Hamburg January 22 with a general eargo of food products. She was taken into custody by the British marine authorities, since when her case has been pending.

Under the agreement reached Great British agrees to pay the price the owners would have realized on the cargo had it gone to Hamburg, and also to compensate the owners for the loss sustained in consequence of the ship being stopped. The government will also pay for delay to the ship so far as this has been caused by the British authorities. A referee to be named by Mr. Walter Hines Page, the American Ambassador, and Sid Edwar Grey, the British Foreign Secretary, will determine the total amount of the payment due to the owners. The transfer of the cargo will take place as soon as this referee has been agreed upon. The owners will unload the cargo and deliver it to the British government. The ship herself will then be free to proceed immediately, as there is no action against her.

PREVENT OAT SMUT

Now is the time to prevent oat smut during the coming year, and the prevention can be brought about by simple and inexpensive means.

The formaldhyde treatment has been thoroughly tested and found effective, according to the experiment station at Cornell, and is the cheapest kind of insurance against the disease. As an example the station points out that a man who planted five acres of oats last year, had one-fourth of it affected by smut, so that his yield was only 150 bushels. Had he treated his seed he would have had an additional 50 bushels, and at 50 cents a bushel this increased yield would have brought him $25. The treatment including material and labor could not cost more than $2, which would have meant a net profit of $23. The farm experts say that it would have paid to treat his seed oats even if it prevented only a 2 per cent loss.

The formaldhyde solution ought to be purchased now, according to the authorities at the experiment station, so that it be ready at hand before the rush of the spring work. It is a colorless pungent liquid, and should have at least 40 per cent strength; it may be obtained at any drug store for 30 cents a pint, or about 1 pound. It sometimes goes under the trade name of formalin. The following directions give the methods of a satisfactory treatment:

1. Spread the oat seed, after cleaning it with a fanning mill, on a clean barn floor to the depth of two or three inches.

2. Sprinkle it with a solution of formaldehyde made by diluting one pint (1 pound) of the commercial 40-per-cent solution with 48 gallons of water (1 ounce to 3 gallons). Sprinkle enough on so that each seed is well wetted. It is necessary to shovel the seed over while sprinkling in order to accommplish this. The 48 galons of the solution will treat 50 to 60 bushels of seed.

3. After sprinkling, shovel the seed into a pile, cover with old canvas or blankets, and leave thus for several hours, or over night if the treatment is made in the afternoon.

4. On removing the covering spread out the seed again in order to dry it enough to permit sowing with a drill. In calculating the amount of seed per acre, allowance should be made for the swollen condition of the grain.

5. The cost of material for this treatment is less than a cent per bushel of seed used; and if one uses his own seed year after year, the treatment need not be made every year. It should be made if smutted fields adjoined last year.

6. The smut of oats is not the same as that found on other plants and will, therefore, not infect them, nor will the smut of other plants infect the oat.

State Lost Three Millions

Last year there was a loss of from 15 to 25 per cent from oat smut in many fields of the state, and in some cases the loss was even greater. It has been computed that this meant a loss of at least three million dollars to the farmers of the state, a loss which could have been easily prevented. Oats rank third in value of all farm crops of New York, being exceeded only by hay and potatoes.

WARDEN'S POLICY KINDNESS.

New Head of Atlanta Prison Outlaws Lash and Dungeon.

Atlanta, Ga.—Prison dungeons and cat-o'-nine-tails treatment will be outlawed by the new warden of the federal prison here, Fred Zerbst, ex-deputy warden of the federal prison at Leavenworth, Kan., who took charge April 1. Mr. Zerbst said that all of the federal prisons had abolished the old time corrective methods and that his policy would be to win over the prisoners through kind treatment.

"The best way to treat these men is to appeal to their manhood and sense of right," he declared. "The whipping post and the 'black hole' are relics of the past. The new plan calls for close confinement as the usual punishment for infraction of rules, and I feel sure this will accomplish more than any other method."

In his trip through the prison Mr. Zerbst kept his eye open for the "dungeon" which Julian Hawthorne and other prisoners described, but he declared after his first tour that he had failed to locate it. Warden Moyer, whose position Mr. Zerbst takes, has maintained all along that there was no such place, and he has challenged his foes to find it.

INVENTS PERISCOPE GUN.

Philadelphia Man Has Newest Offensive and Defensive Weapon.

Philadelphia.—The periscope gun is the newest offensive and defensive weapon brought forth by the modern trench war. Jones Wister of this city has invented a rifle with curved barrel and periscope attached, by the use of which a soldier may remain securely hidden in his trench and yet observe every movement of the enemy and continue firing at will.

The inventor is well known socially and as a sportsman. He is thoroughly acquainted with firearms and ever since the war started has been experimenting with his periscope gun. After many trials he finally bent the portion of a rifle barrel at an angle of 45 degrees and soldered it to the end of an ordinary army rifle. Two toy mirrors are then attached to the gun. The upper mirror is on a level with the curved end of the barrel.

Mr. Wister declares that he can aim perfectly with this contrivance. The process consists in getting a reflection of the object aimed at in the center of the lower mirror, on a level with the marksman's eye. Then, he says, it is almost impossible to miss.

Looked Bad For Papa.

William's uncle was a very tall, fine looking man, while his father was very small. William admired his uncle and wished to grow up like him. One day he said to his mother:

"Mama, how did uncle grow so big and tall?"

His mother said, "Well, when uncle was a small boy he was always a very good boy and tried to do what was right at all times, so God let him grow up big and tall."

William thought this over seriously for a few minutes, then said, "Mama, what kind of a boy was papa?"—Pittsburgh Post.

EXILE RISKS JAIL TO SAVE EYESIGHT

Court Lenient to Government Swindler Who Surrenders.

RETURN AMAZES OFFICIALS.

Fugitive Tells of Days of Agitation and Sleepless Nights He Spent Debating Alternative That Faced Him Either of Going Blind or Meeting Possibility of Prison Sentence.

A fugitive from justice for thirteen years, John F. Ehrgott, once a wealthy commission merchant, returned to New York to consult a specialist who, he believed, could save him from blindness. When Ehrgott gave himself up to the federal authorities he knew that he ran the risk of going to jail, but this possibility was eclipsed by his fear of losing his eyesight.

Roger B. Wood, chief of the criminal division of the United States attorney's office, was sitting at his desk when Ehrgott entered his room. He stared in amazement when the visitor said:

"I want to give myself up and plead guilty."

"I'd dearly love to accommodate you," replied Mr. Wood, "but really you have the bulge on me. I don't even know who you are."

"I'm Ehrgott," was the reply, "and I was indicted in 1902 for customs fraud. Now do you recall?"

Mr. Wood shook his head despairingly. Then he sent upstairs for Captain Ball, head of the federal indictment bureau, who has grown not only gray, but white in the federal service. Captain Ball remembered having drawn up the indictment charging Ehrgott with defrauding the government of at least $25,000 in duties on carloads of Canadian beans brought into this country free of duty because ostensibly bound for transshipment to Cuba.

Gets Off With Fine.

Assured of the identity, Mr. Wood summoned the latter's attorney, Abel I. Smith, and took the defendant before Judge Charles M. Hough in the United States district court, where Ehrgott entered a plea of guilty. Mr. Wood wanted the judge to give Ehrgott a substantial prison sentence, but the court was moved by Attorney Smith's statement that his client was suffering with diabetes and a severe affliction of the eyes. A fine of $1,000 was imposed on Ehrgott, and he was also served with a summons in a civil suit by which the government hopes to recover the full amount of the duties out of which it was defrauded.

Ehrgott's shipping scheme was exceptional in that it not only defrauded the government, but the consignee of the shipment as well. He was then senior partner of the firm of Ehrgott & Newman, commission merchants. Canadian beans ordered by this firm for shipment to Cuba were placed in a bonded warehouse in New York, where, through the connivance of certain government officials, it is said, a cheaper brand of American beans was substituted and sent on to Cuba as Canadian beans.

Swindled at Both Ends.

The Cuban consignees therefore had to pay a high rate of duty on American beans which they had bought at Canadian prices. In the meantime the firm of Ehrgott & Newman had acquired a consignment of expensive Canadian beans free of duty and for the price of American beans. This practice was continued by the firm for several years.

Arraigned on the indictment in 1902, Ehrgott gave cash bail of $15,000 and then forfeited it by fleeing to Nova Scotia. At Yarmouth he set himself up in the fish business and prospered. A few years ago he became afflicted with his eye trouble. He consulted Canadian and European specialists, but could get no relief. Then he was told that a specialist in New York could cure him.

Ehrgott told Mr. Wood of the days of agitation and the sleepless nights he spent debating the alternative that faced him—either of going blind or returning to face the possibility of a prison sentence. He finally decided to throw himself on the mercy of the court.

WORDS IN THE MAKING.

Language can be made in the library, no doubt, and in the laboratory also, but it is most often and most effectively created in the workshop and in the market place, where the imaginative energy of our race expresses itself spontaneously in swift creating the lacking term in response to the unexpected demand. Nothing could be better, each in its own day, than picturesque vocables like scare head and loan shark, windjammer and hen minded, all of them American contributions to the English language and all of them examples of the purest English. Hen minded is an adjective devised by Mr. Howells to describe those women who are so common in all walks of life and who are made up of only one aim at a time and of manifold anxieties at all times. Scare head and loan shark are the products of the newspaper office, while windjammer was put together by some down east sailor man, inheritor of the word forming gift of his island ancestors who helped to harry the armada. "Windjammer," remarked Professor Gildersleeve, trained by his intimate knowledge of Greek to appreciate verbal vigor as well as verbal delicacy—"windjammer is a fine word, I grant, and so is every Anglo-Saxon compound that grows and is not made."

But all new words are not of necessity good words. Ben Jonson, who was himself a frequent maker of new words, displayed his shrewdness when he declared that "custom is the most certain mistress of language as the publicke stampe makes the current money," adding as a caution, "But wee must not be too frequent with the mint, every day coyning."—Brander Matthews in Harper's Magazine.

RUSSIA'S MIGHTY RIVER.

The Sluggish Volga Is Three Times as Long as the Rhine.

In Russia the rivers are large and sluggish, owing to their great length and slight fall. The Volga is the longest river in Europe. It is 2,300 miles in length—that is, three times as long as the Rhine—yet its total fall is only a little over 800 feet.

The Russian fondly speaks and sings of it as "Matushka Volga," or "Little Mother Volga," in gratitude, no doubt, for the bounteous supply of fish, caviar and game, as well as comforts and pleasures afforded by this historic stream, which plays so important a part in the economic life of the nation.

The products of Asia and Europe are carried on its waters; the two thousand odd river steamers are always busy, and the huge rafts, consisting often of thousands of logs, being floated or pulled down the stream, represent a small portion of the riches of Russia's inexhaustible forest lands.—New York Telegram.

Where Women Swim Best.

"The Korean women are the best swimmers in the world," said a life guard. "The Korean pearl diving is in their hands. They swim—they don't boat—they swim out to the pearl fisheries of Quelpart, lugging baskets with them. After this swim of half an hour they dive down fifty feet and fetch up queer one shelled pearl oysters as big as babies. They dive till their baskets are full—the baskets are corked to keep them afloat—and after three or four hours' work they swim back home with their catch. The big one shelled oysters are valuable as pearl mines and as food too. A half dozen Koreans will sit down to an oyster as gayly as you or I sit down to a broiled lobster."

A MILLION LOST ON EASTER FLOWERS

Big Snowstorm Plays Havoc With Floral Display.

KILLS ONE $40,000 SHOW.

Dealers Already Faced Poor Day, as on Account of War Orders the Decorations Even in Churches Were Smaller Than Usual, but Unexpected Blizzard Brought Ruin to Blooms.

More than $1,000,000 was lost by florists in New York city alone as a result of the snowstorm on Easter eve, it was estimated. The flower show in Union square, which usually brings in about $40,000, had to be abandoned.

One well known florist, a man who for more than forty Easters has handled flowers, believes New York's normal flower trade at Easter amounts to no less than $3,000,000, and he thought the blizzard had cut it down 25 or 30 per cent. The small dealers, those who invested in flowers they did not grow, were the greatest sufferers. One of these put in $10,000 worth and was able to sell less than a half of the quantity.

The loss was further increased by a very considerable decrease in orders for Easter floral decorations at the hotels and large private houses. This was the result of the war. Even in the churches the display of flowers was far less elaborate than usual.

Struck Trade Like Bomb.

One of the largest Fifth avenue florists said,

"It was as if a bomb or a siege gun had been fired through buildings and brought ruin. Of course, it appears now, the war and hard times helped. But I attribute a large part of it to the storm. It was the most peculiar Easter I have known in the business.

"I hear that wholesalers were hard hit. A great many people attached to churches, not having time to place flowers upon memorials, sent checks to sextons and ministers of churches, and altar committees attended to memorials. This year many people accustomed to send $100 sent $25, and others usually sending $25 sent $5. Some churches, which often have $500 to spend in this way, this year had $150."

Inquiry at other Fifth and Madison avenue flower shops brought out that customers able to pay from $25 to $100 for flowers and unable to get them on Saturday bought them on Sunday, so the loss fell heavily on these dealers. In England it is the custom to take out insurance policies on flowers, but it has never been adopted here.

Dark Orchid Is Favorite.

In the churches, in the corsages of women, the dark mauve orchid was the flower most in favor.

A florist speaking of fashions in flowers said:

"For some years the violet was the favorite. Dealers thought the fashion would be permanent and they put up scores of houses for the growing of violets for the Easter trade. This made violets common, and any one could afford to wear them.

"As a result, for the last two or three years, the orchid has commanded the high class trade for Easter, with the dark ones in first place. Why? Because dark ones are like white deer or red foxes—very rare. The price we are compelled to charge for dark orchids? Well, for an adequate corsage $15 to $25. But remember, if orchids are dark hardly more than three need be put in the $25 corsage bouquet. That number is enough."

Pocantico Team Also Gets Help on Diamond and Grand Stand.

John D. Rockefeller has given the use of three acres of his land at Pocantico Hills to the Pocantico Hills A. C. for a baseball park and will lend men and teams to help put the diamond into shape and build a grand stand.

Manager Kerrigan of the Pocantico Hills team expects to have a speedy bunch of youngsters in uniform this summer and hopes that Mr. Rockefeller may become one of the club's ardent rooters. Mr. Rockefeller has long shown interest in athletics, and his liking for baseball has increased since seeing some exhibition games at Daytona, Fla., in which the Brooklyn Dodgers took part.

Countess Tolstoy also consents to the Petrograd Academy of Science taking photographic fac-similes of all the manuscripts and publishing, without fee or royalty, a complete edition of Tolstoy's works.

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES

"A Herald of Progress"

Volume 1, No. 100 | Established, Dec. 17, 1914. | THURSDAY, APRIL 15, 1915 | Price One Cent.

"Inquirer" Would Have Mayor Fox Tell in Print Why He Advised An Increase Upon His Property at Third and Cayuga Streets of Only 8 Per Cent and In a Restricted Section as Much as 25 Per Cent.

The Evening Times' Correspondent Accuses the Official of Trying to Stultify the Members of the Board of Assessors, and at the Same Time the Writer Calls Upon the Mayor to Resign.

Editor Evening Times:

The taxpayers are patiently listening to hear the Mayor and his City Attorney tell them why they attempted to interfere with the oBard of Assessors in the performance of their sworn duty this Spring, in making up the coming assessment roll.

Is it true Mr. Mayor, that you and your Attorney "cooked up" a list of properties bounded by Oneida, Third, Cayuga and First sts., and insisted that the assessors raise them 25 per cent.?

Is it true that these same assessors assessed these same properties last year at their full and fair value and signed an affidavit to that effect at the end of the assessment book?

What right had you to attempt to swerve them from their judgment and duty and ask them to stultify themselves?

Why did you "suggest" to them that you would consent to a raise of $200 on your own property (less than 8 per cent.) but other property must be raised 25 per cent.?

Do you claim property has advanced 25 per cent. in value on three or four blocks within twelve months past? If so, what caused the increase? And why did your property increase only 8 per cent. after spending the taxpayers' money to beautify your corner last year to the mount of thousands of dollars?

How do you square your actions with official honesty and your duty to the taxpayers?

You, so far, have maintained discreet silence in answering these pertinent inquiries. Your City Attorney came out with an apology to the public yesterday in this paper and condescended to say he was a public servant. That "'weakly" paper, published once-in-awhile, also appeared again yesterday with a shriek and a groan, about "Inquirer" and "anonymous non de plume" whatever that may mean. If that article in this "weakly" is the best you can do, Mr. Mayor, in furnishing your constituents answers to these public questions, then why not resign and permit some competent person to represent this city who realizes that public office is a public trust and not a private snap?

When Assessor Hulett realized that you and your attorney had plotted to jump certain properties 25 per cent., arbitrarily, and use him as your "tool", he promptly resigned and saved his reputation. Merriam told Hulett he would also resign, but he didn't. What changed Merriam's mind? We all know why Brennan didn't resign and why he never resigns.

What inducement did you, Mr. Mayor, hold out to Merriam to stay on the Board? Was it the same as you extended to Hulett?

Why did Brennan and Merriam immediately begin to "jump" certain selected assessments arbitrarily on two or three blocks twenty-five per cent., after these secret conferences at your office? Do you dare deny this?

I challenge you to come out and disclose to your constitu ents all that occurred at these secret conferences at your office between you, your attorney and these assessors.

I challenge you to justify such practice on your part toward the taxpayers of this city.

BERLIN GOVERNMENT SPLIT OVER POLICY OF UNDERSEA WARFARE

London, Thursday.—G. F. Steward telegraphs to the Daily News from Rotterdam:—

"From a highly dependable informant, who has been closely associated with German diplomatic circles, I learn the policy of submarine piracy against mercantile shipping has caused and still is causing serious trouble in the German government, which is almost equally divided regarding the value of the policy.

"When it was first proposed the policy produced a pronounced split in the government. The idea originated with Admiral von Tirpitz, but it was strongly opposed by the Imperial Chancellor, Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, who adopted the view that such a policy would produce an extremely bad effect in neutral countries. Ultimately the Kaiser's assent went to the high seas party and the warfare was begun.

"The Chancellor's view was that the trival successes gained would not be commensurate with the detrimental effect in neutral countries. Admiral von Tirpitz urged that something must be done to show the German people that Germany still possessed a sea power.

"After a prolonged debate the Emperor supported Admiral von Tirpitz. But the Chancellor's view still has strong support. The real disappointment of the German people with the submarine campaign is due to the fact that no troop ships have been sunk."

BULGARIA GATHERS HER TROOPS ON THE FRONTIER

Athens, Thursday.—Bulgaria is despatching an important body of cavalry to Strumnitza. She is also concentrating troops on the Turkish frontiers.

I have information, received from a reliable source, of the formation of two new Bulgarian bands of considerable strength, which are intended to be employed in operations in Serbia.

The Times Mytilene correspondent telegraphs:—

"Heavy rains are falling in the Eastern Aegean. There is no doubt they are preventing operations in the straits. Mr. Venizelos is epected to arrive here in a day or two on a political tour through the islands."

FRENCH AND GERMAN AIRMEN AGAIN ACTIVE

On the Belgian frontier, Thursday.—The Zeppelin which, according to reports from the German lines, was damaged by the fire of the Allies' anti-aircraft guns near the French frontier on [illegible] night, managed to reach Thielt, where it became unmanageable and descended in some trees and was wrecked.

The enemy have begun a fresh attack on the Belgian positions on the Yser below Dixmude after a three days' lull which they utilized to bring up troops.

The tale of an exciting chase in the air and a battle at an altitude of more than eight thousand feet between a French aeroplane and a German albatross machine, in which the French aviator was victorious, was related here today by Lieutenant Chambre, the observer on the French machine.

The pursuit began at Rh[illegible]ns, according to Lieutenant Chambre, and lasted until the aircraf[illegible] halons, an approximate distance of twenty-five miles. Th[illegible]ed more than one hundred quick firer cartridges without [illegible]ing further damage than to pierce the wings of the French machine. The eleventh shot fired by the French aviators caused the German aeroplane to fall, and on reaching the ground it caught fire. The German officers escaped injury and were taken prisoner.

There was another Zeppelin raid on the northeast coast last night. Several bombs were dropped, but there is no information of loss of life. The first news to reach London was to the effect that a Zeppelin dropped eight bombs on Blyth, on the coast of Northumberland, eight miles north of the Tyne. It was added that they fell on the outskirts of the town. This was about eight o'clock. Bombs also were dropped at Choppington, Bedlington and on the railway at Wallsend.

Apparently there was more than one airship, and, as they were seen moving south warning at once was given to toher towns and the "Lights out!" order was flashed everywhere. This order was put into force as far south as Sheffield and Doncaster.

ENGLAND MAY NOT PROHIBIT SALE OF BEER AND ALE

London, Thursday.—Parliament reassembled yesterday, with a fair attendance. The first hour was devoted principally to questions concerning the war.

Mr. Lewis Harcourt, Secretary of State for the Colonies, promied that the dominions would be consulted fully in regard to the terms of peace.

Mr. Harold J. Tennant, Parliamentary Under Secretary of War, made the announcement that there had been 1,546 promotions to commissions from the ranks since the beginning of the war. He also gave what was regarded as a possible clue to the intentions of the government concerning the drink question. He said that beer was the only intoxicant now permitted in the canteens and that it was not the intention of the authorities to prohibit its sale.

Mr. Asquith, the Premier, announced that the House would sit only for three days' work. He also stated, in reply to a suggestion that the members ought to follow the lead of King George and abstain from alcohol; that the suppression of alcoholic liquors at the palace of Westminster was a matter for the House and not the government to decide.

Announcing in the House of Commons that the British Foreign Office had requested the American Ambassador in London, Mr. Walter H. Page, to telegraph to the American Ambassador in Berlin, Mr. aJmes W. Gerard, to find out what truth there was in the reported German reprisals, Mr. Neil Primrose, Parliamentary Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, added:—

"If this report be true, we can noly hope that these prisoners are being treated as well as are the crews in this country captured in submarines.

The government has announced its decision to make no further purchases of wheat for the reason that representations have been made by the corn trade that such action prevents the resumption of normal trading.

The British government has decided against placing cotton on the contraband list. A question was asked in the House of Commons on this subject, and Mr. Neil Primrose, Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, on behalf of the [illegible]n Office, replied that after careful consideration it had been [illegible]at the military advantages to be gained by declaring cotton contraband were insufficient to render such a step expedient.

An Order in Council [illegible] been issued commandeering all the refrigerating ships engaged [illegible] trade between the ports within the United Kingdom and Australia.

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

THE PESSIMIST.

IT gets my nanny when I meet a pessimist upon the street, who swings his tongue in plaintive bleat—that's why I write this poem. He walks along in deep distress, and ever flashes "S O S"; he's dead sore on the world, I guess—there's cobwebs in his dome. He's foreign to the sunny smile and thinks that life is not worth while; he's like a cross grained, grating file—with soul devoid of song. He chills the joyy atmosphere; he puts the jody sign on cheer and wears an everlasting leer upon his visage long. He sees no beauty in the flower; he knocks and grumbles by the hour, his countenance is ever sour—a mirthless soul is he. Say, on the level, do you know? I'd like to slam the cuss a blow and jar him hard from knob to toe—I sure would, bully gee! Why should a man of knowing years go round and peddle gloom and tears and add a chapter to our fears, when ev'rything's O. K.? Why should we tolerate the guy who never has an optic dry and does his best to paint the sky a dark and gloomy gray? We ought to send him to some isle and teach him how to laugh and smile and make his joyless life worth while, or chase him off the earth. Our lifetime is so gol darn short we haven't time to howl and snort—we've got to delve in healthy sport and happiness and mirth. I'd like to get my freckled fists tattooing on the pessimists and knock 'em on the smiling lists—and knock 'em there to stay. The man who doesn't smile, by heck! is like a boil upon your neck, as worthless as a phony check—away with him, away!

Golf in the Old Days.

Centuries back golf was a pastime of the royal family, though then usually played in Scotland. The Stuart family was very fond of the game, and the first English club was established at Blackheath in 1608 by James I. His eldest son, Henry, frequently played and on one occasion nearly struck by accident his tutor with a club, whereupon he coolly remarked, "Had I done so I had but paid my debts." Charles I. was playing golf when he received the news of the Irish rebellion. James, duke of York, afterward James II., was another ardent player. Golf is frequently mentioned in ancient Scottish records and in the fifteenth century was prohibited because it interfered with the practice of archery. Strutt considered it the most ancient game at ball requiring a bat.—London Standard.

Puss and the Weather.

The cat is an excellent barometer. When you see a cat wetting its paw in its mouth and then rubbing it energetically over the upper part of its ear you may feel pretty certain that rain is coming. This action is pussy's method of relieving the uncomfortable feeling in its ears caused by the change in the atmospheric pressure which precedes a storm. If the unpleasant feeling in the ear were due to a foreign substance then the cat would scratch the ear with its hind foot. But when pussy scrubs its ear with its saliva moistened paw it is when rain is impending.

He Knew Mrs. Meek.

Mrs. Gotham—I met Mr. Meek and his wife on the street today.

Mr. Gotham—Oh, did you? Meek is clever, isn't he?

"Clever! Why, he never opened his mouth!"

"That's why he's clever."—Yonkers Statesman.

Economy.

Mrs. Homespun—What'll we contribute to the minister's donation party?

Farmer Homespun—Waal, I dunno, Hiramer. Taters is way up, pork is way up, fowl is way up. We'll save money by giving him money.—St. Paul Dispatch.

Unsettled.

"I hear that they belong to the early settlers."

"Well, you wouldn't think so if you could see the bill collectors climbing their front steps."—Judge.

An Empty Dream.

Bobby—Say, sis, what's a "empty dream?" Dotty—One you have when you've been sent to bed without any supper.—Cleveland Leader.

THE SEALER HAS DONE WELL

County Sealer of Weights and Measures Frank French is to be commended for his activity and hard work to interest the Oswego county representative in the Assembly, Thaddeus C. Sweet, to defeat the bills aiming to abolish the State Department of Weights and Measures and create in its stead in the Department of Agriculture a bureau having charge of the work of the present Weights and Measures Department. The bill has passed the Senate and a hearing before the Assembly was held Monday night.

Mr. French says that the work of the department is highly important and if subordinated to another department will not be conducted with the success that has in the past marked the work. It has been of the utmost benefit to every consumer in the State and many thousands of dollars has been saved the taxpayers against false weights and measures and dishonest dealers and peddlers.

Advices have been received from Speaker Sweet that the bills cannot pass the Assembly. In the event that they should it is unlikely that Governor Whitman will affix his signature to measures that will deprive the people of the State of the important piece of protection that has served them so well.

MR. FANNING'S PRIVILEGE

According to the views of City Attorney George M. Fanning, this newspaper is a catspaw for the author or authors of letters which have appeared in The Evening Times. Now in this Mr. Fanning is in error. The Times is a public institution—a servant of the people; therefore it has no civil right to expurge from its columns the opinions of any citizen who chooses to set himself up as a critic of one of the city's officials. It is claimed by many of the city's citizens that Mr. Fanning has laid himself open to criticism. He was asked to explain his position, yet he remained silent. He has been accorded the same opportunity as "Inquirer" and "Taxpayer" who asked of him information concerning public business, but up until yesterday he declined "to appear in print."

Mr. Fanning is accorded the same privilege as Mr. "Inquirer" and Mr. "Taxpayer."

The Evening Times does not hold executive sessions; it is open and above board in its dealings; it asks for no special favors, and it is up to Mr. Fanning to accept the same courtesy that is extended to other persons.

Governor Whitman and Public Opinion

Shrewd lawyers often cause important witnesses at trials in court to blurt out statements of fact that are not admissible as evidence. The lawyer knows that the evidence will not be admitted and that it will be stricken from the record, but he also knows that what has got into the minds of the jury can not be controlled by the judge. Inadmissible statements may be eradicated from the court records but not from memory, the record of the mind.

Something like this happened during the Public Service Commissioners hearing at Albany recently when Commissioner Williams of the Public Service Commission of the 1st District charged the Governor with having instructed political followers to discredit him to the end that he be removed from office. The action was dramatic. The Governor rose in his anger and demanded abject apologies which were given under the threat of instant removal from office. But the apologies that the Governor forced from the sick man did not wipe out the moral effect of the charges that were made. Mr. Williams got his statement before the jury of public opinion. It was not admissible. He was forced to retract, but when you are playing with words you can not call them back after they have been given wing. He gave the jury of public opinion something to think about, and Albany dispatches carry intimations that recall Commissioner Williams' intemperate utterances.

The Thompson investigation committee is going to recommend a Public Service Board of seven members instead of two public service boards.

In other words, someone may suspect that the Governor is going to "give 'em the other barrel." The investigation into the conduct of the two Public Service Commissions has not produced the charges of inefficiency on which all the members might be removed. As far as the Up-State Commission goes it has produced nothing at all. Well—no matter! The boards are to be supplanted by a new board so these commissioners will be automatically removed.

This investigation is unfortunate for business and unfortunate for the Governor. Business which depends for its success upon the willingness of capital to invest in new enterprises or the enlargement of existing enterprises is not helped by strife for the possession of the power that controls it.

And it is unfortunate for the Governor because the admirable record which he has made as district attorney of New York, the promptitude with which the people rewarded him for his work in New York city, suggested to many that two years, or four years, in Albany might reveal Mr. Whitman as a Presidential possibility. These sanguine expectations of the great mass of men, who, voting as they see fit, are always the men who hold the balance of power in any election, may yet be realized; but Governor Whitman should keep in mind that places for new men may be a detriment to gaining a higher office in public service, rather than a help.

Governor Whitman is himself constantly before the jury of public opinion, and it is a most critical and exacting jury.—Utica Press.

Opinions

The Wall Street Boom

Wall Street operates on futures, not on post-mortems, and seldom on present conditions. That is why Wall Street is so interesting. It is not to be supposed that all of a sudden there are buyers for a million shares a doy, say for $100,000,000, more or less, without some reason. The problem is much the same whether the buying is by large operators or small. It is a problem in the psychology of the crowd rather than in the financial signs of the times. Why does big business or little business suddenly turn from its mood of depression to one of joys? If the reason were known it might be possible to have an opinion about it, but since the reason is not known there is all the odded charm of mystery. Does somebody know of goo news.

It can hardly be news of peace, for the boom is in the "war stocks," the railway equipment companies, for example, which are diverting their activities to supply munitions, while the equipment idle is near a maximum. Perhaps the excellent crop prospect is an explanation. Or it may be that the reaction in politics is interpreted happily. It matters not what the reason may be, if Wall Street is fulfilling its function of discounting the future its present mood cannot go too far to please those who are more interested in the results than in the process. Everybody wants good times, and Wall Street's sign that it expects better things is welcome.

Perhaps a word of caution may do no harm. The public is said to be in the market. In that case it may be expected that the public will take all the credit to itself, along with its profits, and will find no fault with Wall Street. Wall Street is always thought to be "good" when prices are rising. It is only when prices are falling that there is a demand to punish the bears, abolish the future market, and reform finance generally. That is something best done by every man for himself. Nobody can bet hurt by the rise in the market if he has not sold unwisely, and few can be hurt by the fall in the market unless they have bought unwisely. It is not worth while to offer advise to those who know what Wall Street is thinking Those who are buying or selling without knowing why ought to be good sports and not complain if loss comes. There is no law to compel anybody to meddle with Wall Street. There are savings banks and mortgages, and city, State, and national loans in great variety and at wonderfully attractive rates. To put idle money into them is to do something to produce prosperity and to cause a true boom.—New York Times.

Hinman is Right

If politics is limited to the activity of partisans, a great many men who practice all the arts which go with politics may escape the term politican. If a man who influences legislation, keeps himself and his particular friends in office and performs public service with no direct responsibility to the state, is not a politician, one must revert to the limitation of partisanship to meet the definition. The money which these nonpartisans obtain from the public and the power they wield makes mere politicians look like amateurs.

Leader Hinman of the assembly has a bill to reorganize a state commission. He is a legislator of this state and is within his rights in advocating a measure he believes to be right. That measure is no more political than though it originated with high-brow officeholders who go between party lines, always condemning the party which has gone out and catering to the party in power. Mr. Hinman is charged with introducing politics into the business of the state. The same charge can be made against all legislation if the introducer being a partisan makes it political. But what of legislation in the interest of men who are with every party in power, legislation which cares for their salaries, which gives them power, does that become non-political? Speaking to the point Mr. Hinman said:

"It is well known that at the last election the health department was used for political purposes. Its publications contained partisan appeals, letters were issued to the medical profession asking support for Governor Glynn. The funds of the department were used in contravention of the spirit if not the letter of the law. Such a spectacle was never before seen in this state—the dragging in the mire of politics of a great humanitarian department of the state government."

There is politics in the department, there was partisanship last fall. Mr. Hinman's bill will separate from the payroll and authority those who fought the Republicans and now deplore politics.—Watertown Standard.

Value of Strong Navy

In a recent statement by Harold Tennant, British Parliamentary Under Secretary, the implication would seem to be that the volunteer army, in the cases of Great Britain and the United States, is a sufficient safeguard. Mr. Tennant dwells on the celerity with which material offering itself to Lord Kitchener's drillmasters has been whipped into fighting trim, on the proven value of the territorials and the great promise of the so-called Kitchener army. He ascribes this success to the high average of intelligence which the rank and file of a volunteer force represents "The new armies are a cross ssection of the population," he remarks. "They contain the best men from every stratum, from the laborer to those who used to be called the idle rich. All these men have gone in voluntarily. And because of that, because from each layer of the population we have got educated men and men who have enlisted because they are enthusiastic for the vindication of our cause, these armies have been trained much more rapidly than would otherwise have been possible."

But even if the high grade of material attracted by volunteer service is granted, the element of time still remains the all-important factor in the success of the system. In the present war the British volunteers to all intents and purposes have been drilling behind the French lines, shielded by conscripts while they trained. Had those conscripts failed them, they would still have had the British navy to interpose between them and annihilation while they learned their duties and waited for theeir equipment. Just how dependable a dike against the inpouring of a continental flood of conscripts this would have proved is by no means certain. It is conceivable that with the coast of France, as well as of Belgium, to operate from, the Germans might have found means of rushing sufficient troops across the channel to put the United Kingdom at their mercy.

For the United States the military lesson of this war seems clearly defined. It is that without a navy competent not only to hold off an invading force while a volunteer army was being trained and organized, but to keep open the lanes of commerce for the importation of arms and ammunition needed in its equipment, this country ould be almost completely defenceless. Whether we have such a navy is a moot question. If not, then we should either strengthen it to the requisite degree or prepare our army beforehand. The inherent intelligence of our volunteers could not save us.—Utica Herald.

BAREFOOT BOY

By I. E. Hyde

Blessings on thee, little man,
Bare-foot boy with freckled nose;
Playing tricks as boyhood can,
Swamping mother o'er with woes.

Little boy, you are so cute,
Whistling all the new born airs;
Surely, it is Gabriel's flute,
Coasting down the front hall stairs.

Your red lips are redder still,
Kissed by jam from off the shelf.
Oh, you darling, mankin pill,
You know how to help yourself.

Barefoot boy, besmeared with mud,
Chasing home at dinner time.
Toss your bat and ball ku-thud,
Oh, we like your youthful chime.

"Darling"—fill the wood-box up,
Mother has to mend your socks.
Please don't tease the baby's pup."
—Mother finds an empty box.

"Sister's beau is very shy.
Says, he does not care for boys;
Says, he hopes that by-and-by,
We won't make such devilish noise.

Brother is a great big stiff,
Since he's grown an eye-brow lip.
Says that I'm not worth a piff;
Swears I am a modern rip.

"Sam, come here;" my father says.
"For heaven sake! what are you at?"
"Boy, you've got to change your ways."
(Guess my dad's alright at that.)

Auntie says—"Now Sam, be good;
Try to be a better boy."
And then I think—oh, if I could—
But, granddad's calling—"Ship Ahoy."

Granddad was a boy once, too;
Says, that he is young again.
Gee! he's full of fun clear through;
Says, these snobs give him a pain.

Gramp and I go for a row;
Then we take a dive or two;
Then we see a picture show;
Taste of everything that's new.

Granddad ain't afraid of germs.
Bet your boots, he is a sport.
Helps me dig my fishin' worms;
Helps me build a dinkey fort.

Granddad says, "Sam, you're alright
Barefoot boy, with shirt turned in;
And if e'er you're called to fight,
Show them that you're not of tin."

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Ivy Wingo, Cincinnati Reds' New Backstop.

Discussing the backstop men in the big baseball leagues, a student of the game says that Ivy Wingo, who played with the St. Louis Nationals last year, should have a good season with the Cincinnati Reds. Wingo was second string catcher to Snyder of St. Louis last year, but now that he is with the Reds as first catcher he should shine. Wingo is one of the best in the older organization, but was unfortunate to be on the same team with the best catcher in the National league. With plenty of work behind the bat Wingo should be up to his best form.

New Jumping Star.

The performances of William H. Tayler of the Illinois Athletic club as a practically unknown athlete who established two National Amateur Athletic union records in the indoor meet recently held in Madison Square Garden, New York city, and defeated Veteran Platt Adams in both contests have been pronounced phenomenal by coaches and close followers of amateur athletics. In the standing high jump the Illinois star cleared the bar at five feet four inches, beating the former mark by two inches, but one and one-quarter inches lower than the world's record held by R. C. Ewry. Taylor followed by leaping eleven feet two inches in the standing long jump without weights. This record beats the former mark by half an inch. Ewry holds the world's record at eleven feet four and seven-eighths inches.

Maisel Fast on Bases.

From first to second or from second to third Fritz Maisel of the Yankees is the fastest man in baseball, a full step faster than Cobb or Lobert or Milan, says a writer in the Chicago Tribune.

"Which is the hardest to steal, second or third?" he was asked. "Third," was his reply. "It's just a matter of walking down and stopping at second base."

Asked what percentage of steals he was able to put over—that is, the number of times he was able to arrive safely out of a certain number of starts—Maisel said, "The only time I kept track was through two weeks when I started sixteen times and stole fourteen bases, which is fair enough."

Condition Counts With Cueists.

Willie Hoppe, the world's greatest billiard player, says it is just as necessary for a billiard player to keep in condition as it is for a boxer to be in shape for a hard bout. Hoppe claims that if one's physical condition is good ones' nerves are bound to be steady. It is clean living that makes the star more certainly than in any other branch of sport, and in this respect Hoppe holds to a rigid discipline. Every day he takes a long walk, and this, in connection with the fact that he has never in his life touched any kind of intoxicating drink and never smoked, keeps him in the best of condition at all times.

Big Motor Race Scheduled.

A road race for a prize of $50,000, the largest purse ever offered for an event of its kind, will be run over the Vanderbilt and Grand Prize courses at San Francisco in October of this year by the racing committee of the Panama-Pacific exposition. The race will be called the Grand American sweepstakes and will be open to the drivers and cars of the world. No piston displacement rules will be established and, if the present plans as announced by William L. Hughson, chariman of the racing committee, are carried out, much the same regulations that prevail in grand prize events will hold.

Horseshoe to Adorn Yacht.

George A. Ketchum, former owner of the world's famous trotting stallion Cresceus, is an enthusiastic yachtsman and has recently built a power boat cruiser named Cresceus. An interesting relic will adorn the cabin of the Ketchum yacht. This is a shoe worn by Cresceus when he broke the world's trotting record on Aug. 2, 1901, by traveling the Columbus track in 2:02¼. The shoe has been gold plated and suitably inscribed.

BLUNDERING REPORTERS.

Mistakes That Mangled the Speakers' Words and Feelings.

"Drunkenness is folly!" earnestly exclaimed Bishop Magee in the house of lords on a celebrated occasion. How horrified was the prelate to read in the papers next morning that he had given utterance to the very bacchanalian sentiment, "Drunkenness is jolly!"

Lord Salisbury was a master phrasemaker, but one of his best points was spoiled when a careless reporter turned his reference to "manacles and Manitoba" into the meaningless "manacles and men at the bar."

Sir William Harcourt was badly misquoted once. "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" he exclaimed upon the platform, but one paper had it: "Great Dinah! What a farce is this!"

Lack of knowledge of familiar quotations is a prolific source of misreporting. For instance, a speaker once made use of the well known lines from Milton's "L'Allegro:"

But come, thou goddess, fair and free,
In heaven yclept Euphrosyne.

The brilliant reporter deputed to "take him down" was in despair. He could not make head or tail of this mysterious utterance. But, following the sound as far as possible, he seized his pen and produced the following gem:

But come, thou goddess, fair and free,
Is heaven she crept and froze her knee.

Out of Line.

An enlisted man at the post at Fort Leavenworth was ordered to the range for the first time for target drill. Out of twenty-one chances the newcomer made never a hit.

"Oh, you dub!" exclaimed an officer standing near. "You've missed the target every time! What's the matter?"

"Well, sir," answered the recruit nonchalantly, "the only reason I can think of at present is that the person who set up my target hasn't placed it in a straight line from here."

WHAT IS ELECTRICITY?

It Seems to Be an Effect Produced by Energy on Matter.

It is a curious fact that although evidence of electricity in a primitive way was observed as long ago as the sixth century B. C. and its manifestation has become one of the greatest factors in our modern civilization, no one knows just what it is.

At different times it has been thought to be a form of matter, a thin, weightless fluid, a kind of force, a variety of motion and a disturbance in the ether—which is supposed to fill all space, including pores in most solid metals. Electricity is not something created by man. He has simply discovered ways of turning its manifestations to practical account.

From the time that Thales observed, centuries before the Christian era, that amber, after being rubbed by silk, had the property of attracting light bodies like bits of paper, discoveries of electric phenomena were made from time to time, but they were detached from a realization of the great possibilities brought to light in recent years.

Electricity becomes evident when rendered active by some molecular disturbance, such as friction, rupture or chemical action. Scientists today regard it as neither energy nor matter, but, like heat, light and sound, it is an effect produced by energy on matter.

It has been discovered that electricity is a self existent property, by which we are everywhere surrounded, and human as well as inanimate bodies can be charged with it. From this we can understand that many more remarkable discoveries of its application will be made.—Rocky Mountain News.

HANGED BY A GHOST.

Curious Story of a Murder and the Discovery of the Crime.

An old volume of the Quarterly Review mentions a crime discovered in a most extraordinary way in Australia in the year 1830, of which a public record is preserved and which figures with full details in the journals of that period.

The confidential steward of a wealthy settler near Sydney stated that his master had suddenly been called to England on important business and that during his absence the whole of his immense property would be in his exclusive care.

Some weeks after an acquaintance of the absentee settler riding through his grounds was astonished to perceive him sitting upon a stile. He strode forward to speak when the figure turned from him, with a look of intense sorrow, and walked to the edge of a pond, where it mysteriously disappeared.

On the morrow he brought a number of men to the water to drag it, and the body of the man supposed to be on his way to England was brought up. The steward was arrested, brought to trial and, frightened at the story of his master's ghost, confessed the crime, stating that he did the murder at the very stile on which his master's ghost had appeared. He was duly executed.—Time and Comment.

Striking a Match in Wind.

Kephart in his book on "Camping and Woodcraft" says: "When there is nothing to strike it on jerk the head of the match forward through the teeth, or face the wind. Cup your hands back toward the wind, remove the right hand just long enough to strike the match on something very close by, then instantly resume former position. The flame of the match will run up the stick instead of blowing away from it.

"Change Seats."

As many seats as players save one. He who has no seat stands in the center, repeating the words, "Change seats," "change seats." All are on the alert to observe when he adds, "The king's come," when all change seats, and he must try to get one. If he should say, "The king has not come," the seats must be kept.

TENNIS AND ITS MANY DEVOTEES

Today the Game Ranks in Popularity With the Best in Sports

New York, April 15.—Tennis is the only sport that has come to the fore without thousands of columns of newspaper publicity. And in the past five years tennis has increased in popularity to such an extent that there are millions of devotees where there were only thousands before.

Other games, like baseball, football, pugilism and golf, have interested the public and been taken up by it because publicity has influenced them. But with tennis it has been different. There isn't a sporting page in the country that has averaged one-tenth as much tennis news as has baseball, pugilism, golf or football.

Tennis has won its several million enthusiasts because of the merits of the game alone. It is not a weakling game, but a game for red-blooded men and women—a real game in every sense of its athletic usage.

A successful player must be fast of foot, and faster in brain. He must have a steady eye and a steady arm. Tennis doesn't require brute strength, but it does require well-balanced muscles, nerve, coolness and skill. A good tennis player must hit hard and hit softly, as the occasion demands. And there is not much chance for him to figure out how he is going to hit. His decision and the action must follow each other within a fraction of a second or he loses a point in the game.

Many sports have been pointed highly as health builders, but none is better than tennis. The net game is an ideal one for those who have grown a bit bulky and want to reduce the bulk. If constant playing of tennis doesn't send a portly person back to normal weight nothing can. Tennis once was a game only for the wealthy. Now it is everyone-s game In other years, there were no public tennis courts. Those who liked the game of tennis had to belong to some club that had courts. That meant a sizeable initiation fee and dues each month thot were too big for the ordinary person to pay. But things are different now.

In every big city in the country, the municipal authorities have built tennis courts in the parks. And they will build more this summer and more next, because the army of tennis players is increasing amazingly and the city courts cannot accommodate half of those who wont to play.

Owners of vacant lots in the residential sections of many of the cities have shown enterprise by laying courts on these pieces of land and charging a moderate rental for the courts. Their courts are always in demand.

Tennis is not a costly game. A racqute costs from $2 to $5 asd will last for years. The tennis balls are very cheap and a pair will last for many games. The rest of the equipment includes a pair of sneaker shoes and a flannel shirt. Although the suit is in no way a necessity.

And for this small outlay one gets many hours of pleasure and much health-giving exercise. No wonder the popularity of the game is growing by leaps and bounds.

FERTILIZING OLD MEADOWS

The average yield of hay in New York State is less than half as high as it might be, according to the authorities at the state college of agriculture at Cornell university. The average for a ten-years' period was 1 1-5 tons per acre, whereas experiments conducted by the college show that by proper care a yield of 2 or 3 tons per acre may be obtained.

The low yield, says the college, indicates a thin stand and may be due partly to the fact that the soil is not properly prepared before seedings, but particularly because of lack of care after the meadow is established. The college has been experimenting in the top-dressing of meadows with fertilizers, and experiments have shown a marked increase in yield on the fertilized as compared with the unfertilized soil.

Farmers can treat their own fields in such a way as to improve their yields of hay if these yields are not up to the standard. A publication issued by the college, No. 66, gives full directions as to selection of field—since all soils will not respond to top-dressing—fertilizers to be used, time and method of application, and ways of telling whether the fertilization is effective. The time of application in this state is generally between April 15 and May 1.

The circular may be obtained by residents of New York State on application to the college at Ithaca.

Unusual Conditions Produce Unusual Results

In every section of this country one may find unusual conditions. There exists in Fulton a condition of more than unusual interest, in that it affects the business life and community interest to a greater extent than a cursory glance will show.

This condition is the practice of business men who patronize the large city newspapers by inserting therein their advertising.

The Evening Times challenges any person to produce a newspaper printed anywhere near a large city that does not secure for its advertising columns the full and complete patronage of local merchants, and, in addition, the business of merchants in the nearby city.

In Fulton there has been, and there still exists, a complete reversal of the usual order of things. Here one may find in the city newspaper columns a large amount of the advertising patronage of local merchants and business men, in direct opposition to logical and good business rules.

The city newspaper gives to this community comparatively nothing in return for the money spent for advertising in its columns, whereas, YOUR local papers give to Fulton real tangible assets—industries that bind and build up the town.

The time has come for a reversal of the order of things. True, there has been improvement, but yet Mr. Merchant, the Eyes of the People are Watching for a Greater Change.

PRODUCE ASS'N ELECT OFFICERS

Dinner Was Served and Shipping Facilities Were Discussed

The Fulton Produce Growers and Shippers Associati n held a meeting last night in Grange Hall for the purpose of electing officers for the ensuing year and discussing general business relative to the activities of the cssociation. Thirty-five members were present and at least half as many new members were admitted. After a bountiful dinner served in the real Grange manner, the topic of shippin gthe produce of the Fulton farms was taken up.

The guest of the evening, was R. W. Quackenbush, industrial agent of the Ontario and Western railroad. Mr. Quackenbush was present in order to get a comprehensive idea of the amount of produce to be shipped this year by the local association, in order that certain improvements in shippin gfacilities greatly desired by the association can be made. The shipping facilities ot present afforded by the Adams Express Company, in charge of the express on the Lackawanna and Ontario roads, and the American Express Company, in charge of that department on the New York Central lines is deemed inadequate by the local growers.

It was pointed out that the local farmers must have a service which should leave the city about noon, in order that the producer may cut his crop and get it to the terminal in time, and the train must arrive in New York city before midnight in order that the express companies on the other end may get the goods into Washington market before midnight if possible. The New York market's activities commence about midnight, and the first produce on hand brings the better price. Although the majority of the local produce goes direct to the commission men at Washington market, some is shipped to Philadelphia, and many carloads have been sent to Chicago, Kansas Citf and St. Louis.

Mr. Quackenbsh was not in a position to make any definite promises, but he said that the requests of the local association would receive the fullest consideration by the companies interested. He stated that the expense of such a service as specified would amount to approximately $600 a day, as the train would have to run 600 miles at a cost of $1 a mile. In order to secure such a train the business of the growers all along the line must warrant the company a prolt in addition to the expense of such a train. The local farmers are certainly in a position to ship their quota, but there must be co-operation all along the line.

More than 1,000 acres of muck land under cultivation were represented at the meeting last night. Several new projects were discussed, regarding the various crops to be raised this year. In the past the main crop in this locality has been lettuce. It is expected that 500,000 cates of lettuce will be shipped from Fulton and vicinity to the markets this year.

Many of the farmers are becoming interested in onion growing, and the product of the land under cultivation at the present time will amount to over 100,000 bushels this year. This amount will exceed by a large margin any shipments made in the past.

Celery culture was also the topic of discussion. Farmers hereabouts are increasing their celery acreage and this product will form an important part of the Fulton shipments this season.

The officers elected last night were as follows: President, O. T. Day (re-elected); vice-president, Dr. Schlappe (re-elected); secretary, James Hunter to succeed John R. Pratt; treasurer, J. F. Hopkins (re-elected). An executive committee of four was elected comprising John Churchill, W. F. Hubbard, C. A. Dryer and H. F. Crumb.

The dinner will be informal and the committee in charge promises a good time and an interesting evening for everyone.

TRAVELED 8,000 MILES

Mr. Emery erpressed himself as delighted with Southern California, but was greatly disappointed with Oregon. "The rainy season was on while we were there," said Mr. Emery "and to me it was most depressing."

The Exposition according to these visitors seemed to show so plainly the absence of interests planned for by the countries now at war.

A Modern Rip

Rip Van Winkle, with a lazy yawn,
Opened his eyes in the early dawn;
Staggered to town all full of fears,
To learn he had slept just 20 years.

"Well, then," said Rip, "let's have the news,
A sleep like that does sure confuse,
Is the world at peace or torn by hate?
And Bryan—is he still a candidate?"

Old Rip's neighbors then opened fire,
They praised and panned to their heart's desire,
But what amused old Rip was when
They said, "Bat Nelson wants to fight again."

It might not be amiss to make the open declaration that at least three teams in the State League are paying no attention to the salary limit. Same old story.—Binghamton Republican-Herald.

BERRY'S CASE IS APPEALED

Attorney Hopes to Secure Reduction of Award Made by Supreme Court Jury

Attorney Elizah Powell of Oswego, has appealed the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Charles Q. Berry vs. George E. Mason, to recover damages for negligence. The jury in the Supreme Court rendered a verdict of $956.69 to Berry, who alleged that he was permanently injured by an accident in the excelsior plant in this city. Mr. Powell has taken the case to the Appelate division. Mr. Mason is named as the defendant in the suit, but an insurance company in which he is a policy holder is fighting the action.

Mr. Berry went to work in the excelsior works in 1912 and, during his second day at work, he was operating a machine. The defendants claim that he had been forbidden to operate the machine in the manner he used, and he was struck by a piece of wood that flew up into his face. He claims that the company did not protect him against harm sufficiently.

It was the fall of 1914, however, before he brought action for damages and he claimed at that time that he had been permanently injured in 1912.

At the trial the insurance company's attorney stated that Berry had told the men in the shop at the time of the accident that the injury was due to his own carelessness.

The verdict of $956.69 is deemed exorbitant by Mr. Powell in view of the evidence and he has taken an appeal.

Robert Prendergast of this city represents Berry.

PAPERMAKERS TRYING TO GET OUTSIDE HELP

Watertown, Thursday—Efforts are being made by the officers in charge of the local mill of the Continental Paper Bag Compny to geat men to tke the places of the employes who went on strike Monday morning to secure the eight hour day. One man was brought in late Tuesday afternoon by Superintendent William B. Radich. The paper machines, however, are still down and the strikers will not capitulate, it was stated today. On the other hand they propose not to return except the company grants their demand.

President J. T. Carey, of the International Brotherhood of Pulp & Paper Makers, stated today that the situation was unchanged and that there was no prospect of an immediate change as he would make no further advances in the matter. Thomas Fynes, assistant treasurer of the Continental, who arrived Tuesday to investigate the situation, returned to New York this morning.

It was reported to President Carey that the strikebreaker brought in on Tuesday from some point outside of the state carried a revolver and claimed that he obtained a license to do so from Judge McConnell of this city. Judge McConnell this afternoon said that he had issued no such license.

HOW ARE THE STREETS OF YOUR TOWN?

The various associations that have been formed to agitate the building of good roads between large centers and from coast to coast are accomplishing a work that must benefit every automobile owner and each manufacturer. The object of these associations is a worthy one, and they should be given all the assistance possible.

But in thus promoting the building of good roads through rural districts are not many of us overlooking the local conditions or, at least, trusting that these will "take care of themselves?" With how many cities and towns are we familiar in which the resident, apologizing for the condition of the main streets, will say, "But our roads are fine—out in the country!" and will seem to believe that in thus bringing forth the fact that the rural highways are in excellent condition he is offering sufficient excuse for the almost impassable condition of the streets of his own town.

And yet such conditions exist to a deplorable extent.—H. W. Slauson in Leslie's.

THE "JITNEY BUS."

Five Cent Motorcar Ride Helps to Solve City Transit Problems.

Jitney busses are the most recent of transit experiments and have excited much interest in the smaller American cities recently. "Jitney" is slang, borrowed from the Mexican for a five cent piece, and the only simon pure though highly varnished jitney bus is the one that charges a five cent fare regardless of its size, make, power or the number of passengers it may be carrying.

Starting in the cities of southern California about the beginning of the year, the jitney bus idea has spread quickly across the continent.

The jitney bus, of course, is far from popular with the street railway companies where it has won the approval of the public. The first effort to stop jitneys in the court has been made in San Diego and has failed. The contention was raised in the superior court of that city that jitneys could not be legally operated without a franchise. In denying the petition for an injunction Judge W. A. Sloan held that in the absence of any physical appropriation of the highway the jitney is not subject to the franchise laws. The right of the legislature to enact a law giving municipalities authority to require franchises was not questioned, but Judge Sloan said if the city had a right to regulate jitneys by ordinance there was no ground for injunction in the absence of such ordinance.

Among the legal restrictions that may be applied by [illegible] prescribed routes of travel, number of passengers carried by each vehicle, the districts of travel and the promotion of the highest efficiency and safety in public transportation. The license power is also capable of adjustment within reasonable bounds.

Judge Sloan held that there was an absence of authority in law to indicate that the use of a public highway in the business of a common carrier of either freight or passengers by stage or omnibus lines has ever been treated as an unusual or unauthorized use requiring a franchise grant.

WATERING CITY TREES.

Practicable Method Described by Investigator Who Has Studied Subject.

"In a recent issue of the Scientific American," says a correspondent of that paper, "appeared a description of a novel contrivance which is being used in Strassburg, Germany, for applying water to city trees in dry seasons. The method therein described—of bending a perforated iron pipe around the tree to be watered and then attempting to saturate the hard ground sufficiently for the needs of a large tree by means of pouring water into a funnel and thence into the bent and buried pipe, pierced with small holes—appears to be a most impractical and expensive method.

"Your correspondent has often had occasion to apply water to planted trees in an arid climate, and he has been uniformly successful with the simple expedient of boring one or more holes with a post auger, avoiding all large roots, at a suitable distance from the tree—say eighteen inches, more or less, according to its age—and to a depth of two to three feet.

"These holes, if more than one is deemed necessary, should encircle the tree equidistantly and be tamped full of horse manure mixed with light stable litter, which will be found to take up water by the bucketful as fast as it can be poured thereon, fertilizing and softening the ground all around the roots and retaining the moisture for a long time.

"A dab of hay can easily be added on top of any hole where settling takes place. By this means the roots will also receive an increase of moisture during rainy seasons."

Bill For County Welfare Boards.

Largely as a result of the success of the boards of public welfare in Kansas City and St. Joseph a bill has been proposed by social workers in Missouri to create in every county in the state a board of public welfare for the administration of all county social service activities. These boards would replace what are at present known as boards of county visitors, which are purely advisory.—Survey.

A STORY THAT VARIES.

The Bride Who Got Into a Chest and Was Found Dead There.

There is a story more or less diffused of a young bride on her wedding day playing the game of hide and seek and concealing herself in one of those ancient carved chests of large size. After she had got in the lid closed, and she found herself unable to raise it again, for it fastened with a spring, and she was shut in. Search was made for her in every quarter but the right one, and great perplexity and dismay were caused by her disappearance. It was not till years after, when chance led to the opening of the chest, that the body of the young bride was discovered and the mystery of her disappearance solved.

The story is found in so many places that it may be questioned whether it is true of any one of them. Rogers tells it of a palace in Modena. The chest in which the poor bride was found is shown at Bramshill, in Hampshire, the residence of Sir John Cope. Another similar chest, with precisely the same story attached to it, was long shown at Marwell Old Hall, between Winchester and Bishop's Waltham.

The folk tale of Catskin or Peau d'Ane represents the girl flying with her bridal dresses from a marriage that is repugnant to her, and as this tale is found all over Europe it may have metamorphosed itself into that of the bride who got into a chest and died there.—Cornhill Magazine.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, April 15.—There is an organization in New York city known as the D'Antignoc Protective Political League which has its headquarters at No. 56 West 135th street, which is making efforts to have incorporated in the amendments to the State Constition, certain of its ideals. The list of amendments is lengthy and has been widely distributed in addition to having been moiled to every delegate to the Constitutional Convention.

William H. C. D'Antignac, chairman of the organization, advocates among other admendments, one which will provide for a state training school for the crippled that are of sound such unfortunates government posisuch unfortunates gopernment positions now occupied by able bodied men; one which will provide for the creation of a sub-jury in all capital cases, compised of three men; and amendment that will provide for a labor transportation commission and an amendment which will modify the existing immigration law, that will providef or a greater restriction of immigration.

Mr. D'Antignac, through the organization with which he is identified, desires that there shall be a State law that will regulate transportation to enable the job seeker and the job to get together when widely separated, as he puts it. He would also see to it that a State page in all daily newspapers be given over exclusively to the public acts of the representatives of the people to whom they have delegated a portion of their power.

There are other matters which the league above mentioned is striving to have enacted into law. It favors legislation that will give to the residents of large municipalities the right to rule themselves and formulate their own plan of government.

"Labor is before and should be independent of capital and deserves the highest consideration of the two. Yet capital has its rights which are as worthy of protection as any other rights. Property is the fruit of labor and let us not encourage the wilful destruction of porperty because we have none.

"Let us look at the harvesters of North and South Dakota who are unabel to get sufficient help on account of the high transportation, which exceeds five cents per mile. I advocate legislation that will authorize the Inter-State Commission to compel railroads to transport wageworkers and their fomilies to their places of employment at say one-fourth the present rate.

"Again, while the representatives at Washington are entertaining the idea of buying up the telegraph and telephone corporations, we believe in a saner policy for the government to utilize the western reserve lands in the States of Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oregon and Washington for the purpose of establishing a Government Plant to produce the necessaries of life—the same being quite an item in reducing the high cost of living."

Many amendments are suggested which have particular reference to the city of New York among which is that there be a thorough refision of the municipal charter and thot all elective candidates for city and county offices be nominated in direct primaries, the primary ballots containing no indication or esignation whatsoever of any choice by any body or organization.

Another theory of the D'Antignac League is that special privileges [illegible] be licensed by the city government, thus eliminating opportunity for graft.

Commissioner Fitzgerald was appointed by Governor Glynn soon after the Compensation law was signed. For years he had been the legislative representative of the New York State Federation of Labor at the Capitol and is well known to many Gowego and Fulton labor men.

SAVE AN HOUR

Kingston Man Plans to Turn Back Clock's Hands to Get Extra Hour of Daylight

Kingston, Thursday—How would you like to stay up an hour later in the fine summer evenings, in fact all through May, June, July,, August September and October, and still go to bed the same time you did last year?

Instead of going to bed at 11 in the beautiful summer weather, if Alderman H. W. Newman has his way, the citizens of Kingston will turn in at 10, althogh the hands of the clock are pointing to 11. How is this done, you ask?

Very simple indeed. Alderman Newman purposes to recommend to council at their next meeting that the hands of the Kingston clocks be turned ahead one hour. In this way it will give you the same amount of sleep as usual, but if you are in the habit of going to bed at 11 in the fine summer evenings, should this scheme be carried out, you will turn in at 10 p. m., still you will retire at 11, by your clock.

"The idea is simply to give the citizens one more hour of daylight in the summer. By turning the clock ahead an hour a person getting up at 7 a. m., now by the eastern time, gets up at 7 a. m., but by 7 standard time he would arise at 6 a. m. He would have from 11 to 12 noon for lunch and then return and work until 4 or 5 instead of 5 or 6, as by eastern time. If you go out then you have the same number of hours to spend out, but by setting the hands of the clock ahead you hove one more hour of daylight than you would have had by using eastern time.

Alderman Newman is very enthusiastic over the scheme, and stated that if possible he wasg oing to see it through for this summer. His purposes hving the change in time to begin on May 1, of this year, continuing it through until Novembeer 1, when it is changed back again from standard to eastern time.

About Sports Generally

By FRANK G. MENKE

Cubans Not Interested.

George Bradt fathered the fight game in Havana, but it looks as if his offspring is going to kick him in the ribs. Bradt went to a lot of expense in bringing fighters to Havana and he went to even greater expense in building an open air arena. But the crowds won't come.

Bradt, who is a game sportsman, had sunk a lot of money in trying to get the Cubans interested in pugilism, but so far he has not met with any degree of success. During the two weeks that preceded the Johnson-Willard fight, Bradt staged some fine bills almost nightly. He mixed the bouts nicely, pitting a Cuban against an American whenever he could find a good Cuban. But the natives weren't interested.

The bulk of the attendance at the fights which Bradt staged was composed of American visitors. The house very rarely drew more than 300 admissions, although the stadium that Bradt built will seat 12,000. Bradt had to pay the fighters that he got from America some big guarantees and so far has not pulled off a winning card.

An Effective Punch.

The kidney punch, used in clinches, is a mighty effective punch in a finish fight, but it looks to the spectator as if it hurts the puncher more than the punched when the bouts are limited to six, ten or twelve rounds.

The kidney punch is used to wear down a foe. It rarely begins to weaken a fighter before the fifteenth or twentieth round, while the man who delivers it weakens himself and loses some of his stamina by delivering it.

Silence is Golden

Bat Nelson, who has opened a boxing club in Havana with his manager, Jack Robinson, committed what might be called a social, as well as a business, error some time back.

Bat loves to eat—and he loves to eat American cooking. He sleuthed all around Havana for several weeks, but failed to find a place where they doled out anything but Cuban cooking. And then the turn came.

Bat wandered down a narrow side street one day and discovered a nice looking eatery. He walked in and ordered American food. He got it. He got ham and eggs like they cook 'em in the U. S. A., and he got apple pie that was far superior to mamma's brand.

The next day Bat jumped into a Cuban newspaper gent and told him of his discovery.

"Say, that Hotel —— is the only joint in this burg where they give you good grub," said Bat. "All the other joints hand you awful chuck."

In due course of time the interview appeared in some of the Cuban organs, and the next day Manager Jack Robinson had to quiet 150 excited innkeepers who resented Bat's remark.

JESS WILLARD'S DUTY

A world's champion, having vanquished his predecessor with his famous right to the jaw, or whatever, has only begun to discharge his function in society. Thereafter he must satistify the craving for hero worship which pervades the heart of mankind, and which he alone, perhaps, of all stars in the human firmament, can best satisfy in a democracy such as ours. What is a president in the popular mind compared with the man whose punch has no equal? And what is an ordinary champion compared with the white gladiator who has just brought to a close the unpopular reign of the black man? Jess Willard has, indeed, a character to live up to, a vast national thirst to slake.

He may do this very simply. Little else is demanded of the master of the prize biceps except the constant and good natured display of his person. Almost every one is familiar with Charles Dana Gibson's drawing "The Champion." This illustrates very neatly the demand on Jess Willard—that he circulate where the man and boy on the street can rub against him and call him "Jess" and boast of the contact forevermore; that he march where the humblest and youngest fight fans can make part of the procession. Only so can he fulfil his contract with the democratic psychology which has raised him to fame and fortune.

But our new hero is seeking to repudiate this contract in permitting a jealous and officious manager to hide him from public view except at so much a look. Let him remember other idols who made not wholly dissimilar mistakes. Let him beware lest a starved and cheated constituency turn and rend him with their scorn. For the higher the pinnacle the greater the fall is a rule which knows no exceptions.—New York Tribune.

HOT LINERS

The National League yesterday opened its fortieth campaign and the American League its fifteenth.

And it has been estimated that 160,000 persons are watching 16 clubs perform.

Sportwriters in the metropolis seem to be of the opinion that as an actor Jess Willard is a great boxer.

Here's the way the Stars look at the present time:

Outfielders — ...ley, O'Neil and Demininger.

Infielders — ...il and Burrell.

Catchers—S... n, Snell and Soper.

Pitcher—Rawley.

"Utica ...rge" Burns won't be in tip-top shape for several weeks, ac... to the New York Evening ... which has the following to say in regard to the Giant situation:

"This is the regular time to issue the 'low down' on the baseball clubs. According to all precedent, we should announce expertly the exact position in which the Giants are sure to finish. But precedent shall be diregarded. We admit frankly, though it wreck our reputation, that we don't know how good or how bad the Giants are.

"However, when George Burns gets back in form they will be stronger than they were last season. Burns, perhaps the most valuable man on the Giant roll last year, sprained and dislocated his right ankle in an exhibition game in Dallas on March 13. He still limps. His recovery has been much slower than the physicians predicted, and, although he will play for a few innings today, he will not be in tip-top shape for several weeks.

BRITONS IN FEAR OF PROHIBITION BURY DRINKS IN BACK GARDENS

Bachelors in Vienna Limited to Six Slices of Bread a Day, and Poor Have to Eat Straw.

KING GEORGE'S palaces are now "dry." The royal command forbidding the consumption of any wines, spirits or beer in the homes of the British monarch went into effect April 6.

It is estimated that already about 120,000 other homes in Great Britain, and mostly among the well to do, have followed the example set by the king and Lord Kitchener in mounting the water wagon. "I Don't Booze" buttons are being prepared similar to those with the motto "No Drinks Between Meals" that were worn for awhile in England a few years ago.

How far the "stop drinking" movement is likely to spread among the working classes, whom it is intended to affect, cannot yet be foreseen. At present it does not appear to have found any warm welcome among the workers. The Labor party has suddenly come out with a strong demand for an early peace, but the leaders deny that they are actuated by the invasion of the laborer's liberty as a drinker.

The brewers and distillers are up in arms. They believe that the voluntary campaign will fail and fear that total prohibition for the entire nation is not far off. They know that if Kitchener gives the word not another tap will be turned nor cork drawn, and they are exerting all their enormous influence to prevent the word being spoken.

Which Is Harder Task?

While Great Britain is trying to enforce an embargo on food for the Germans, she is endeavoring to put an embargo on drink for her own people. Experts are uncertain as to which she will find the harder task.

Meanwhile, some of the effects of these efforts are remarkable. They are no less striking in Germany and Austria than in England.

In Vienna, for instance, the government has figured it out that a bachelor can live on six slices of bread a day. He will be allowed to eat other things, but his bread may not exceed this quantity, which weighs 7.4 ounces, or about 1.2 ounces for each slice. For each slice the bachelor will have his card punched, or clipped if in coupon form. It is estimated that he can eat two slices for breakfast, one for luncheon, one for the afternoon coffee and two for dinner.

These new food rules for bachelors are also to apply to persons living alone without a household, and they were dated to go into effect on April 11. Until that day no Viennese householder was to be permitted to use more than 3.53 ounces of flour a day for each member of the family.

In England they are counting the cost of the battle against drink because the government has stated that if it has to close up all the breweries and distilleries it will pay full compensation. The sort of sum this is likely to jump into may be estimated from the fact that the average expenditure even now per head of the population on drink is more than $100 a year, counting men, women and babies.

The drink bill for the United Kingdom for 1913, the figures for which year are the latest issued, amounted to no less than the astounding sum of $833,405,000. In 1912 the British nation's drink bill was $807,766,650. It is believed that that for 1914 was correspondingly higher than that of 1913.

Thus the money spent on drink by the British people amounts to more than double the combined expenditures of the nation for its army and navy in times of peace.

From these figures it will be seen that if prohibition of the sale of liquor comes in Great Britain it will cause the biggest shock ever felt in that country. The brewers are pleading that British ale is a necessary part of a Briton's food. Some are saying the men could not work without drink. Others declare that unless the men drank and fuddled their minds so that they do not recognize their conditions they would not bear them.

Probably the early British cave man had his cocktail, crude but comforting. It is a matter of historic record that the English were making merry on mead before the custom of staining one's self bright blue with woad began to be considered the classy dress for the smart society people of those days.

The sudden shutting off of the sale of drink is certain to be dramatic. It is likely that it will be done at night by the police and the inland revenue officers, as happened in Russia. The general opinion is that such a method might do for the simple Slavs, but would not "go" in England. But it is unlikely that the saloon keepers of Britain will be caught napping.

At any rate, in preparation for the dread dry days wine and beer are already being hidden on an extensive scale. Beer is being buried in back yards, hidden in attics, stowed under cellared coals and pushed up into unused chimneys. The suburban gardener is ...ing plans for lettuce crops and utilizing the moon for vesperal trenching.

"I am a poor man," said a London bartender the other day, "but I can see what is coming, and I have mortgaged our home and laid in three gross of bottled whisky and half a dozen sacks of Portland cement. I have hired a wagon, and we are going to drive down Easter Monday to a cottage in Kent where my missus' sister Emma lives. After we have buried the stuff I am going to lay a concrete bed over it in case of accidents."

"Zeppelin bombs?" he was asked.

"No; sister-in-law's husband," he answered.

May Exempt Ireland.

There is some authority for a belief that Ireland will be exempt from prohibition, nominally because it is producing no munitions of war. The result certainly would be the discovery on an unprecedented scale of the superority of Irish scenery and air and the salubrity and general suitability of Ireland for vacations.

"We shall have to change the war song," said the manager of a tourist agency. "Believe me, the morning that John Bull awakens to find prohibition gripping the land the nation will be singing, 'It's a short way to Tipperary.'"

Throughout the Easter holidays not only the church people, but business men and employers of labor, spent their vacation circulating petitions reading:

"I am entirely in favor of the suspension of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors during the war, which I consider imperative for a quick and successful termination of the war. I shall heartily support the government in any such measure."

Under the defense of the realm act the British government has power to enforce prohibition merely by an order of the king in council without any further appeal to parliament.

Sir Thomas Dewar, the whisky man, in defending the trade has declared prohibition an absolute failure in America. Sir William M. Ramsay, the scientist, denying this, says in a published statement that his experience in America converted him to the prohibition cause and asserts that, despite "blind tigers" and other ways of evasion, the effect is most beneficial.

Germans Find New Foods.

But, while the British are worrying about a possible total lack of drink, the Germans and Austrians are no less anxious about their food.

Germany's newest food material is straw soup. It is the result of investigation by Hans Friedenthal, M. D., lecturer in the University of Berlin. The straw is reduced to flour by a special process. The indigestible and unpalatable cell walls are eliminated and the nutritive matter retained. It is served in a soup not unlike green rye soup and is even fit for baby food.

According to Vorwarts, all nonpoisonous substances, including skins, peelings and the bark of trees, may be converted into wholesome eating matter for man if thoroughly disintegrated and properly treated.

The war has taught the people of Vienna and the whole of Austria that maize is an article by no means to be despised. Even the poor women of the people, with scant purses, would at first refuse maize. "Fit for cattle and hogs only," they would say. But they had to eat it, and they quickly learned how.

Next potato flakes, shaved and dried, were mingled with the flour. They managed to eat that too. "Nothing like trying after all," said an old man after his first meal of such bread.

But it took a lot of talking, printing, placarding of walls with mayoralty decrees, of lecturing, to work this change. The National Austrian Women's association took in hand the matter of lecturing. A thousand or more cooking and baking courses were established all over the empire, even in small towns and villages. Women of the highest aristocracy, like Archduchess Zita, Countess Hoyos and Countess Zamoyska, took part.

This has altered the whole mode of table life of the Austrians, who are by natural bent rather careless and thoughtless. Nothing now is wasted in foodstuff, no matter how little or how coarse.

OLYMPIC HERO DIES IN WAR.

Famous Quarter Mile Champion Succumbs to Wounds.

The latest British casualty list includes Lieutenant Halswelle of ... Highland Light infantry, who died of wounds at the front. He was the famous quarter mile runner who won for Great Britain at the Olympic games at the stadium at Shepherd's Bush, London.

His victory was unfortunate and sensational. In the second heat, it was alleged, he was boxed off the track by the American, Carpenter, and the latter was disqualified.

Arid England

From Land's End up to John o' Groat's,
From Dover to the Minch,
The air is full of antidotes,
The dust is in a million throats,
Reform is in a clinch.

The king, Lloyd-George and K. of K.
Beat Abstinence's drum,
And those who used to wet their clay
Are gathering in bands to pray
Upon the demon Rum.

No longer will the Highlandman
Take whusky in his tea.
The navvies cease to rub the can,
And cash and every artisan
From 'arf and 'arf will flee.

The porter, bitter beer and gin,
No longer clog the tape;
The soda, severed from its twin,
And Adam's ale is bound to win
The victory—perhaps!

KNITTING WAR SOCKS LEADS TO ROMANCES.

College Girls Get Amusing Letters From Wounded Soldiers.

Along with the leg warmers and mufflers they knitted and sent to wounded soldiers in Europe some of the girl students at Teachers' college, Columbia university, New York city, inclosed notes to cheer the men. Many replies are being received.

Most of the replies are simple letters of sincere thanks, but others take a serious tone, and some are just the reverse. Some of the flippant ones are causing much amusement at the college.

One of them said:

Dear Fannie ——Your note came just in time to make me change my mind. When I got shot on the Aisne I was reported dead. My old girl, hearing of this, up and married a lad that was not man enough to go to war. First I wanted to eat a big enough bullet to make me croak. Then I got mad because I thought if she didn't care for any more of a man than she married she must have thought I was a fine snicker too. So now, I want to write to you a lot. Send me your picture when you write again. JOHN ——.

Another read:

Dear Maggie ——From your name I think you are Irish. From your wit I know you are. From your tone I know you are a nice girl. I am Irish and I am married, but I am going to hunt up a nice Irish lad for you and make him write. And I will make him tell the truth too.

PATRICK ——.

Still another, brief but explicit, ran:

Dear Jennie ——I would like to marry you, dear. I have two Scotch lassies and three laddies in their kilts awaiting me home. What's more, there's a wee wife, and then sometimes I drink too much Scotch, and nice girls like you can't beat me like my wife can. SANDY ——.

No engagement rings have been received as yet, but all sorts of romances are being woven, and the maids now are talking of trips abroad to hunt up their soldier boys when the war is over.

MORMONS TELL OF FUNDS.

Church Issues Public Statement For First Time In History.

The first public financial statement ever issued by the Mormon church has just been presented at the annual conference in the tabernacle at Salt Lake City.

The report shows that the church collected $1,687,920 from tithes in 1914; $730,960 was expended on church buildings, $330,984 on schools, $64,508 on Mormon temples, $227,900 for missionary work, $99,293 to maintain church offices, $136,727 to complete and maintain the hospital in Salt Lake City and $116,238 went to the poor.

A net increase in the membership of the church of 129,423 for the period from 1901 to 1914, a birth rate of 39.5 per thousand, a death rate of 8.3 per thousand and a marriage rate of 17 per thousand in 1914 are reported.

CURFEW FOR PHILADELPHIA.

No Children Under Fifteen to Be Out After 11 P. M.

A curfew for children under fifteen is to be established in Philadelphia. George D. Porter, director of public safety, has announced. Children found in the streets after 11 p. m. will be kept in the house of detention over night, and parents will be called upon to explain the reason for the youngsters being out.

"Most of our crime," said Mr. Porter, "may be attributed to young men and women, and we are ... to try to set the juvenile straight before he reaches the age of fifteen."

STATE CONVENTION FACES LONG TASK

Mending New York Constitution to Take All Summer.

ELIHU ROOT IS CHAIRMAN.

Citizens Expect to Gain Important Changes Along Progressive Lines, Especially in the Matter of Home Rule For the Government of Cities and Conservation.

The work of the seventh convention in New York state in 139 years to revise the constitution of the state, which met at Albany April 6, will be in progress all summer. The new constitution must be completed by the middle of September, as the revised draft must be drawn up six weeks before the next November election, when it will be submitted to the people for approval.

After organizing, the convention adjourned until April 26.

Ex-Senator Elihu Root, who has held many important offices, among them that of secretary of war and secretary of state at Washington, and was an important factor in the last convention in 1894, was elected president of the convention, being the unanimous choice of what is considered a gathering of the greatest minds in the state.

There are 168 delegates, three from each of the fifty-one senate districts in the state and fifteen at large. Each is to receive $1,500 for his work and mileage to and from his home once. The convention will cost the state about $500,000.

Republicans in Control.

The Republicans have 116 delegates and the Democrats fifty-two.

Four of the delegates were delegates at the last convention, twenty-one years ago. They are Mr. Root, De Lancey Nicoll, Charles S. Merenes and Louis Marshall.

The nonpartisan spirit of the convention was shown when no floor leaders were chosen. In their stead were selected two vice presidents, Jacob Gould Schurman, president of Cornell university, a Republican, and Morgan J. O'Brien, a Democrat.

It is expected that many important changes along progressive lines will be made in the constitution of the state as the result of the convention. Ex-Senator Root foreshadowed this in his speech. He said:

"Great changes have come in the industrial and social life of the state since the last convention. To attain ends which every one agrees ought to be attained it appears necessary that government shall interfere to a much greater extent than in former times with the complicated and interdependent life of the people. The business which government is required to undertake has vastly increased both in magnitude and variety, and there is a widespread feeling that in some respects the business of the government has outgrown the organization of government.

To Give Voter Power.

"Many thoughtful citizens consider that our system of taxation, appropriation and expenditure of moneys, which worked very well in simpler times, is now quite inadequate. Many think that the strictly municipal interests of our great cities require more protection in the way of home rule provisions than is afforded in the present constitution.

"Many think that the natural resources of the state, particularly the forests and water power, should be brought under a system of conservation and utilization having the stability of a constitutional basis. Many think that our ballot has become too complicated and unwieldy and that the real power of the voter over the affairs of government would be increased if there were fewer candidates to be voted for and fewer subjects for the voters to pass upon at the same time.

"Many think that the great multitude of separate officers and commissions which have been created from time to time to meet new demands for official action should be brought into more definite relations with each other and under more systematic supervision and control.

"These and other subjects have enlisted the interest of respectable bodies of citizens who are entitled to have from this convention attentive consideration of their opinions."

UNIFORMS AT 15 A MINUTE.

British Firm Sets Record of Speed In Clothing Soldiers.

Army uniforms are being turned out by the manufacturers of Leeds, England, at the rate of fifteen a minute, or 7,200 for a day of eight hours or 42,200 a week.

In a model factory the piece of khaki cloth, measuring from fifty-five yards to sixty-five yards in length and weighing twenty-one to twenty-two ounces to the yard, enters the cutting room and after passing through only four other departments is presented to the government as pressed and completed uniforms. They are made in eighteen sizes.

Never in all its history has Leeds turned out so many boots as in the past few months. War office inspectors inspect on the hoof and examine all material. The boots cost the government $5 a pair.

Woman's World

The Wife of a Great Writer Who Has Opinions Also.

LADY DOYLE

Lady Doyle, whose husband, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, is a literary expert on crimes and criminals, concurs with him in his idea about Sing Sing. The following is what that noted author said after a five minute voluntary incarceration in one of the cells of the prison:

"It ought to be burned down," he exclaimed indignantly. "The buildings are absolutely antiquated, and it is nothing less than a disgrace for a state so great and wealthy as New York to have a prison which is a hundred years behind the times.

"I am a medical man, and naturally I was interested in the sanitary conditions and the way the buildings were constructed, and I saw enough. No, I have never read or even heard of any of the reports on conditions in Sing Sing which may have been issued. I didn't need any reports; I saw the place.

"I don't wish to pose as an authority on English prisons," the novelist went on, "but I doubt if we have any as insanitary as Sing Sing, except perhaps in very remote districts. Certainly there are none in London or the larger cities.

"The cells ought to be knocked three or four into one. As to the types of prisoners whom I saw there, I should say that it struck me that the great mistake of the penal laws is in their failure to allow freer scope for treatment of the individual.

"But is there such a thing as an American criminal?" he asked. "There in Sing Sing I saw great numbers of men evidently of foreign birth. Your criminals are like your life—cosmopolitan.

Sir Conan Doyle married Miss Jean Leckie Sept. 18, 1907. She is his second wife, and gives her husband much sympathy and inspiration in his profession of story writing. Dr. Doyle has given up entirely the practice of medicine.

under which the linen is cut away, leaving the flowers and leaves of the net held to the linen by the embroidery. Linen torchon lace is used as an edging.

White and Black Stripes.

White and black stripes are used in almost every fabric, but perhaps no more attractively than in voile or chiffon mounted over a foundation of white taffeta. Often the overdress of stripes is edged with blue or black velvet ribbon, which gives it a steadiness and charm it would otherwise lack.

20,000 ACRES TO COLLEGE.

Middlebury, Vt.—A tract of more than 20,000 acres of forest land in this state is bequeathed to Middlebury college, to be preserved as a forest park forever, under the will of the late Joseph H. Battell.

Mr. Battell, who was publisher of the Middlebury Register, was greatly interested in forest preservation and had been acquiring virgin timber lands for more than forty years.

A mountain in Lincoln and Warren, one of the highest peaks in the state, is given to the United States government.

The town of Middlebury receives two large tracts of land for park purposes and a fund of $9,000 for park maintenance.

The lands bequeathed to the college lie along the crest of the Green mountains and extend into three counties and eight townships.

In addition the college will receive as a residuary bequest, at the expiration of a ten years' trust, the Battell block, a large business structure in the village; the Middlebury Register and a number of farms.

LIVED FOUR YEARS AS A MAN.

Death of Massachusetts Woman Reveals Her Long Masquerade.

Springfield, Mass.—The death of Miss Florestine Albertine Beaudoin, whose body was found in Williamsett, revealed that she had lived disguised as a man for four years. She lived with her sister as "Albert Beaudoin" and worked in the paper mills of Holyoke. The only motive suggested for her long masquerade is that she could earn more as a man for the support of herself and her sister, who is a widow. Her death was due to heart trouble.

After her day's work in Holyoke she was loading a wagon with furniture from the house which she occupied with her sister. A policeman found her leaning against the wagon and asked the supposed "Albert Beaudoin" if he needed any help. The woman replied that she would be all right in a little while. Later she was found lying by the wagon, and she died soon after a physician arrived.

BELGIAN CHILDREN THANK AMERICANS

Twins Send Letter to President, Who Promptly Replies.

Washington.—An exchange of letters between President Wilson and two little Belgians in Brussels, in which the children thanked the president for food sent by Americans and the president expressed his appreciation of their gratitude, has been made known at the White House. The children, twins, nine years old, wrote:

Dear Mr. Wilson—Thank you very much for the good bread. The poor people in our villages were starving, for they have nothing to eat, but now that you have sent over to our dear little country a big provision of wheat, both rich and poor can live—thanks to the Americans. Best love and wishes from little

PUSSY DESPOELBERCH.

Pussy's brother added, "I join in with my sister in thanking you, too, for it is jolly good bread, enough to satisfy any schoolboy's hunger."

In reply the president sent this letter in his own handwriting:

My Dear Little Friends—Your letter touched me very deeply, and I thank you for it with all my heart. It makes me very happy to think that what generous Americans have done to relieve the hunger and distress in your country has brought you the help you needed and given you a little happiness in the midst of these terrible days of war. I hope that you will grow up to be strong to do the work that will have to be done in the days of peace that are coming. It would be a great pleasure to me if some day I might see you both when those happier times have come. Your sincere friend,

WOODROW WILSON.

SLIPPERS FOR HIS BURIAL.

Wanted Comfortable Footwear and Quilt In Coffin.

Los Angeles, Cal.—In case he was murdered $5,000 was to be taken from his estate to aid in hunting his slayers. This was the provision E. F. Kellner, Arizona banker and pioneer, who died in Venice, Cal., made in his will.

In giving minute directions as to the method of his burial Kellner directed that a coffin be secured of copper from Globe, Ariz., where he resided many years; that he be dressed in a gray suit and comfortable slippers and covered with a quilt without decoration.

HAVE FLOWN 1,116,000 MILES

French Air Men In 10,000 Reconnaissances Have Lost Heavily.

Paris.—An official statement giving statistics concerning the aerial flights of the French air men during the eight months of the war says:

"Approximately 10,000 aerial reconnoissances have been made, amounting to 18,000 hours in the air. The distance covered was 1,800,000 kilometers (over 1,116,000 miles).

"Unfortunately these results were not obtained without serious losses, which equal and sometimes even surpass other methods of warfare."

HINTS FOR THE BUSY HOUSEWIFE

Caster Wheel That Makes Furniture Moving Easy.

An ingenious mounting for the wheel is embodied in a furniture caster recently invented, says Popular Mechanics. The caster holder revolves on a pin inserted in the furniture leg in the usual manner, while each end of the axle of the wheel works in flat inverted V shaped slots in the sides of the holder, so that the wheel slides from one side to the other when the furniture is being moved and it readily without requiring the holder to reverse. When the furniture is at rest, the axle takes its place at the middle or high part of the slot, and the caster wheel is therefore central under the furniture leg.

Cheese Omelet.

This is a most delicious and savory dish, and quickly and easily made. Break three eggs into a bowl, beat well with an egg whisk, add a tablespoonful of milk or cream and salt and pepper to taste. Place a frying pan over a brisk fire and melt a teaspoonful of butter in it. As soon as the butter is very hot pour the egg mixture into it, beating all the while. Shake the pan gently when the omelette is cooking. As soon as it begins to "set," loosen the edges with a knife, scatter a dessertspoonful of grated cheese over the surface of the omlet, fold it over in two, slip it upon a hot dish and serve immediately.

Household Helps.

It is a needless waste of fire to keep a stove red hot all the time.

Rice with grated cheese over it makes a change as a luncheon dish.

Grease sweet potatoes before they are put into the oven to bake. They will bake in half the time and the skins will be soft.

When you paste labels on glass jars that are used for spices or cereals put the label on the inside. It will stay more securely.

Perspiration stains may be removed from white blouses if they are steeped before washing in cold water, in which a little bicarbonate of soda has been added.

Graham Pudding.

A cupful of molasses, a cupful of sweet milk, two cupfuls of graham flour, a cupful of slightly chopped raisins, a saltspoonful of salt, two level teaspoonfuls of soda dissolved in a little warm water. Mix together, put in pudding dish and steam two hours. For the sauce beat an egg thoroughly, add three-fourths of a cupful of powdered sugar and a cupful of whipped cream, flavor with half a teaspoonful of vanilla.—Country Gentleman.

Escaloped Rhubarb.

Put into a pudding dish a layer of buttered bread crumbs, then one of finely cut rhubarb, add a generous sprinkling of sugar, and a dusting of cinnamon, repeat this process until the quantity is sufficient for the number of people to be served, making the last layer of the crumbs. Cover and bake for half an hour, then remove the cover and let brown. Serve hot, with cream.

Rhubarb Custard.

One pint of sweetened and steamed rhubarb. Strain over this one-half ounce of gelatin, which has been previously dissolved in sufficient cold water to cover it. When cold stir in the stiffly beaten whites of three eggs and one-half pint of whipped cream; pour into a fancy mold and set away to harden. When ready to serve, turn out of the mold on to a fancy plate.

Tomato Pot Roast.

Buy a pot roast of beef and put it into the bean pot. Place it on top of the stove with a little cold water until it begins to boil. Pour one large can of tomatoes, well seasoned, over the whole, place the pot in a medium oven and cook for three hours. It needs very little watching and will be found extremely tender when eaten.

Beef Loaf.

One and a half pounds round steak, one-fourth pound fat pork, two tablespoonfuls milk or cream, one tablespoonful lemon juice, three tablespoonfuls of breadcrumbs, one egg, three-fourths tablespoonful salt and a good sprinkling of pepper. Make in loaf and bake one and one-half hours.

Tomato Eggs.

Cut some thick slices of tomato, dip each into flour seasoned with salt and pepper and fry. Make some squares of toast, butter them, lay the tomatoes on them and put a poached egg on each. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

PARISIAN CREATION.

Handsome Evening Frock Built of Ivory Liberty and Net.

SIMULATING THE GRECIAN.

The gown shown here is Grecian in its simplicity of lines, but wholly twentieth century in the sumptuousness of its fabric. Ivory liberty is draped to form girdle and tunic, while the bodice and overdrapery are of wonderfully colored sequins. A lace underskirt shows where the gown is draped up in the front.

QUAINT PARASOLS.

The quaint styles of parasols used from 1820 to 1830 have again appeared. Shirrings, puffings, pipings, cordings and knife plaitings are used in a variety of ways, to emphasize ribs, to outline gores and to form borders. Many odd shapes and rich color combinations are seen. Plain, severe styles, the most prominent being the sand tones, are seen only with tailored dresses. There is a tendency to combine materials. In dressy, fancy models the sand tones are combined with bright colors. For instance, in one model of brilliant red there is a border and a piping between the shirred gores in a rich sand color verging on gold.

A smart parasol developed in contrasting colors has a row of shirring between the gores, producing a leaf-like effect. A very pretty parasol has a border of sheer crepe in a contrasting color, looped in each section and caught with a flat button effect. Battleship gray is a favorite color, being used alone in tailored designs and in combination with the new reds and blues in elaborate designs.

Many striking shapes are seen. Among these is one with wide gores of richly colored material and narrow portions in stripes or checks. A cluster of shirring appears at the edge. Of special interest is the return of flat Japanese and Chinese effects, both plain and richly embroidered. Japanese prints are in both silk and cotton. Many Japanese designs have dark borders, with here and there a delicate bit of hand embroidery in gold. Sometimes odd looking velvet birds in orange and blue tones are appliqued over the inside surface of the parasol.

POCKETS ARE "IN."

As for pockets, they are "in." Here is a point for all women to consider in connection with the pocket question: Do not be persuaded into permitting them to be placed where they cannot be easily reached.

At present they are boldly placed where every one may see them and are more decorative than practical, but as soon as the polonaise modes really make their presence felt you will miss seeing the pockets. It does not follow they won't be present, for they will be hid, as they were when they were modish before, underneath the polonaise draperies or within the folds of numberless puffs.

For the tailleur of dressy proclivities the pocketed skirt eliminates the possibility of a pocketed coat. And with the plaited skirt, of course, the pockets appear on the coat only.

New vogues for these also introduce braided effects which simulate pockets and that, too, for skirts or suits made of novelty fabrics.

WOMEN POLL BIG VOTE IN CHICAGO ELECTION.

Did Not Affect City's Mayoral Choice, Anti-suffragists Assert.

Anti-suffragists deny that the women's vote was the controlling factor in the sensational mayoralty election in Chicago, in which William Hale Thompson, Republican, obtained a plurality of 140,000, the greatest in the history of the city, over Robert M. Sweitzer, the Democratic candidate. The suffragists claim the victory as theirs.

There were no fewer than 282,000 registered women voters, and the election was the largest experiment in women suffrage yet tried in this country in a municipal contest. The outcome was watched with interest the world over.

But, while it is believed that 60 per cent of the women voted for Mr. Thompson, it is claimed that he also had 60 per cent of the men voters in his favor. Consequently it is asserted that the result would have been the same without the women's vote. The women say they swung the men and produced the victory.

The campaign sizzled with charges of fraud. Local bitterness reached such a high point that at least one election shooting was recorded.

With the first flash of the landslide for Thompson the Republicans began to shout for 1916 and hailed the result of the mayoralty election as a reliable indication of what they hope will happen in the next national election.

Of the 282,000 women voters 243,549 went to the polls. This is the largest woman's vote so far. The largest previous poll in Chicago was last spring, when 164,026 women cast their ballots. Of the 243,549 women 136,920 voted Republican and 86,624 Democratic. At the primaries 58,764 women voted Republican and 93,873 Democratic.

ALARM CLOCK CURES HENS.

Farmer Tries Novel Scheme With Startling Success.

A writer in the Farm and Fireside declares that the surest cure for broody hens is an alarm clock. He says:

"Some years ago I was endeavoring to break up a sitting hen, but my efforts were in vain. Old Yaller continued to sit. Finally I took a small alarm clock and set it so it would go off in a few minutes. I placed it in one corner of her nest and watched. It went off. And so did Old Yaller. She left the nest and stood dazed for one horrified instant, and then, with one shrill squawk, she ran out of the henhouse and flew over the park fence and began to hunt for bugs in the grass.

"She not only stopped sitting, but she stopped clucking, and in a short time began to lay. I have since tried this method on more than 100 broody hens with complete success."

98, NOT TOO OLD TO WORK.

Aged Woman Resents Statement That She's Not Spry.

"I had to beg. They all said I was too old to work, but I'm not," said Mrs. Edna Sheppard when arraigned before Recorder Gaskill in Atlantic City, N. J., on the charge of seeking alms on the streets.

"Well, you don't look exactly like a spring chicken. Just what is your age?" inquired the court.

"None of your freshness, young man. I'm only ninety-eight, and I'm not ashamed to tell it either," was the reply.

"Prisoner discharged," was the verdict after investigation had shown Mrs. Sheppard really was within two years of the century mark.

CITY IN PAUL PRY ROLE.

New York city wants to know how much its "white wings" pay for undershirts, how much their wives pay for garters and corset covers and how much their children spend at moving picture shows.

These and similar questions have been sent to street cleaning department employees by the bureau of standards, with forms for replies and the request, "Fill this out and return duly."

Miss Alice Tainter and Her Dog of High Degree.

Portrait In Words.

One of the company having gone out of the room, the rest agree upon a person (man or woman) whose identity the absentee is to guess from the answers to questions which he puts to the company one by one. The only answers allowed being either "yes" or "no," the task of recognizing the chosen person is not always easy.

The "portrait" may be that of a private person or a public character. In the former case he or she must be generally known and, of course, to the guesser.

At a signal the questioner enters the room and at once proceeds to business by general questions to settle sex ("Am I a man?") and distinction ("Does everybody know me?"), and then step by step, by a process of elimination, narrows the range of choice, to such an extent that he may be enabled to "spot" the subject.

Sometimes the guesser himself is the chosen person, and it is a long time, as a rule, before this likelihood dawns upon him—if, indeed, it ever does. It simplifies answers and makes for clearness for the guesser to identify himself with the person selected. "Is it a woman?" is less pleasing and less businesslike than "Am I a woman?"—even if the questioner should be a man.

A Cat In a Trunk.

A Missouri housewife was cleaning up her garret when by some means the family cat got into an old trunk filled with clothing and was shut in. Just ten days later some one in the garret heard pussy's feeble cry, and when the lid was lifted it had barely strength enough to crawl out.

It had torn the clothing in the trunk all to pieces in its clawings and had gnawed the sides nearly through in several places. But perhaps the most singular circumstance was found in the manner in which the cat took care of itself after securing liberty.

Milk and meat and water were set before it in liberal quantities, but the cat would not touch the meat and lapped the water and milk only a little with frequent rests, and this proceeding it continued through the whole afternoon. If that cat had been a human being it would have swallowed all that was placed before it at one gulp and then died.

A Hint For Boy Scouts.

Practically everywhere in the United States can be found scenes and landmarks of interest and importance in the Indian lore of the region. This opens to every boy scout troop a wide field of valuable study and experience.

With a little effort it should be possible for a group of scouts to gather the whole Indian history of its territory. There are numerous sources. Maybe the public or some private library contains a county history or a history of the state which gives the more important general facts. Then from old inhabitants the local story can be pieced together.

A scout troop will find a lot of fun and excitement on hiking or camping expeditions by re-enacting the Indian stories of the country.—Chicago Tribune.

Potatoes May Be Used to Supplement Wheat Flour

Mashed potatoes may be substituted for part of the flour generally used in making biscuit, dumplings, muffins, rolls, yeast bread, and doughnuts, according to a reading-course lesson entitled "Potatoes in the Dietary," recently issued by the New York State College of Agriculture.

Freshly cooked potatoes that have been forced through a fine strainer should be used in this case, so it is stated; cold left-over potatoes may be used, though, with less pleasing effect. Recipes are given showing the proportions of flour to use with the potatoes and other ingredients, and the following are quoted:

MUFFINS—4 tablespoonfuls butter; 4 tablespoonfuls sugar; 1 egg; 1 cupful potatoes; 1 cupful flour; 4 teaspoonfuls baking powder; salt; 1 cupful.

Cream the butter and the sugar; add the egg which has been well beaten, then the potatoes; and mix these ingredients thoroughly. Sift the flour, the baking powder, and the salt together, and add them and the milk to the mixture alternately. Bake the muffins in greased gem pans for from twenty-five to thirty minutes.

DOUGHNUTS—4 tablespoonfuls butter; 1 cupful sugar; 2 eggs; 1 cupful potatoes; 1 cupful milk; 3 teaspoonfuls baking powder; spices, if desired; flour, enough to make soft dough.

Cream the butter; add the sugar, the eggs, and the potatoes. Then add the milk, and sift in the dry ingredients. Turn the dough out on a floured board. Pat and roll it into a sheet one-half inch thick. Cut out rings with a doughnut cutter, and fry them in deep fat.

Other recipes for cooking potatoes are given in this publication as well as a general discussion of the food values of potatoes and their cost as compared with flour and bread.

In "Making Cake.—Part II," another reading-course lesson issued by the college, the following recipe is given for using mashed potatoes in cake:

POTATO CHOCOLATE CAKE—4 eggs; 2 cupfuls sugar; 1 cupful hot mashed potatoes; ½ cupful milk; 2 cupfuls flour; 1 cupful chopped nut meats; 3½ teaspoonfuls baking powder; 2 square chocolate, melted; 2-3 cupful shortening; 1 teaspoonful cinnamon; ½ teaspoonful cloves; 1 teaspoonful grated nutmeg.

Break the eggs into a mixing bowl without separating the whites and the yolks, and beat them. Add the sugar, and the potatoes, and beat this mixture thoroughly. Add the milk, and then the flour, which has been mixed and sifted with the baking powder, and the spices, and beat the mixture again. Add the melted fat, which should be barely melted and warm, not partially cooked and hot. Beat the mixture thoroughly before pouring it into the cake pan. This recipe makes two loaves of cake that will keep moist for some time.

Any residents of New York State may obtain these reading-course lessons by applying to the state college of agriculture, Cornell university, Ithaca, New York.

ROUND ABOUT

Charles William MacCord, professor emeritus of the Stevens Institute of Technology, and a noted draughtsman, died at his home in Hoboken, N. J., Tuesday, in his eightieth year. He became draughtsman for Capt. John Ericsson in 1859 and drew the plans for the monitor thot conquered the Confederate ironclad Merrimac. He joine the faculty of Stevens Institute in 1871.

Count Zeppelin's secretary is reported to have made the following statement to a representative of the Constance Narhrichten: "Our air fleet now comprises 1,366 units, of which 36 are dirigibles. We have had far heavier losses than anticipoted, nine dirigibles having been put out of action since the beginning of the war. But the destroyed units have been replaced by new types, armed with long range cannon and mitrailleuses. By July 15 we are to deliver 15 airships of a greatly perfected type, each being armored and capable of carrying two tons of explosive. With these we shall be able to undertake safely the London expedition in the thickest fogs and on the blackest nights. We shall employ a new process of causing atmospheric perturbations, which will make it impossible for enemy machines to cross German lines without dropping like flies."

That the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquor in England will become a Government monopoly is the assertion made by a Government organ. This statement confirms in part the forecast of the Government plan published severeal ays ago in an opposition paper, which declared that the program contemplated the prohibition of all liquors except light beer, which could be manufactured by the Government.

There is absolutely no restriction placed on the working hours of women in canneries in California, Oregon and Washington, where women vote.

Governor Whitman has signed the bill amending the Penal lLaw by permitting any citizen over 21 years of age, who is a householder, to keep a revolver in his home. Under the Sullivan law no person was permitted to own a revolver unless he obtained a permitf rom a justice of the peace or a police magistrate.

In view of the good work done for Old Eli's university team its students may be pardoned for reviving the song, "It's a Way We Have at Old Yale."

The settlement of the Wilhelmina case appears to be a victory of considerable proportions for the owners of the cargo. The inference is drawn that the British didn't care to have the case argued in a prize court, as there was a possibility of the decision going against the Government. At the beginning of the proceedings the owners of the cargo made the proposition which the Government has occepted.

At Coney Island hereafter all stands containing food must be protected from dirt. Glasses must be washed in two waters, hot and cold. Doors and windows must be screened. Circus lemonade is barred.

What Are the Real Figures;

Proving half a truth is a dangerous proposition even for a Postmaster General. Mr. Burleson is endeavoring to show that the railroads are paid more to carry parcel post packages than they are to carry express company packages. He selects 100 pounds as the sample package with which to make comparisons. Chairman Peters of the Railroad Committee replies by showing that if one-pound packages had been used as the unit instead of 100-pound packages, the railroads would be found to get 4½ times as much pay from the express companies as from the United States mail. Since in actual practice small packages are far more common than 100-pound parcels, for the Postmaster General to select only bulky bundles is hardly the fair way to compile reliable statistics. Ultimately the public pays for hauling all the mails. Ultimately, also the public owns the railroads and pays al the express charges.

It is puerile to juggle with facts so easily susceptible of absolute proof as the parcel post and express company rates. The people who foot all the bills do not want any guessing from President Peters of the Long Island Railroad. They do not want any half truths from Postmaster General Burleson. What they do want are the exact facts, so that an intelligent opinion can be formed. If, as Mr. Burleson contends, the railroads are operpaid, the public is entitled to know why and how much. If they are underpaid, as the railroad officials insist, then all fair-minded Americans would like to have an explanation from Washington.—Phila. Ledger.

Hyphenated Americans

Col. Roosevelt publishes in the Metropolitan magazine his views on German-American citizens. This paper has seldom been in agreement with Col. Roosevelt in recent years. In this disagreement The Times has not stood alone. His ambition to be king, his overwhelming desire to run things at any cost—but why enumerate? The public knows well why there have been honest differences with the colonel.

In his recent magazine articles, however, he has assumed the role which he should have taken on immediately following his presidency. He is remaining quietly at Oyster Bay, writing books and magazine articles and in this way giving the public the result of his long experience as a statesman and the conclusions on public questions of a man of exceptionally keen intellect and penetrating mind.

The Times is glad to join with many other papers in commending Col. Roosevelt's position on German-American citizenship. "I stand for the American citizen of German birth or descent," declares Mr. Roosevelt "precisely as I sstand for any other man, but I do not stand at all for the German-American or any other kind of hyphenated American."

To employ a word of the street there is much bunk in all this talk in congress and elsewhere in which men declare they are German-Americans. We might as well hear of the English-Americans or French-Americans or Austro-Americans. They have no legal status as German-Americans, they should have no popular recognition as such. When they become Americans they are Americans and nothing more. Citizens of German birth generally recognize this, but there are a number of prominent Germans in the country, who are agitators, the Bernstorffs, Dernburgs and the like, who have a purpose in stirring up this so-called German-American talk. It is injurious to our citizenship, in no way helpful to the cause of Germany and of no other good purpose.

Showers of Meteors.

The most brilliant display of meteors ever seen in the United States was on Nov. 13, 1866. The shower commenced about 11:30 p. m., with the appearance at brief intervals of single meteors; then they came in twos and threes, steadily and rapidly increasing in number till 1:30 a. m., when no fewer than fifty-seven appeared in one minute. The shower ceased about 4 a. m. Other notable star showers occurred on Nov. 12, 1799; Nov. 13, 1832; Nov. 14, 1867; Nov. 16, 1868, and Nov. 27, 1872.

All Play Runs Broken

Poor Jones got in a trance
And ceased from being sporty;
His woke, by some mischance,
In nineteen hundred-forty.
Oh, how the world was changed
In virtue and in flaw!
He thought himself deranged
Until this sign he saw:
"Again today that serial play,
The Case of Harry Thaw!"

Said Jones, "Am I advanced
Too greatly in my date,
And was I but entranced
One day from twelve to eight?"
"Oh, no," they said, "you've slept
Years twenty-five away,
And still we've daily kept
Exhibiting our play:
This show appeals in fifty reels—
The Case of Thaw today!"

"Pshaw!" said the Rip-like one;
"You're fooling me, I know.
D'ye mean this show has run
Since nineteen-six or so?"
They answered: "Yes, indeed;
We put it on each year,
And people come with speed
Whene'er our signs appear:
We have [illegible] that's sure to thrill'm—

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE SLOGAN CHOSEN

E. M. Doty, 358 Park st., has been adjudged the winner in the contest for the slogan of the Chamber of Commerce. The judges, L. G. Adams, W. E. McCormick and W. C. Morgan were in session late yesterday afternoon and, after long and careful deliberation, decided Mr. Doty's slogan was unquestionably the best.

Mr. Doty is now traveling in the West and will be quite agreeably surprised when he arrives home to find the prize awaiting him.

It is quite probable that the slogan will be printed in a few days upon the letterhead of the Chamber.

Just remember to say to your Out-of-town friends, "Fulton suits us, it would you."

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL

BEAUTY AND UTILITY IN TOWN BACK YARD FARMS.

Cover the Ugly, Useless Surfaces With Crops of Vegetables and Flowers.

The problem of combining some semblance of design with the uses to which the average city back yard is put is a difficult one. Consider the acres of waste land and the countless wasted opportunities in those sad, hot, dusty back yards. Think of the tons of delicious vegetables they might have raised, the lovely flowers.

Here are suggestions for the planting of very small yards. A garden 25 by 60 feet of lawn, shrubs and flowers may be made, the whole completely hidden from the street by heavy planting in a corner. Another may be 37½ by 60 feet and have a small cold frame at one side. In the cold frame can be raised twenty-four tomato plants that later go against the north fence, the earliest crops of lettuce, radishes and onions and the first planting of sweet corn and cucumbers. Six dwarf fruits trees, a clump of shrubs at the end of the grass walk and a bench make an attractive outlook from the back porch.

A delightful flower and vegetable garden can be achieved in a planting space 30 by 90 feet by dividing them with a pergola. Suppose there is a long walk down the middle of the yard. It will seem less long because of the little rustic pergola dividing flower from vegetable garden. Grass surrounded by flowers and shrubs would be employed to make the little flower garden in front of the pergola restful and beautiful, an outdoor room of great charm. The pergola itself should have grapevines trained over it.

Behind it would come the biggest outdoor workshop imaginable, the vegetable garden. At the right an asparagus bed, if the bed is properly cultivated and fertilized. Peppers, eggplant or cauliflower can be grown between the rows of asparagus. Against the fence would be two rows of tomatoes (even in a small garden one must grow many of them, they are so satisfactory), lettuce, radishes and onions, six hills of rhubarb and the cold frame. At the left, Swiss chard, beans, three hills of cucumbers and sweet corn—a quarter of the garden in sweet corn, the most delicious vegetable in the garden.—Chicago Herald.

TOWN EXTENDS "GLAD HAND"

All of Asbury Park's Citizens, Young and Old, Join Reception Committee.

Hereafter when the visitor to Asbury Park, N. J., gets off the train he will not be met by a self appointed joint committee representing the jitney bus interests, the associated peanut venders, college pennant barkers, post card dealers with six views of the ocean for 5 cents, and such people. The town is now going to be made hospitable, cheerful, genial, interesting and different, for the mayor has ordered it. The genial mood was released for immediate publication by the mayor, C. E. F. Hetrick, says the New York Evening Post.

Mr. Herrick has organized the Glad Hand society, "in which all the citizens of Asbury Park, high and low, young and old, are charter members." The badge of the society is a celluloid button about half an inch in diameter, with "Ask Me" in white letters on a vermilion background in the middle. Around the outside it says, "Asbury Park, N. J., Glad Hand Committee."

"Co-operation for general good is being freely secured," according to the mayor. But this must be a press agent's slip, as co-operation for general good is only found in things fundamentally gloomy, like sociological surveys, where nothing meets with approval. The Asbury Park movement, remember, is one of scintillating smiles and cheerful chinnings.

Mayor Hetrick has lent the movement his own personal slogan, "There's no frown in our town." This was translated (somewhat freely) from a Persian poet, the same who wrote "There's no use talkin', we like Weehawken," and "Stop in Jersey City a while somebody there is sure to smile."

"Already the effect is magical," says the mayor. Ministers have preached sermons pointing out that all visitors to Asbury Park should be welcomed with a smile and be asked to come back.

When You Plant a Hedge.

When you plant a hedge do plant it all about your place. Don't decide that you want a screen from the street, a wind shield on a north side or a Chinese wall to hide your back neighbor's chicken yard and then leave the other three sides unplanted. Be generous. Plant all four boundary lines, and you will be rewarded when the hedge has had a bit of time to grow by finding our most intimate sense of home getting a foothold in your out of doors.

Then, too, don't go in for a variety of hedges. Settle upon one that will be best for you all around. There are exceptions to this rule, as to every other, but they don't apply to the side and front hedges of a place being of different material. They apply to the planting of informal borders of shrubbery at the back of the lot and along the sides, to the special planting of steep front terrace slopes and to dying without a hedge along the front.—Delineator.

HEDGE FENCES HELP TO MAKE TOWN ATTRACTIVE.

Native Material, Especially the Barberry, High in Public Favor.

There is a distinct trend of fashion in planting, says Antoinette Rehmann Perrett in an article on "Beauty For Every Dooryard" in the Delineator. There was a time when the style was all for queer, expensive, foreign things, for single specimens planted in a heterogeneous way about the lawn and for circles, crescents and stars of bedding plants.

Now we have grown in good taste and take more to native material, to massing shrubbery and to hardy borders of perennial flowers with the seeds of annuals generously interspected for summer bloom. We use more shrubs and more flowers than we did some years ago, but they are, on the whole, much less expensive in their actual cost as well as in their upkeep.

If you live near a factory which belches coal smoke you will be well on the way to success if you plant unclipped Regel's privet, Japanese barberry, cockspur thorns, oriental plane and Norway maple. There is a playground in a certain factory district, the most beautiful small playground that I have seen, which is made up almost entirely of these, with Boston ivy on wire netting to form the screens and geraniums planted in oblong borders for the flowers.

A barberry hedge should be left unclipped. It has a kind of undulating grace of outline that is a vital part of its beauty. It is highly recommended because it does well almost everywhere—in poor and sandy soils, between houses, near factories, in all sorts of difficult positions—and yet it is a bush of aristocratic habits, of refined charm the year round.

ROCHESTER'S FINE BRIDGE.

This bridge was constructed in 1910-11. It is built of Portland cement concrete with a facing of white Portland and crushed Barre granite. The balusters were made in cast iron molds and set in place, the hand rail being cast about the upper ends of said balusters. The bridge is ninety feet long over all and the floor has a camber of twelve inches. The span is forty-eight feet and is a semiellipse with eight foot rise. The level of the water shown is one foot below the spring line and is the future low pool level of the barge canal, which crosses the Genesee river at grade near the mouth of this creek and but a short distance east of the bridge.

The construction consists of six parallel arches of structural steel buried in a rib of concrete sixteen inches thick, with floor slab and sidewalk slabs superposed. This sidewalk has a metal edge which answers for a curb, and a macadam pavement is carried over the bridge. The width of roadway is eighteen feet and the sidewalks are each five feet wide.

Owing to the location, the bridge rests upon two piers and the shore ends of the bridge are, including the steel ribs, cantilevered over said piers. The structure is monolithic in that no expansion joints are allowed except at the ends of the hand rail where they enter the newel posts.

The earth foundation received a severe trial in the flood which occurred March 28, 1913. At that time only the center of the deck was out of water, but the bridge withstood the strain.

Vessel Hoisted a Parliamentary Flag, Then Lowered Boats and Sent Protest Against Being Attacked in Neutral Waters

London, Friday.—The sinking of the German cruiser Dresden by a British cruiser squadron in Chilian waters resulted yesterday in the British government offering "a full and ample apology" to Chili for the incident. A "white paper" containing the texts of the communications between the two governments was published last night.

The note delivered by the Chilian Minister to Great Britain says the Dresden dropped anchor in Cumberland bay (Juan Fernandez Island) on March 9 and asked permission to remain eight days for the purpose of repairing her engines, which were said to be out of order. The Governor refused the request, as he considered it unfounded, and ordered the Captain to leave the bay within twenty-four hours. As the order was not complied with, the Captain of the Dresden was informed his ship was interned.

When the Britsh squadron appeared, on March 14, the Governor was proceeding to the cruiser Glasgow to inform the British officers of the steps he had taken, but he had to turn back, as the British ships opened fire on the Dresden, aboard which a flag of truce already had been hoisted, and called on her Captain to surrender. The Captain then gave orders to blow up the magazine of the Dresden.

"This act of hostility committed in Chilian territorial waters by a British naval squadron," says the Chilian Minister, "has painfully surprised my government."

Continuing, the Minister says that had the officer in command of the British squadron received the Governor and been informed that the Dresden was interned, he was convinced, "the British commander would not have opened fire on her and brought about a situation which constrains the Chilian government in defence of its soverign rights to formulate a most energetic protest."

After referring to hospitality shown to British ships in Chilian waters and to the long friendship between the two peoples, the Minister says:

"Nothing could be a more painful surprise to us than to see our exteremely cordial attidue repaid by an act which bears unfortunately all the evidence of contempt for our soverign rights, although it is probable nothing was further from the minds of those by whom it was unthinkly committed."

The British government in its reply expresses regret that a misunderstanding arose, and adds: "In the facts as stated in the communication of the Chilian Minister, the British government is prepared to offer a full and ample apology to the Chilian government."

It is, however, said that according to the British information the Dresden "had not accepted internment and still had her colors flying and her guns trained."

The British reply continues:—"If this is so, and if there were no means available for enforcing the decision of the Chilian authorities to intern the Dresden, she might obviously, had not the British ships taken action, have escaped, again to attack British commerce."

It is added:—"The captain of the Glasgow probably assumed, especially in view of the past action of the Dresden, that she was defying the Chilian authorities and abusing Chilian neutrality and was only waiting for a favorable opportunity to sally out and attack British commerce again.

"In view of the time it would take to clear up the circumstances and because of the Chilian communication, the British government do not wish to qualify the apology that they now present to the Chilian government."

GERMANS AND RUSSIANS IN ALL-DAY BAYONET FIGHT

London, Friday.—Frederick Rennet telegraphs to the Daily News from Petrograds:—

"Genera von Litzinger's army delivered a tremendous counter attack against the Russian left wing in the Carpathians on Wednesday. A large force of picked Bavarian infantry attempted to storm the Russian hill positions south of Koziomoka, dominating the Munacks road. The Russians advanced from the trenches and met the attack half way. A fierce bayonet battle continued on the slippery hillsides until after dark.

"The Germans were driven southeast with terrible losses, and the Russians moved forward their general position here.

"A similar attempt made by the Austrians on the extreme east was immediately crushed. A continuous and heavy battle is now raging from Uzok westward, and the Russian columns are said to be beating back the Austro-Germans from the southern fringe of the Carpathians to the plateau."

"Inu West Galicia, near Oiezkowice, on the Biala, a Russian attack made early on the morning of the 1t4h failed.

"On the heights on both sides of Wysock, on the Stry, strong Russian forces attacked our positions, but were repulsed after severe fighting. In a counter attack we captured an important height, taking three officers and 661 men prisoners.

"In the remainder of the Carpathians, except in some sectors, there were only artillery engagements."

LATE WAR BULLETINS

FRENCH

Paris, via London.—The following official statement was issued by the War Office today:

"To the north of Arras we gained a brilliant success, which eclipses that of last month. The upper spothouse of Notre Dame de Lorette was carried with the bayonet by our troops, who now hold the southeastern slopes as far as the edge of the woodland fringe of Allain-St. Nicolas.

"We took 140 prisoners, who included several officers, and eight trench mortars and two machine guns.

"At Thiepval and La Boisselle, in the region of Albert, the enemy attempted two attacks, which were immediately checked.

"In the Argonne, at Bagatelle, our artillery demolished one of the principal German trenches. Further to the east, at La Neurissons, we repulsed an attack.

"At Les Eparges the enemy delivered three counter attacks during the night of April 14-15 with the object of retaking the eastern salient. He was repulsed and suffered heavy losses. At noon he violently bombarded the position, but did not attack.

"At Montmare Wood we repulsed a counter attack and on the ground taken on the 13th we continued the inventory of our booty, which included two quick firers, two trench mortars, a machine gun, severel hundred rifles and thousands of cartridges and grenades.

"A German aviator dropped bombs on the hospital at Mourmelon. By way of reprisal for the bombardment of Nancy by a Zeppelin one of our aeroplanes dropped five bombs on the German headquarters. All the projectiles fell on the buildings, in which the imperial staff were installed at Mezieres and Charlesville. We also bombarded the station of Freiburg im Breisgau.

"Near La Boiselle our heavy artillery completely wrecked German shelters and trenches.

"On April 14, the day following the replse by our artillery of the counter attack at Les Eparges made by the enemy debouching from Combres, the Germans bobarded our positions, but didnot attack.

"The extension of our front at the Ailly Wood, already reported, was maintained against a counter attack. Our progress rendered us masters of a portion of the principal German trench, and to the north of this trench also gained for us a section of ground 400 yards long and 100 yards deep. The new trench gained by us near the [illegible]-Flirey high road remains in [illegible] possession.

"[illegible]ear Fey-en-Haye a bombardment [illegible] carried on, but not followed up [illegible]n infantry attack.

"[illegible]n the Forest of Le Pretre, after [illegible]ng on in the course of the thir[illegible]eth part of the German lines, we [illegible]tained our gains yesterday and [illegible]ped a counter attack by machine [illegible].

"[illegible]n Alsace, to the north of La [illegible]che, we made progress amount[illegible] to fifteen hundred yards in the [illegible]ction of Schnepfen-Riethkopf."

GERMAN

Berlin by wireless).—The German War Office today gave out a report on the situation in the Carpathians, dated Monday, April 12, which reads as follows:

"TheR ussian attempt with the army thatwas before Perm[illegible] to force the invasion of Hungary has resulted in failure. The endeavors to get through the Jupkow and East Duklapasses were not successful, and the Russian attacks at Soztropke and Felsornebeurz have definitely come to an end. The Russians, consequently, are attacking further to the East, but here also they were repulsed near Koxiowa with heavy losses.

"The attacking strength of the Russians has visibly lessened."

The General War Office report follows:

"Between the Meuse and the Moselle there was yesterday nothing more than isolated engagements.

"French attacks near Marcheville, in and around the forest of Le Pretre, northeast of Manonviller and south of Hartmans-Weilerkopf, resulted in failure.

"On the eastern front the situation remains unchanged."

RUSSIAN

Petrograde, via London.—The official communication issued by the War Office today says:

"At Ossowetz on Wedneday the enemy ineffectually attempted an advance on the Russian position.

"[illegible]he direction of Mlawa we were [illegible]ul in outpost fights.

"[illegible]he left bank of the Bzura [illegible] outposts occupied Koundzi[illegible] Sochachew region.

The Fulton Board of Public Works held a special session last night at the City Hall. The most important business of the meeting was the introduction of a resolution to the effect that the city deed the Oswego Falls Pulp & Paper Co. the section of Pratt st. from First st. to the Barge Canal. The resolution was passed and the street will be closed in the near future. In return the Oswego Falls company deeded to the City an equal amount of land on Division street further south.

There was a great deal of speculation this morning in regard to the action. In order that the matter might be understood thoroughly a Times' reporter interview President Paddock of the Paper Co. and accertained the reason for the resolution of the Board of Public Works. Mr. Paddock said that the land was asked of the City some time ago, but that the Mayor and City Attorney did not believe, the company should get the land unless the City received something in return. The paper company owns both sides of Pratt st. at present and land to the middle of the street. The city loses no docking facilities, according to Mr. Paddock, as the State deeded the paper company all the land along the Barge Canal from Pratt to Division st. The company wishes to enlarge its plant this summer and the ne wbunilding will be built on Pratt st. Mr. Paddock also stated that the land given the city in return for Pratt st. exceeded in dimensions the land taken by the company.

It is the purpose of the Oswego Falls Paper Co. to begin building an extnsive addition to the present plant. It is the idea of Mr. Paddock that the land acquired by the City in the trade will afford a splendid site for any industry that may come to this city through the activity of the re-organized Chamber of Commerce.

Senator Brown's Bill Provides for Police Captain and Salaries

Indignation Aroused by News That Amendment Proposes to Place Mayor and Aldermen Upon a Salary Basis

Great interest is manifest in political circles in regard to a bill just presented in the Legislature by Senator Brown of Watertown. The bill went up for its first reading Monday night and was referred to the Committee on Cities.

The measure authorizes an amendment to the city charter of Fulton whereby the Common Council is authorized, if it so desires, to stipulate a salary to be paid to the Mayor and the Aldermen. The salary shall be set two months before the election of a mayor and a board of aldermen and the council is given full control of the amount of salary. By the two months' clause, it would be impossible for an incumbent board to set its own salary, but it could set the salary of the new board. The bill also permits the council to have a policeman for police-captain. The bill also provides for licensing pool, billiard and bowling parlors.

By the new bill the city chamberlain may borrow money sufficient to meet the needs of any emergency which endangers life and property. The common council, by a two-thirds vote, may direct the city chamberlain to borrow the necessary funds. The amount borrowed must not exceed $20,000. If the amount does not exceed $5,000 it can be included in the next annual tax levy and if over $5,000, it can either be included in the tax levy or the city may issue bonds, according to the discretion of the council.

People conversant with Fulton politics see the power behind the throne in this measure and freely predict that the bill will be traced back to a Fulton source before many moons have passed. Senator Brown is sponsoring the bill, but it is generally understood that some one in the city is in back of it.

It is rumored that the bill will meet opposition of the strongest sort in Fulton from a prominent local body of men. Nothing definite has been announced yet, but if the rumored plans are carried through the offices of Mayor and Aldermen in the city will remain positions of honor without renumeration for many years to come.

Five years ago a similar bill was introduced, that permitted the regulation of the salaries of city attorney, city judge, chief of police and other offices. At that time the city attorney was getting $300 a year—and after the passage of the bill his salary was boosted to $900. The city judge received a $400 increase. Other salaries were also increased.

"AMERICA PUTS HEART ABOVE ALMIGHTY DOLLAR"

—Sir Gilbert Parker

London, Friday.—"The almighty heart is still stronger in the United States than the almighty dollars.

"Americans understand this war even better than we do."

These sentences are from an address delivered last night by Sir Gilbert Parker, who paid high tribute to President Wilson and the American people at a largely attended meeting of the Pilgrims, held at the Savoy, on the fiftieth anniversary of the death of Lincoln.

He said that since the war began there has breathed through the official actions of the American government in relation to this country the spirit of Abraham Lincoln, and no higher tribute can be paid any government than that.

Sir Gilbert declared that the vast majority of the people of this country profoundly believed that, if it could choose, the American nation would not have this war if it meant a tenfold increase to its prosperity.

"Never," he said, "has a neutral nation had such problems as the United States has faced with a temperateness, courtesy and moderation for which this country cannot be too grateful.

"The American government has pursued the only course possible to a nation desirous of preserving its deservedly high reputation in the field of diplomacy. tI has been in true sympathy with the high mindedness and sensible idealism of the American people in regard to the great events of the world's history. It is not surprising, therefore, that all the combatants in this great war desire at least America's good opinion.

"In the interests of stable civilization it is essential that a steadying, wholesome, dispassionate, honorable influence shall be used in the interests of the whole world, particularly the interests of small nations, when the end of the war comes."

Sir Gilbert praised the work of the American Ambassadors in connection with the prisoners and declared that the editorials in the American newspapers were a credit to the journalists and their publications, and showed that "Americans understand this war even better than we do."

"I rejoice," he added, "that at least one great nation has a population at peace, is not building up a debt of thousands of millions or living on credit, and is free from the direct disturbance of finance caused by the peremptory and formidable necessities of war," and in closing exclaimed:—

"The almighty heart is still stronger in the United States than the almighty dollar."

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

SUCH IS LIFE.

WHILE one-half, bejabers! toils steady and labors, the rest of the world lolls in ease. And when we feel happy, our neighbors are scrappy and do just about as they please. And, gosh! ain't it funny? Some people have money and others can't scare up a dime. Some mortals are lucky, while others, equal plucky, lose out ev'ry dodgasted time. Some laugh long and loudly—some strut with mien proudly and others are chucking the bluff. And folks that are healthy, quite seldom are wealthy, and healthy folks lack the green stuff. If half the world knoweth not what this half doeth—a funny old world it is sure. It's full of the toilers, the crooks and the spoilers—the honest, the rich and the poor. Now, why should a favored old guy, money savored, loll 'round in a big limousine? And why should another, his poor luckless brother, clean streets for a small stack of green? And why should a poet, a poor unwise "know it," write verse for the [illegible] squander the coin as they wander, and live in perpetual June? It does seem unequal; but hark to the sequel—it's time that I finished this rhyme. One lives by his working—the other, his shirking, and time will it be for all time.

Opinions

The "Movies" and Crime

Warden McKenty is right enough in advocating some form of a censorship for moving picture shows, but the reason he gives for arriving at his conclusion will hardly stand scrutiny. He says that "many of the convicts in Cherry Hill are there, indirectly, because of criminally suggestive motion pictures," and he believes it because "his men" at the penitentiary told him so. The warden cannot be a very deep psychologist if he does not know that "his men" are likely to tell him whatever they think will meet his preferences andw ishes for the moment. It is not so very long ago when the universal testimony of the convicts would have been very different, but the "movie" is the newest thing, and the very fact that it has been subjected to a censorship contributes to the notion that the "movies" incite to crime. Perhaps they do, sometimes, but no more so than the sensational dramas or the extremely yellow newspapers, and the penitentiary was uncomfortably filled long before the "movies" became a factor in everyday life. The power of suggestion is a formidable one and must be reckoned with by the penologist, but it is a mistake to exaggerate, and undue emphasis upon the evil effects of the moving picture is quite as unwise and overemphasis of their good points.—Public Ledger.

American-made Dyestuffs

While no doubt some ground exists for the anxiety of the hosiery manufacturers over the conditions created by the interruption of imports of dyestuffs from Germany, there is equally good ground for thinking that the capacity of this country for the production of the necessary material is underestimated and for the suspicion that some of the agitation on the subject is inspired more by solicitude for the German manufacturers and exporters than for the American textile workers who may be thrown out of work if the mills are forced to close down. If the same energy that is being displayed in the effort to induce Secretary Bryan to bring diplomacy to bear upon the problem should be employed in encouraging the American aniline industry, some permanent and valuable results might be obtained.

It is absurd to pretend that the chemists of this country are incapable of making dyestuffs. It is true that Germany has in the past monopolized the industry and that American capital is slow to enter the field because of uncertainty as to the permanence of the conditions which would justify the establishment of costly plants in this country. But even in the short period that has elapsed since the outbreak of the war there has been substantial progress here along these lines, materials are being produced in this country for which we were heretofore dependent upon imports and millions have been invested in plants which will before long supplay a portion at least of the dye materials required in America. Not to take account of these undisputed facts is to ignore the most interesting and promising factor of the whole question.—Phila. Public Ledger.

"WHO FEARS TO ASK," ETC.

Attention has been drawn to the fact that Wednesday's Fulton Patriot not only called the youthful Evening Times to account for allowing "Inquirer" and "Taxpayer" to ask a public question through its medium, but actually sat upon the "baby."

Why, yes, the insinuation that the editor is playing Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde with his readers is meant to be something more than just a "fatherly" interest in showing the editor the "error of his ways"—how much more is not easily fathomed. Indeed, it seems strange that The Evening Times should be given the sole credit for having sense enough, or interest enough, in public affairs, to ask a public question in a public way. Just why anybody should get angry is decidedly puzzling.

Firstly, cleanly, honest, upright motives cannot be "knocked;" secondly, questions show budding wisdom; thirdly, if "Taxpayer" and "Inquirer" choose to remain unknown it isn't necessary to deem them cowardly, "lepers," and "sadly lacking in manliness;" and, indeed, "rushing into public print" is a badly placed statement. John Doe and Tom Smith, both should have but a frank, honest answer to a public question put in a public way. The question and answer both concern taxpayers at large, so what's the difference who asks the question? The Evening Times will give the questioned officials the same courtesy in replying as the citizens who seek a plain answer to a plain question.

With all respect for the kindly admonitions of our esteemed contemporary The Patriot, we fail to see "the error of our ways," and shall continue to toot our "horn" for the ultimate good of Fulton, while we use that "hammer" to nail our convictions above the door—"Who fears to ask doth teach to be denied."

BATTER UP!

Last summer, when the war was a novelty, it ate into the baseball interest like a corroding acid. But baseball has had a long rest, a winter sleep, while during all the weary months that have elapsed since the Braves redeemed the season the war has been grinding out its grist of horrors, of national emotions and interminable controversies. We must all of us be sick of it. Now, then, begins the baseball revenge.

The stage seems particularly well set. The Giants have strengthened their organization with the addition of a first rate pitcher and third baseman, and their resolution with the recollection of last year's over-confidence. The Braves are better than ever with Sherwood Magee a member, and determined to prove their lasting power as champions. On these two teams much of the early interest centers. They, at least, promise a stirring battle for the pennant even if there be no surprise to complicate the plot.

With Mayor Mitchel's amateurish toss to Tesreau, therefore, a new alignment of the country's citizenry is effected. No longer is it a case of Germany but of the Braves against the field. The personality of the Kaiser pales before the expanding spirit of Stallings, and Kitchener becomes concealed behind McGraw, while hyphens fade and disappear, erased by the rooters' perspiration.

Casting Their Shadows Before

[The mother of a famous dancer says she knew her daughter was destined for terpsichorean celebrity because, when a little baby, she used to kick her feet.]

When Bryan first beheld the light—a bald and red and wrinkled mite—
He closed his eyes and uttered cries,
Denoting high ambition.
And as his father heard him yell, his manly breast began to swell
With pride and joy—he knew his boy
Would be a politician.

When Goethals was a babykin he'd dig his thumb into his chin
With wabbly jabs and wavering stabs
And queer and curious motions.
And thus his doting mother knew that,
when to man's estate he grew,
He'd dig the ditch at Colon which
Would join the roiling oceans.

When Jesse James was six months old he loved the sight of shining gold,
And every time he'd see a dime
He'd instantly demand it.
Which made his stricken mother sigh, for well she knew that by and by
Her darling one would buy a gun
And go and be a bandit.

A Happy Discovery

By RUTH GRAHAM

John Mason, a young man of fortune, devoted a great deal of his time and money to charitable work. He visited hospitals and not only inquired into things needed, but sat down beside patients, asked what he could do for them and occasionally chatted with one familiarly.

Mason was a man of liberal education and literary tastes. There was an old gentleman named Gorham in whom the young man became interested. Gorham having been in his younger days a publisher when magazines were exponents of literary productions and not advertising mediums. Gorham had published the writings of literary lights who flourished in the earlier part of the nineteenth century and had many interesting stories to tell concerning authors. To these Mason listened with great relish.

Gorham had in those days been wealthy and at the time of his greatest prosperity had ridden to and from his office. He had a good wife, but one thing he had not, children. The husband was so engrossed in his business that he did not miss the absence of offspring so much as his wife, who longed for a child and would not be comforted without one. Finally with her husband's consent she went to a foundling asylum and took therefrom a baby boy.

The clothing in which the child had been received was of the finest texture, and there was every indication that he had been born of refined parents. He was adopted by the Gorhams and brought up as their son, taking the name of his foster father, Henry Gorham. He became the idol of his foster mother, who lavished every attention upon him.

When the boy was becoming old enough to be of still more interest to the [illegible] suddenly disappeared. His nurse one morning left him on the porch in front of the house for a few minutes and when she returned he was gone. The foster parents spent no end of money to find him, but received no trace of him. The blow almost killed Mrs. Gorham. Her husband begged her to adopt another child, but she would not. Little Harry had wound himself around her heart and she would not, or rather felt that she could not, replace him with another.

In time misfortune came to the Gorhams. Henry Gorham, not content with his success in the publishing business, launched forth in various speculations. For a time he was successful; then several of them collapsed at once. His publishing business was carried down with them, and from affluence he and his wife fell into poverty. Then came old age, when men have neither the strength nor daring to begin anew. And lastly Henry Gorham fell ill with a lingering disease.

An old friend, an author, whom Gorham had launched on a successful career by his appreciation of his literary works and who had accumulated a small fortune provided an income for the old couple, which was barely sufficient to keep them in a small house and provide them with food and clothing. When Gorham fell ill he needed medical attendance and nursing, which he could get only at a hospital. He was removed to one, and his benefactor paid the additional expense.

One day John Mason on calling at the hospital found his old friend in great mental misery. The man who had been paying his way had died suddenly, and his widow had refused to continue his benefaction. Mason offered to stand in the place of the benefactor. His offer was a great relief to the invalid, who asked him to go and see his wife and tell her the good news.

Mason had not happened to meet Mrs. Gorham when she had called to see her husband. He acceded to the old man's request and, visiting the lady in her humble abode, begged her not to worry, assuring her that he would continue the income she and her husband had been receiving.

From the moment Mason entered Mrs. Gorham's presence her eyes were fixed upon his with a singular expression. He accompanied his offer with a smile, which intensified this look on the old lady's face. Throwing up her hands and her eyes at the same time, she exclaimed:

"Oh, heavens, how like Harry!"

Naturally Mason asked who was Harry and was told for the first time the story of her lost foster son. Mason listened with an interest far more intense than might have been expected. At the end of his recital he said musingly:

"Can it be possible that"—

He paused and on being asked to finish said that his mother had married without her father's consent. When a baby he had been left at a foundling asylum. His grandfather, after his father's and mother's death, which had occurred in quick succession, had traced him to the home and from there to the people who had adopted him. Fearing that he would not be given up, the grandfather employed persons to kidnap him.

Mason had no sooner told his story before he was clasped in his foster mother's arms.

The next day there was a great change in the condition of the Gorhams. They were removed to John Mason's home, where they received every comfort, attention and luxury, for John Mason had inherited a large fortune from his grandfather, whose [illegible] had [illegible]

The College of Forestry

Is Represented at the Panama Exposition at San Francisco

Last year the College of Forestry was assigned funds by the New York Panama Pacific Exposition Commission for the development of a small exhibit at the Fair at San Francisco. This exhibit, which consists of a number of models showing the virgin forest, the way it has been cut in the State and the methods to be used in reforestation are grouped in a part of the area occupied by the State Department of Agriculture in the New York State Building. Besides the models the College has large cases showing methods used in close utilization of timber in the State and also many pictures and transparencies. Mr. W. A. MacDonald, a forester from the college, is in charge of the exhibit at San Francisco and is giving several illustrated talks each day in connection with similar illustrated talks given by members of the State Department of Agriculture. The college believes that the State of New York is a great forest state and has a great future as a forest producing state and desires to have people who visit the New York State exhibit at San Francisco learn somehting of the importance of the forests of New York.

The State Ranger School at Wanakena, which is connected with the College of Forestry at Syracuse opened its fourth successful year the first Tuesday in March with 20 men from all parts of the State who will take a year of practical training in the school, fitting themselves for such positions as forest guards, rangers, tree planting experts and forest estate managers. Mr. G. A. Gutches, formerly district inspecor of forests of Saskatchewan, has just been brought in to take charge of the school and he will seek to make the school of especial service to the lumberman and forest owners of the State. Mr. Gutches will be assisted by Professor E. F. McCarthy who will be in charge of the instructional work at the school. Both director Gutches and Professor McCarthy are graduatess of the Forest School of the University of Michigan and both have had wide experience in forest work for the United States Government in the West. Besides the experience with the United States Forest Service, Mr. Gutches has spent three years in charge of very important lines of forest work in western Canada.

SYSTEMATIC TREE PLANTING

A new bulletin dealing with a very practical way with the subject of systematic tree planting has just been issued by The New York State College of Forestry at Syracuse University. This bulletin has been written to meet the increasing number of inquiries which the college is receiving from all parts of the State and regarding all phases of tree planting about home grounds and on streets. While the information given in the bulletin will meet especially the needs of New York State, the bulletin contains much matter of general interest and it should be at this season of the year especially valuable to those who wish to plant shade trees. It has been estimated that within the cities of New York there are 20,000 miles of streets capable of sustaining the growth of 25,000,000 shade trees which can be made worth $100,000,000 in increased property values. The bulletin dealing with systematic tree planting describes the value of street trees, tells when and how to plant and with these points well illustrated should be very helpful in increasing the amount of planting along the streets of the towns and cities of New York State.

Getting together is a begining. Staying together is progress. Working together is success. And so may the Greater Chamber of Commerce grow.

A greater Chamber of Commerce means more commerce and a greater Fulton. It is one of the big things that all should work and support.

Fortunately this country has not had to put Cuba on its feet again; but the lively little island's penchant for lotteries and prize fights is not encouraging.

Governor Fielder tells the politicians, "Don't fool the people." They don't and they can't. It's only that the people get indifferent and allow themselves to be robbed.

Now that the prize fight is won, we shall have a lot more of Kansas. But where will it break out next? It is an amazing pity that so fine a State with so many good people should be known only by its notorieties.

Judging form the present New York Legislature, the people of that State are not getting the worth of the cost of the last election, which topped the record at $2.50 for each vote polled, or a total of about $4,000.000. In addition to spending all the revenues in sight, the present legislators are going to call on the State for $12-000,000 extra, which will be raised by direct tax.

General d'Armade's 18-year-old son died a hero's death in action. The father wrote to a friend: "I have no need to tell you that it is a great pain, but we could offer to God and to France nothin gmore beautiful, nothing more pure and nothing more generous than that child. We are proud of him, but after the war we shall mourn him until death." This is fine and Spartan, but oh, the sorrow, the unutterable sorrow of it. We are getting hardened to the war, but its horror grows.

When Poland Drank Hard.

Poland was a great country for hard drinking in the old days. Its last king, Stanislaus II., was solemnly warned by the grand hetman, Branicki, that he must never expect to become popular unless he got drunk at least twice a week. Pan Kemaresewski, who could empty a bucketful of champagne at a draft without noticeable consequences, once in company with Pan Sosiejkowski, high chamberlain of Volhynia, disposed of a whole butt of old Hungarian wine at a single sitting. One held his beaker under the bunghole until it was full and then drank while the other filled his beaker, and so, turn and turn about, they achieved the feat.—London Chronicle.

OLD WAYS CHANGE FAST

Topics of Conversation Today Displaces "Emptiness"

A few weeks ago a New York woman happened to be in Chicago, and, as was her custom, her day's work over, she fought her way through the bumping crowds—for they don't keep to the right and left on the sidewalks of Chicago—and took the suburban train to her old Kenwood boarding house to spend the night.

On the train her attention was attracted by two women on the seat opposite. "It is a pity to put two such good men in the field against one bad one! It might result in the bad one's getting in." All the way to Kenwood occasional fragments of conversation reached her ears,, colored generously with reference to the good and the bad. What were they? Religious workers? No; they did not look it.

Political Discussion on Every Side

The New York woman arrived at her old boarding house just in time for dinner and slipped into a vacant seat at her own table. She was soon greeting the doctor, the kindergartner, the dancing instructor, the decorator and several newcomers since her last visit. Turning toward the dancing teacher with some polite remark about the newest step, she saw the dancer deep in an animated discussion with the interior decorator over the necessity of subscribing to the organiation of some political party in order to do effective political work.

On her other side the school teach- was explaining to her neighbor a propositipn that seemed somehow strangely familiar, to the effect that some one had made a serious blunder in putting two good men in the field against one bad one, for if the good vote were divided it might result in a victory for the bad one.

After sitting quietly some time the New York woman glanced toward the doctor at the head of the table; but she was explaining to the librarian and the kindergartner that the county hopital would be under the Board of Health and it would not be like voting a large bond issue into the hands of a lot of grafters.

No Longer One of Them

The New York woman sank back in her chair and drank her coffee in silence. What had come over the old boarding house? As a rule, she had no trouble in making herself agreeable, and here she was a general favorite. But all her efforts atp leasantry had failed humiliatingly. Suddenly she was no longer one of them!

However, she waited politely for the rest of the table to finish, her chagrin perhaps showing a little on her face in spite of herself. For as the others rose the doctor glanced toward her and exclaimed: "Oh! don't you know? We are all going to vote on Tuesday, and it is so important not to make a mistake!"

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

In Butte, Montana, according to an Associated Press Dispatch, the woman vote was heavy at the muncipal election April 6. The city which had had a Socialist government for your years went Democratic.

In Iowa the Legislature has fixed the June primaries of next year as the date on which the question of woman sucrage will be referred to the voters.

In New York State in May Mrs. Harriet Stanton Blatch, president of the Women's Political Union, assisted by Miss Jane Pincus, will hold a series of schools in sixteen important towns and cities at which women will be taught their duties as watchers at the polls next November in the interest of a fair count on the woman suffrage amendment to the state constitution.

The Boston Post on March 31 printed an article by Judge Snell of Tacoma questioning the success of woman suffrage in the State of Washington.

On April 10 W. W. Seymour, exmayor of Tacoma in a signed statement, also in a Boston paper, took up in detail the points made by Judge Snell and cited facts well known to Washington residents in rebuttal. In conclusion he said:

"If woman suffrage had not been a pronounced success in the State of Washington, the men in our neighboring states, who are thoroughly conversant with all these matters, would not have voted for the imposition of the same conditions in their respective states, as they have done."

In Hartford on April 7 the Connecticut House of Representatives defeated woman suffrage. According to the press report the chief arguments against the bill were that women did not want to vote, would not vote if they could, and would incline toward socialism.

Over the wires the day before had come the news that a quarter of a million women had voted in Chicago; that the Socialist ticket had polled less than 30,000 votes and elected bpt to aldermen. But who ever heard of solid facts influencing anti-progress orators?

The Woman's Jounal calls attention to the fact that woman suffrage and mother's pensions went together to defeat in the Maine House of Representatives and together to victory in the Maine Senate. From which it concludes that men who vote against woman suffrage oppose it as part of the whole scheme of social progress which they are too conservative to support. Votes or pensions for mothers, both look alike to them.

The Fulton Evening Times

Fulton's Logical Newspaper and Advertising Medium

The Fulton Evening Times has the largest evening circulation of any newspaper circulating in this city—not even excepting one single Syracuse daily. It is almost greater than that of the two Syracuse evening papers combined. Its sworn statement on April 1, 1915, was as follows:

"Average number of copies of each issue of this publication sold or distributed, through mails or otherwise, to paid subscribers during the six months preceding the date above, 2150.

"G. WILLIAM BRAUN.

"Sworn to and subscribed before me this 1st day of April, 1915.

"A. T. JENNINGS,
Notary Public.

A NEW ERA IS COMING

Beginning with next Monday morning The Evening Times will put on board a circulation campaign that will win for the paper a PAID circulation list of more copies than ARE SHOWN in the above sworn statement.

The Evening Times has engaged the services of a man experienced in circultation work upon large city daily newspapers. He comes to us with all the qualifications necessary to give service to the publishers, the people of Fulton and, last but not least, to the advertising patrons of this newspaper.

NOTE THIS ALSO

The advertising rate of The Fulton Evening Times is lower per inch per thousand circulation (not all paid), than that of any other daily newspaper entering the homes of Fulton.

THE PUPILS OUTCLASSED THEMSELVES IN WORK TO AID CITY INSTITUTIONS

Last Night's Carnival Brought Out Rare Talent, Showing also That the Pupils Have Been Under Careful, Painstaking Supervision of Faculty Members

The School Carnival for the benefit of the Public Library and the Athletic Association of Fulton High School, staged at the Quirk last night by pupils representing every school in the city, was a tremendous and unparralelled success from every point of view. For three hours the pupils; from the kindergarten grades up to the High school classes, entertained an audience of doting papas, fond mammas, and interested relatives and visitors. The entire performance would do credit to finished thespians and the work of those taking part relected great credit upon the teachers who coached and directed the performance.

Every seat in The Quirk was occupied when the curtain rose and before the performance was half over, the aisles and the rear of the theatre were also filled to capacity. Startling innovations, never expected by the audience from the performers, particularly those from the lower grades, occasioned round after round of applause and amply repaid those in charge for their work in drilling the various numbers.

First violin, Mrs. L. R. Owens.
First violin, Harold Gillespie.
Second violin, Evadine Austin.
Second violin, Joseph Keenan.
Coronet, Prof. Jesse A. Lawton.
Flute, Earl Lawton.
Flute, Albert Sanford.
Clarinet, Ralph Ferguson.
'Cello, Phillips Calkins.
Drums, Richard Murphy.
Piano, Miss Katherine Sullivan.

"Sailing" by Paolo Posti, and "Lady Moon," by Edmunds, the latter number without accompaniment, was sung by the high school girls' chorus. Miss E. Alta Thompson directed and the girls' voices blended perfectly particularly in the Tosti number. The chorus will sing the "Morning Invitation" by Myers and the "Slumber Song" by Veazie tonight. The chorus comprised:

Sopranos—Hazel Dunton, Medora Halstead, Marion Lake, Genevieve McCormick, Frances McCully, Harriet Nichols, Frances O'Hare, Caroline Pearl, Lillias Waugh.

Second Sopranos—Mildred Hart, Esther Freeman, Amelia Rolfe, Helen Cusack, Blanche Babcock, May O'Connor, Susan Kedar.

Altos — Geraldine Foster, Rose Walsh, Clara Sylvester, Zetta Babcock.

Cindrella Number

Little children from the Oak st. school under the direction of Miss Elizabeth A. Sadler, charmed the audience with their production of "Cindrella." Miss Eva Boyce as "Cinderella" showed unusual dramatic capabilities for one of her tender years, by portraying "Cinderella" as an humble servant equally as well as a lady of fashion and title at the ball. The coach ordered by the "Fairy God-mother," Miss B. Okonieweski, was drawn by six little tots dressed to resemble white rats, and as the little children romped across the stage with the golden coach, the audience heartily applauded. Wendell Wilcox as the "Prince" handled himself well, and proved a graceful dancer in the minuet during the ball scene. The cast follows:

Cinderella ..... Eva Boyce King ..... Wayland Wilcox Queen ..... Gladys Loveland First Proud Sister, Kathryn McKenna Second Proud Sister.. Muriel Harris Fairy Godmother ... B. Okonieweski Herald ..... Mead Loomis Page ..... Charles Culkin Coachman ..... George E. Buell

Prince ..... Wendell Wilcox

Soldiers—John Flynn, A. Gigliotti.

Ladies ot the Queen—Kathryn Kowalski, Frances Kowalski.

Guests at the King's Ball—Ernest Kelly, George Raymond, Leon Fitch, Lawrence Murphy, William Brosnahan, Roman Gradala, Glen Whitcome, Alice Lilly, Helen Mott, Erthus Dashman, Helen Deveraux, Marjory Culkin.

State Street Orchestra

Music hath charms, and the State st. school orchestra, no member of which can be over twelve years, certainly proved the old adge a true one. Although their number was only a simple waltz and no startling orchestration or musical effects were attempted, the shading and the tempo bespoke natural ability on the part of the members of the orchestra and their efforts were well rewarded. Miss Lois Harrington directed the number, and Francis Shaw showed the possibilitica of a second Creatore or Stock in the conducting. The orchestra was composed of the following:

Birthday Party

Donald Hartnett's narration of a fairy tale about "Bunny Cotton-tail" was the feature of the "Birthday Party" sketon given by the pupils of the Walradt st. school under the direction of Miss Maud Marden. Miss Natalie Butts of the High school played the part of the mother, and the young people played all the games that make up the average birthday party of a little girl. Miss Gertrude Thompson as the little hostess also did well. The other little guests were: Natalie Butts of the High school, Gertrude Thompson, Donald Hartnett, Elmer Bogardus, Ruby Franklin, Helena Dolbear, Genevieve Willey, Helen Ottman, Edgar Lamb, Gomon Carrington, Joseph Casey.

One of the most pleasing features of the "Good Night" drill given by the younger pupils of the Fourth st. school was the number "All Aboard for Blanket Bay." After the little ones had marched around the stage in various figures each attired in pajamas and carrying candlesticks, a property boat was drawn in from the wings, and the chorus grouped behind it to sing the "Blanket Bay" number. Miss Ethel L. Everts of the school originated the number and directed it and Miss Marion L. Bullis presided at the piano. Those taking part were:

Eloise Donovan, Luella La Veck, Catherine Mullen, Blanche Burbank, Nina Gorden, Annabelle Judd, Julia Garrett, Pauline Reynolds, Evelyn Waldhorn, Pauline Kenney, Lela McCarthy, Ruth Wood, Myrtle McCarthy, Dorothy Curtis, Clinton Chesbro, Morrison Reynolds, Wirt Barker, Edward Dingman, Thomas Garrett, Carlton Ure, Clyde Smith, Howard Barnes, Reuben Coyne, John O'Grady, Harold Mullen, Edward Park, Joseph Hart, Charles Gordep.

Two tuneful numbers, one "Blow Ye Gentle Breezes" by Marks and "Song of the Leaves" by Pearson were presented by the High School Glee Club. The interpretation of both numbers was very pleasing and artistic, and the attack and pronunciation of the chorus was very good. Miss Thompson conducted. The Glee Club members are:

Sopranos— Hazel Dunton, Alice Ford, Medora Halstead, Mildred Hart, Marion Lake, Genevieve McCormick, Frances McCully, May O'Connor, Frances O'Hare, Caroline Pearl, Lillis Waugh, Helen Cusack, Pearl Wilson, Harriet Nichols.

Altos — Esther Freeman, Amelia Rolfe, Clara Sylvester, Rose Walsh.

Tenors—Leland Carner, Dempster Hill, Fred Martin, Fred Pollard, Rose Rowley.

Bass—Robert Boland, Samuel Hine, Dale, Harold O'Brien, Markey Pullen, John Reynolds.

The hit of "Watch Your Step," the sensational New York success which is featuring the Vernon Castles; the number "Settle Down in a One Horse town," sung by Miss Dorothy Garrett and Master Eldred Stevens was a feature of the drill given by the Academy st. school children under the direction of Miss Mabel Lehon with Miss Mildred Kellogg at the piano The "Sunbonnet Babies" appeared first followed by the "Overall Boys" after which the duet was sung, and the closing chorus was given by the "Tinkers" who emphasized their remarks regarding their trade by beating tin pans with miniature hammers. The following took part:

Elmer Bartlett. Harry Blakeslee, Earl Cecile, Raymond Coe, Richard Carver, Robert Jennings, Arthur Myers, Erwin Rice, John Robinson, Eldred Stevens.

Folk Dances

The Phillips st. school pupils presented some novel folk dancing numbers under the direction of James E. Lanigan, with Miss Mary L. Tillapaugh at the piano. Two dances, the first representing a carousel and the second the "Ace of Diamonds," were given with much grace and skill. The following were the dancers:

Floris Austin, Belle Baker, Myrtle O'Neil, Donald Pratt, Joseph Lynch, Mabel Sellman, Gorden Challes, Joseph Fitten, Mary Schneider, Ralph Dolbear, Isabelle Loveland, Charles Rothbell, Leon Gunup, Paul LeTour, Margaret Dey, Mary Borek, Earl La-Beef, Mary San Jeordan, Irene Halstead, Helen Saydera, William Byers, Gladys DeCaire, Frank Castor, John Meagher.

While the stage was being changed for the sketch, the High School orchestra entertained with the popular "Tonight's the Night," by Rubons, under the directions of Mrs. Owens.

Obstinacy

The sketch "Obstinacy" given by six high school pupils under the direction of Mrs. Lora White Kesler, was very interesting and amusing. It afforded an opportunity for a display of much dramatic talent particularly on the part of James Fairgrieve, as the young husband, and Miss Ethel Washburn as his wife. Mr. Fairgrieve, as "Robert Austin" surprises his servants in the midst of a quarrel. The maid servant has been asked by the butler to say "Thank Heaven, the table's set." She refuses his seemingly harmless request on the ground that it is foolish and his appeals to her affections, and sense of loyalty futile. Mr. Austin mentions the matter to his wife and they become embroiled in an argument, she taking the same view of the matter as the servant and he upholding the butler. The quarrel threatens to wreck their marital bliss and she is in tears when her parents arrive. While they try to act as mediators they finally become entangled in the argument and as before the father upholds his son-in-law and the mother, her daughter. At the appearance of an anniversary present, however, young Mrs. Austin's view of the matter changes somewhat, and of the course the thing ends happily. The cast:

Robert Austin ..... James Fairgrieve
Grace, his wife ..... Ethel Washburn
Frederick Kent ..... Harold Caffrey
(Grace Austin's Father)
Katherine Kent ..... Jessie Wilcox
(Grace Austin's Mother)
George ..... John Lynch
Lizzie ..... Ruth Wells
(Negro Servants)

The "Boogie Man" a drill by the higher grades of the State st. school under the direction of Miss Harrington assisted by Miss Ruth Jennings at the piano and Clark Morrill with the chimes was the twelfth number on the program. The feature of the drill was the "See-saw" chorus. On each "see-saw" sat a little girl. Those taking part were:

Candle—Mabette Ingamells, Mary Ingamells, Dorothy Draper, Sullilla Pollock, Ruth Allen, Theresa DeBarber.

Dance Minuet

A stately "Minuet" was given by several pupils of the Erie st. school under the direction of Miss Ruth Graveley withh Miss Marie Hawkins at the piano. The pupils went through the difficult figures in perfect time and without a break, and their work showed the results of careful and patient teaching. The pupils were:

Patriotic Tableau

The last number was a patriotic tableau and chorus entitled "Ye Olde Home Songs." The higher grades of the Fourth. st. school took part and Miss Marie Benson directed, assisted by Miss Bullis at the piano. The pupils were divided into five groups and the following numbers were sung by the pupils in appropriate costumes, "Blue Bells of Scotland," "Wearin' of the Green," "Juanita," "Sailing" and the "Star Spangled Banner" by the entire chorus. Messrs. Merald Orth and Paul Hutchins attired as Southern darkies, presented a clog-dance during the singing of Dixie, and the perhaps the most pleasoing feature of the number was the singing of "Sweet and Low" by Miss Florence Rappole. Her voice was clear and strong, and she showed natural musical ability. The closing chorus comprised the following:

Blue Bells of Scotland—Eva Blount Helen Lomasney, Ruth Pringle, Mamie Kaplan, Mildred Mills, Harriet Trask, Frances Payne, Dorothy Alsworth, Edith Reboer.

Juanita — Sarah Kaplan, Helen Austin, Hazel Rice, Ruth Coleman, Bertha Hubbard, Louise Baehr, Edwin Fitzgerald, Martin Rice, John Pearl.

IS THIS DENSITY?

Scribe Advocates Giving Hammer a Fling.

The Herald's local scribe has again come to the front. In last night's issue Inquirer and Taxpayer were administered a "slap on the wrist" for their supposed knocking.

Following this article in delightful consistency is an article labeled "Tenants in Trouble." In this the scribe tells the world Fulton isn't giving her people a living—landlords are ejecting tenants, etc. This may be boosting but it's the kind that might serve to boost would-be Fultonians in another direction. This certainly doesn't bespeak a prosperous Fulton.

If memory serves, this same scribe was taken in tow by the old chamber during the winter months for his sensational bankruptcy stories. Then during the recent chamber campaign this same capacity for density in a Sunday edition again told the world all he didn't know about the Bureau's activities in other places and was again taken in tow.

Yes, the Evening Times agrees that a second campaign is needed but let it be educational by all means.

YANKEES WON; FISHER WAS WILD

Gave Eight Bases on Balls, But Not One Figures in Tally

Donovan's Yankees turned the tables in Washington yesterday, winning the second game of the series from the Senators by 3 to 1. Ray Fisher was wild enough to be effective. His eight bases on balls kept him continually in hot water, but not one of them figured in Washington's lone tally. Fie support at critical stages saved Fisher, the work of Roger Peckinpaugh standing out prominently. It was "Peck" who snuffed out three promising Senatorial batting rallies by making remarkable stops and throws.

THE ROLE OF A FATHER

Story of Jess Willard as Told by Himself

Herewith is presented the first instalment of Jess Willard's story of his own life, "How I Won the Championship." It is the first authentic and authorized story of the new champion's career in and out of the ring and was obtained from him by Ed W. Smith the day after the big battle with Johnson in Cuba.

Willard gave over the better part of an entire day in dictating the story and later embellished it with many notes and in its present form it can be classed as correct in every detail:

Reel No. 1

((As Told by Jess Willard, Heavyweight Boxing Champion of the World.)

Had it not been for the taunts, sneers and laughter that met me at almost every turn during the last three years it is doubtful if I ever would have persevered in my ambition to win the world's fighting title.

More than once I was tempted to quit in total disgust and go back to Kansas for the simple life of breeder of horses. More than once I told myself there was no use and I might as well acknowledge then and there that it was a hopeless case. But the thought of quitting that way, the thought of an unrealized ambition that I knew would torture me the remainder of my life, the idea of giving up a great purpose that I knew was possible of fulfillment, spurred me on. The more they sneered and laughed, the firmer I grew in this purpose, and here I am today champion of the world.

That's what won me the title—the stubbornness they say I possessed when I was a boy and which I never outgrew. They say I showed it in the Havana battle when I refused to be awed by the presence of the most onderful fighter of the day and a little later refused to be cut down by his mightiest punches.

But what helped me most to keep me going durin gthe lean, gnawing days when there was nothing in sight, no money coming in, no matches on, nothing but a defeated ambition at every turn, was the sneer that I received. That was the goad I needed. It made me champion. I was pretty much what they call a country jay, a big, green farmer, totally unused to city ways, along about the time that Johnson won his title from Tommy Burns in Australia. That did not excite people in this country very much, but when the defeat of Jim Jeffries came on top of the feeling that Jeffries was the only white man who had a chance with the negro, there was a lot of excitement. It struck the little settlement where I lived and then it was that I first conceived my ambition to some day win the big title.

That was in July, 19'0, and mind you at that time I had never seen a boxing glove, let alone have a pair of them on my hands. But I weighed 280 pounds and had mixed up a little in amateur athletics in my township as big as I was I was known as "quick on my feet," because they had timed me 100 yards in 11 seconds, at a couple of county fair meets and the performances were all right, I knew, because the horse timers' watches were on me. Besides that I was one of the best swimmers ever seen in our river and generally regarded as something of an all-around man.

My father died before I was born, but left my mother in fairly comfortable circumstances, so that we got along well. I have two brothers, both of them big fellows—Robert and Marion—and both of them live in the southwest corner of Jackson county, Texas.

After we were pretty well grown my mother married M. L. Stalker, a substantial man and they moved to Topeka, where my mother died about four years ago. We all loved our stepfather and he saw to it that we received as good a bringing up as any boys in the county. He taught us correct principles and generally gave us an excellent start in life.

While a farmer boy I married Miss Evans, whose father is still a farmer of excellent standing a few miles out of Emmett, Kan. We have four children and you may be sure I am mighty proud of them. They are hardly old enough yet to be proud of their father.

My birthplace was in Adrian township, which did not boast of a single town, but I generally call Emmett my home, though St. Mary's is the nearest town to the spot where I was born.

Next I will tell you something about the boyhood days in Kansas.

NICE, DAINTY BASEBALL.

One Way the National Game Might Be Played, but Is Not.

"Safe," remarked the umpire.

"I beg your pardon, sir," remonstrated the player. The nine walked to where the umpire was standing.

"Pardon our protest," they said gently, "but, perforce, we must disagree with you. In our humble judgment the ball was in the hands of the baseman one-fifth of a second before the player reached base."

"I regret that I must disagree with you, gentlemen," said the umpire. "I must accept the evidence of my own senses, but I assure you that only a stern sense of duty compels me to refuse your courteous request for a change in my decision."

Of course this never happened, but as the product of a highly sensitized imagination it certainly ranks in the forefront.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Making the Best of It.

"Of course I know," said Mr. Meek.
"I should not be so sadly weak
Within my own dominions;
I know I should my powers boost
And rule, unquestioned, my own roost,
Nor sit with drooping pinions.

"But facts are facts and stubborn things
That will not yield a foot to kings—
Not even for a minute.
And in this age of woman's rights
It's best when I reach home at nights
To keep quite still within it."
—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Thankful For It.

Sergeant Pfit believed in handling his men firmly. Pausing before one recruit, he eyed him sternly.

"Now, then, pull yourself together," he barked harshly; "you're standing all wrong. Your uniform's not put on right, your buttons are dirty, and you're holding your rifle like a hayfork. Let's see if you can march. Right about face!"

The recruit stood stock still and heaved a sigh of relief.

"Thank goodness," he said, with resignation, "I'm right about something, anyway."—Exchange.

Happy Marriage.

Two hearts that beat as one, of course,
Are very nice.
To do away with much divorce
They well suffice.

This sort of thing brings happiness
In large amounts.
Another thing helps more or less—
Two bank accounts.
—Kansas City Journal.

How Queer Lovers Are.

"You are my all," the lover vowed,
And then—it is to laugh!
The girl who was his "all" he begged
To be his "better half."
—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Quiet Producer.

"It's an ill wind that blows"—
"Shut up!"
"It's a long lane that has no"—
"Cut it out!"
"You can lead a horse to water, but"—
"Cheese it!"
"What are you, for goodness sake?"
"I'm a maxim silencer."—Judge.

The Retort Courteous.

"A comical cuss is the kangaroo!"
Said Jeams one day when up at the zoo.
Said the kangaroo then, "You're funny, too, James.
But why need we call each other names?"
—Judge.

Hasty News.

Redd—Do you believe in dreams?
Greene—Some dreams.
"Well, you know to dream of a fire means hasty news."
"So I've heard."
"Well, last night I dreamed of a fire, and this morning I read in the paper that my brother had been fined for speeding."—Yonkers Statesman.

Miranda.

I met Miranda at a dance
And straight began to woo;
She shot at me a killing glance—
She's some revolver too!
—Judge.

Spark Proof.

"Don't you think Boggles is awfully dense? He doesn't seem to have a spark of intelligence."

"Spark! How could a spark get through a fire-proof skull and an asbestos brain?"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Premature Joy.

He popped; the maiden answered, "Yes"—
With joy he thought he'd smother.
But she'd not finished, "Yes-terday
I said, 'Yes' to another."
—Boston Transcript.

Missed Her.

Pall—Did you hear that last joke at the vaudeville last night?

Mall—No. I left before she sang.—Gargoyle.

Tobacco.

Tobacco injures many a man,
Its use is surely not a joke.
And yet it's rather better than
The substitutes we sometimes smoke.

Bowser Gets a Scare

His Root Tonic Has a Kick In It

By M. QUAD.

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

One of Mr. Bowser's hobbies is the family medicine chest, and the quack who wants to get his money has only to go to him with some new spring tonic, a winter porous plaster, a fall liver pad or an every day cure for rheumatism. There are at this moment in a closet set apart in the Bowser mansion for that purpose more sure cures for coughs, colds, influenza, hay fever, catarrh, toothache, rheumatism, consumption, torpid liver, neuralgia, dyspepsia, general decline, yellow fever, smallpox, cholera morbus and pneumonia than any New York hospital could use in a month.

Mrs. Bowser hasn't seen all this stuff come into the house without a protest, but protests have not been to the least avail. At the first word of reproach Mr. Bowser would turn on her with:

"Mrs. Bowser, how many doctors and drug stores are there in this country?"

"I don't know."

"Of course you don't. It isn't your business to know. I do know, however, and I'll tell you there are over 2,000,000 doctors, one to about every fifty of our population. Just think of that! There are also nearly 2,000,000 drug stores, each one supported by about fifty such people as you are."

"Well?" she asked.

"Well, it must follow that there is mighty little sense among average people to run to a doctor every time anything gets out of kilter. Think of the money thrown away."

"But nothing ever ails any of us but a headache," she protested.

"No; of course not. But why not? Simply because I'm a prudent and far-seeing man. I lock the stable before the horse is stolen. In other words, during the five years we have been married I have saved us from at least fifty fits of sickness, each one of which would have cost at least $50 in cash."

"Well, have you been getting anything today?" she asked. "If so, you might as well throw it out of the window, for we don't need it."

"Don't need it, Mrs. Bowser; don't need it!" he echoed as he stood up and waved a paper package aloft. "But we do need it, all of us need it, need it bad. Do you know what season of the year this is?"

"Of course it's spring."

"Well, what takes place in the spring?"

"Various things."

"Yes, and one of them is a sort of collapse of the physical system. We loose flesh. We are spleeny. We are bilious and subject to chills. We are in just that state to invite a fever to seize upon us, and in nine cases out of ten it would be fatal. Is it prudence to tune up the system or to have a funeral in the house?"

"What have you got there?" she asked, avoiding a direct answer to his question.

"Roots, Mrs. Bowser; roots. Nature furnished man all the medicines needed when it caused roots to grow in the same soil he treads. Here are burdock, sassafras, sarsaparilla, sweet bud, blackberry and two or three other kinds, each a specific in itself—all combined, a sure panacea for nearly all the ills human flesh is heir to."

"And you are going to eat them—all of us must eat them?" she anxiously asked.

"Wait and see," he replied, with a pomposity that quite settled her, and in due time she saw.

After supper Mr. Bowser took possession of the kitchen to make his root tonic. He put all the roots in the teakettle, started up a good fire and at intervals of every five minutes he walked out to cool his face and to say to Mrs. Bowser.

"Doctors! Drug stores! Faugh! In a week from now you won't know yourself."

After a couple of hours Mr. Bowser poured off two quarts of dark liquid which gave out an odor similar to that of a ripe cucumber flung against the smokehouse door in August. Being alone in the kitchen at the time, he of course took down the roller towel to strain it through. He then added to the liquid half a pint of whisky, an ounce of cloves, one nutmeg and a half a pound of sugar, and put it all in an old fruit jar.

"There, that's off my mind," he said, as he returned to the sitting room. "The dose, Mrs. Bowser, will be one tablespoonful three times a day for you and twice that for me."

"If we need it."

"If you need it! Do you suppose I'd go to all this trouble if we didn't need it. I saw the signs of collapse in your eyes ten days ago, and I may not be in time to save your life. The ignorance and obstinacy of some women are amazing."

She was interested in a book and did not care to pursue the argument further, and nothing more was said about the tonic till bed time. Then he went to the pantry and took a pretty good pull at it, and as he came out wiping off his chin he said:

"You can begin tomorrow morning, Landa, but that is a tonic! I really feel a year younger for that one dose."

"Then you won't need to buy any other kind."

"Probably not, but I am the best judge of that. If you want to collapse like an old wash tub after six weeks of dry weather, that's your lookout, but I propose to live as long as possible and to have good health to back me."

She had her revenge sooner than could be hoped for. Mr. Bowser had snored about ten times when his toes began to crack. And a minute later he was clawing around with his legs, and when Mrs. Bowser gave him a nudge to arouse him from a supposed nightmare he sat up in bed and exclaimed:

"Landa, but how queer I feel! I'm all numb! Mrs. Bowser, are you awake?"

"Yes."

"Well, I'm afraid I'm going to be awfully sick!"

"Nonsense! That root tonic fixed you all right."

"I know it, but I'm getting an awful pain. Say, I've eaten or drunk something to poison me!"

"It's that decoction, Mr. Bowser."

"You don't think so?"

"I'm sure of it."

"Then I'd better send for a doctor at once!"

"Do nothing of the kind. It will only make an expense for nothing. You have 482 different bottles and boxes of remedies in the closet. I'll go down and get a specific for spring tonic poison."

He half fell out of bed, lighted the night lamp, and he was almost bent double as he made his way downstairs. Mrs. Bowser followed him halfway, knowing what was coming. She heard him clatter the bottles around for two or three minutes, and then, seeming to hold one in either hand, he muttered:

"Is this which or is that which, or which in thunder is which? It's the first time I ever needed medicine in the night, and now I can't tell a cure for hydrophobia from a remedy for fits, Mrs. Bowser."

"Well?"

"Come down here! I'm dying! Look this infernal old drug shop over and find me something to cure these colicky old pains!"

"All I want is the mustard from the pantry," she said, and in half an hour she had him in bed again and asleep. Next morning he was as blithe as if nothing had occurred, but just before breakfast, when she asked him if he'd forgotten his spring tonic, he turned on her with:

"Mrs. Bowser, conscience should have prevented you from ever mentioning those words again."

"How?"

"How? Am I blind? Can't I put 3 and 2 together and make 5?"

"Explain yourself. Your language is ambiguous."

"I understand all about the ambiguous business. You were determined not to take that tonic. You also made up your mind that if I took it it would be the worse for me. Any jury in this world would convict you on that evidence."

"What evidence?"

"Never you mind. Let your conscience answer you. I may feel it my duty later on in the day to see a lawyer—see a lawyer, Mrs. Bowser, and if so I shall, of course, be guided by what

She Played Her Part to Good Purpose, as It Proved.

By MARIE DENSMORE.

At the age of twenty-nine Bessie Pryor was forced to sit down and take stock of herself, her acquirements and her future. The money her father had left her, which she had foolishly believed would last forever, was gone, with the exception of a few hundred dollars.

She had had a good time with it. First she had had four years in the best college in the country; she had had a year of foreign travel; she had been much about her own country; she had had seasons in the mountains, seasons at the seashore, seasons in the city; she had heard the best music, seen the best plays and studied the best pictures in the world. And, as for clothes, she had worn right and left the finest productions of the shops and experienced modistes.

Now all of this was at an end suddenly. She had had a last interview with her father's old attorney, and he had told her the truth. She had eaten up her means. What was she to do?

Of course there was Aunt Bess, for whom she had been named—Aunt Bess, under whose wing she had gayly squandered her substance in riotous living.

She knew very well why Aunt Bess had allowed her to go on as she had. She had expected her to make a notable match. But fate would have it otherwise. There had been men enough, but only one for whom she had cared, and he would have none of her. And so she had come to twenty-nine and at the end of her fortune without the slightest claim upon her freedom.

She could live with Aunt Bess, but Aunt Bess had girls of her own, who were just coming out, one after the other, at enormous expense. And Uncle Ed wasn't the richest man in the world.

"I can't live on them," the girl thought. "They'd take me in and do their best by me, but I'd be a burden. Alas and alack, if only I had learned some useful craft. And only $700 remaining. It appears the only thing left for me is to be a vender of old clothes. I've got enough of them, goodness knows."

She laughed a little tremulously. "But, dear me, I can't sell my clothes. I shall have to wear them. Well, it stands like this: I can't live with Aunt Bess—pride forbids." She checked off one finger. "I can't teach; I can't sew; I can't—I can't do anything."

She dropped her head in her hands an instant, then raised it resolutely. "Bess Pryor, you're a chicken hearted thing! Put on your things and take a walk. You will be crying next thing you know."

She sprang up and a few moments later was leaving the house of the elderly friend with whom she was stopping during this urgent business quest of hers to the city.

At the very first corner, as she was walking briskly along trying to get the better of her feelings, she met a plainly dressed girl who was walking just as briskly.

"Why, Madge White!" Bess exclaimed, holding out her hand eagerly. "I haven't seen you in years. Where in the world do you come from?"

The other girl laughed.

"Why, don't you know? I'm here taking a course in the business college. I'm learning shorthand and typewriting. You see"—her voice dropped—"there's been hard times at home, and I'm getting out by myself to ease the burden if I can."

"Typewriting and shorthand," Bess mused. "Madge"—she spoke earnestly—"do you suppose I know enough to manipulate the keys and make those pothook things with a pencil?"

"Do you? And you a college girl! You certainly know enough, Bess. The trouble is you don't have to learn."

"Ah, but I do." Bess said soberly. "Let me walk with you and tell you all about it."

And as they went slowly up the street together she told her story. She had not cared much for Madge in college, for Madge was in a different set from her own, but she saw now that she had missed a good deal by not making friends with this very sensible, capable, warm hearted girl.

When at last they parted Madge had helped her to make a plan for the present. She was to enter the business school board where Madge did and share her room, and she was to tell the friend with whom she was staying and Aunt Bess and her father's old attorney that she had started out to earn a living for herself.

At the end of six months of the hardest mental work she had ever undertaken Bess was declared a finished pupil of more than ordinary excellence, and a position was obtained for her at a fair salary at a place where many other girls were at the same work as herself.

Six months more passed. She and Madge White still clung together. Madge was her closest, almost her only friend, for she now seemed to have forgotten her or at least to overlook her.

At the end of six months Horace Baird, her employer's old attorney, brought her out and asked her to accept a position as his secretary.

"Miss Page is going to be married," he said. "She leaves the first of the month. She is an expert, and I gave her $15 a week, but you may have the same if you will come."

"Oh, Mr. Baird, how good you are!" Bess cried. Fifteen dollars a week meant as much to her as $1,500 had once upon a time.

Two weeks later she was installed in his office and was making herself as invaluable to him as his former secretary had done. Clad simply in blue, her hair very smooth, not a gleam of gold, not a streak of ribbon about her, she sat each day before the massive office typewriter playing the keys with swift precision or making pothooks upon a pad at the old lawyer's dictation.

One morning as she sat thus at work alone the door opened and a man entered—a man whom she had not seen in two years, since that last evening she had danced with him and he had gone away without saying a single thing she had expected him to say.

She felt the color leaving her face, she felt a tremor seize her, but she made a brave stand in spite of all.

Her year as a wage earner had taught her more self command than all the other years of her life put together.

"Miss Pryor!" he exclaimed. "In the name of all that is wonderful, what are you doing here?"

It was just like him to say that, and she could not help laughing a little at his too evident amusement.

"Just earning my living, if you please, Mr. Brent," she replied.

"And is that necessary?"

"Most necessary. Did you ever hear the old story of the prodigal son, Mr. Brent?"

He nodded, watching her earnestly.

"Well," Bess went on, a little breathlessly, "like him, I have wasted my substance until I must earn if I would eat. I've been a business woman for a year, and I'm beginning to like it even better than being a society girl. Ah, here comes Mr. Baird!" as the old lawyer entered.

His entrance ended their conversation for that day, but soon after Brent came again.

Being a lawyer himself and upon very good terms with Mr. Baird, it was easy for him to frame excuses for frequent calls.

"So you like doing this?" he said one day, standing beside her and looking down at her nimble fingers. She looked up at him brightly.

"Yes, indeed. I never knew what it was to live until now. I only wish I had got to work sooner."

He waited awhile. They were alone in the office, and in the silence the clatter of the typewriter keys sounded startlingly loud.

"I suppose," he said finally, "that you are so in love with your work here that nothing could induce you to make a change. And yet I have been thinking that I could offer you a position rather better than this if you cared to accept it."

"But I'm not sure that it would be fair to Mr. Baird to leave him. He has been very good to me," Bess said.

"You don't understand," Brent said, speaking very low and leaning over her. "This is a permanent position—that of being my wife."

"I'd given up ever expecting to hear that from you," Bess said a little later. "Why didn't you tell me it that summer at Lenox or the winter before in Boston?"

"Because, my dear," Brent said, "I'm a slow man, and no matter how much I cared for a woman I would never marry her were she not the right sort. I didn't see in the frivolous girl you were then the making of a good wife for me. So, though I was strongly tempted, I went away without speaking."

"Then I played the prodigal daughter to good advantage, after all," Bess said mischievously. "If my money had held out this would never have happened. But how do you know that my old habits may not return?"

"How? Because you have learned your lesson well. And, anyway, the role of prodigal daughter, as you call it, never suited you so well as"—

"My present one?"

"No; as your future one as my wife will suit you."

Alaska.

Governor Strong of Alaska reports that the white population of the territory is estimated at 39,000, an increase of 3,000 over last year's estimate. The area is 590,884 square miles and the density of the total population per square mile at the last federal census was one inhabitant to ten square miles of area.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

About Your Skin.

The skin is a mighty good indicator as to one's general health. As a rule, when the blood is charged with impurities the skin will show it in some form of eruption or inflammation. Because the skin plays so important a part in keeping us well and strong it should be given the best care and attention. Here are some things you can do to keep your skin in good working order:

First.—Eat plain, wholesome food.

Third.—Take a bath every day, followed by a brisk rub down with a coarse towel.

And when you perspire don't worry.

EVENING GOWN.

SMART FROCK.

COTTONS ARE POPULAR.

Never have there been prettier small patterns in cotton than are found this year, nor are they expensive, since they are found in every material from 25 cent dimities to $2 and $3 embroidered chiffons.

Canton crepes in tiny flower designs, voiles of various prices and even our old favorite, dotted swiss and polka dotted mousselines, may all be used for dainty little frocks, of which every one needs two or three, whether one remains at home or goes away for the hot season. The sensible woman who must consider the laundry selects one that will not soil easily, a well covered design or else plain white. She relies on what will always give her a fresh looking frock, not too elaborate, one that does not need to be laundered more than once.

Some women always send their wash dresses to a cleaner for the first laundering in order to set the colors and keep the shape of the skirt, but any of the materials should stand the home tubbing if the dress is first dipped in salted water and not hung in the sun to dry or sprinkled and folded up until ready to iron.

These sheer cottons and light silks stand much more fullness and flouncing than is possible in heavier fabrics, and milady can revel in billowy ruffles and gathers and puffings to her heart's content when hot days come.

Military Boot.

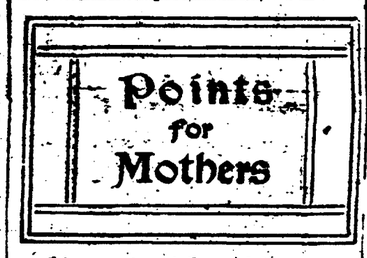
The severe shoe is the exception except for outing wear, and the military finish has the feminine cast that reminds one of the "fille du regiment" or some other light opera heroine, with its dainty patent leather finishing and high heel and tassel which are found even on the ties of the tennis shoe.

STYLE SPARKS.

Three piece costumes were displayed at many of the spring openings. These included usually coat suits of serge and taffetas, gabardines and taffetas and voile and taffetas combined in self colors only.

The frock in one piece was the usual arrangement, with a smartly cut dressy coat to match for wear with the gown.

Sports suits are being made of tweeds, serges and corduroys.



Favored styles are the gored circular skirts of fairly heavy weight materials with a coat designed along English shooting coat lines. This offers an inverted plait at the back and one each side of the front portions. These plaits extend to the waist line only, where the coat finishes with a smoothly fitted circular cut peplum.

Patch pockets of large dimensions are fashion features which distinguish the styles of many of the latest suits. As many as four appear on a coat, with skirts favored in like generosity by the addition of two more.

BRINKING TO THE FATHERLAND IN "THE WHITE FEATHER."

In this play, produced very successfully by William A. Brady at the Comedy Theater, New York, four secret service agents of the German government are planning a submarine raid on the English coast. When they believe they are upon the very threshold of success they drink to "Der Tag."

Adornment and Care of Nursery.

Children delight in change, and this applies to pictures as well as to other things. If an expensive picture is in the room and a contagious disease affects the child it is impractical to destroy the picture, and yet that may be desirable. As the child grows in knowledge the pictures, if not expensive, may be changed to suit the child's need.

Boys like good pictures. When a little fellow fills his room with undesirable pictures it is nearly always because others have not been obtainable. They like pictures with life in them, such as the Remington type, and their choice should be followed in this.

Until the child is of such age that it can be trusted alone portieres or heavy curtains should be dispensed with. At best they are industrious dust collectors and are more of a menace than a necessity. If they are used they should be of rather light material and so placed that there is no possible danger from fire. Hung near to a gas jet, they are a constant source of danger.

The rooms should be frequently and thoroughly cleaned, and in this procedure the child should be early taught to cooperate. All dusting must be done with a slightly dampened cloth or with a lamb's wool duster, both of which will collect the dust and will not simply scatter it.

Slightly wet salt or sawdust scattered upon the floor before sweeping will prevent to a great extent the raising of dust. One of the various preparations which are made for this purpose and which are very inexpensive will prove effective, and in addition they bring out the colors of the carpet if the floor has such a covering.

Why Children Tell Untruths.

Because a child tells an untruth he is not of necessity a liar. An apparent untruth may be told because the child is timid under examination and, losing control of himself, says what he does not mean. Adults commonly do this in courts. To the child questioning is often as much dreaded as the witness chair is to an adult. Other children tell untruths because they are absent minded. It is common for them to do so, because they do not fully understand the question put to them. These facts seem simple enough, and yet if they are not recognized the child may be falsely accused of lying, and his nervous system will suffer thereby.

Romance weaving is not uncommon among children who are blest with vivid imaginations. The difficulty is that the child has not been taught to make distinctions between the truths of allegory and those of fact. The imagination is valuable, but needs early guidance, so that it will not be the master, but the servant of the child.

The desire to appear prominently before others (a dramatic instinct) is often the cause of romance weaving. The best way to treat this latter is to receive the statements of the child without comment and without apparent interest. When he finds that he has not an appreciative audience he will be cured of this habit. In a few instances the fault indicates some impending illness, or it may be due to lack of control, which is marked in nervous children after an acute illness. Parents should show considerable patience toward children who are apparent liars, and every effort should be made to determine whether there is a physical basis for the moral fault.

When Traveling.

When starting on a trip, no matter how short, the farseeing mother or nurse should remember to take along some of the Japanese flower seeds which, when put into water, spring into blossom. A pair of blunt scissors, an assortment of pictures, a blank book and a tube of glue is another suggestion for an inexpensive remembrance. It is most often not the costly toy or trinket that gives the most enjoyment.

Any child starting off on a trip would appreciate a small leather portfolio to fit into the traveling case and would like to find a fountain pen, a book of postage stamps and several postal cards done up in an attractive package, with a box of bonbons. No matter how inexpensive the gift, one must remember that pretty ribbons, paper and general wrappings will play a large part in the pleasure the gift brings to the little traveler.

No Work Before Breakfast.

No work which is at all exacting or difficult should be undertaken by the child before breakfast, and this rule applies to mental effort as surely as to physical. If the curriculum of the child's school demands study in the early morning it should be prepared for such mental effort by a suitable meal. There can be no objection to a short walk or to some form of light exercise at this time, but the more serious duties of the day must be delayed until after the morning meal.

Bathtub Toys.

If baby is afraid of the water when having his bath buy several prettily colored cork bobbers, such as fishermen use, and throw these in the bathtub. He will be so busy trying to catch them that he will forget to be afraid and, instead, will be highly entertained.

Tip Economy.

"Some people hold that a wife ought to receive a regular salary for her work in the home."

"Then it would be just as cheap to hire a housekeeper."—Baltimore American.

WHAT IS ELECTRICITY?

It is a curious fact that although evidence of electricity in a primitive way was observed as long ago as the sixth century B. C. and its manifestation has become one of the greatest factors in our modern civilization, no one knows just what it is.

At different times it has been thought to be a form of matter, a thin, weightless fluid, a kind of force, a variety of motion and a disturbance in the ether—which is supposed to fill all space, including pores in most solid metals. Electricity is not something created by man. He has simply discovered ways of turning its manifestations to practical account.

From the time that Thales observed, centuries before the Christian era, that amber, after being rubbed by silk, had the property of attracting light bodies like bits of paper, discoveries of electric phenomena were made from time to time, but they were detached from a realization of the great possibilities brought to light in recent years.

Electricity becomes evident when, rendered active by some molecular disturbance, such as friction, rupture or chemical action. Scientists today regard it as neither energy nor matter, but, like heat, light and sound, it is an effect produced by energy on matter.

It has been discovered that electricity is a self existing property, by which we are everywhere surrounded, and human as well as inanimate bodies can be charged with it. From this we can understand that many more remarkable discoveries of its application will be made.—Rocky Mountain News.

SLY WINK SAVES "CORPSE."

Lumberjack Found Coffin In Morgue Cozy Place For Nap.

Kincade, who is a lumberjack, had come to Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., seeking work. After amusing himself in true lumberjack fashion he wandered into a morgue and crawled into a coffin to sleep. Morgue employees, after closing several caskets, approached the one that held the drowsy jack. The woodsman turned over and winked.

He was released from the police court after pleading guilty to a charge of intoxication.

ALBANY LETTER ... DAY BY DAY

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, April 16.—Perhaps the most novel claim which the new State Court of Claims will be required to consider is that of Joseph M. Stanford, skipper of a small yet trim craft, who resides at No. 123 William street, New York city, Stanford has a claim for $649.33.

It is not the amount of the claim which makes the action Stanford has brought against the State interesting; it is the unusual surroundings. The federal government is held largely responsible by the claimant for the damages which he is seeking to have settled.

Stanford is the owner of the sailing vessel "Albiore" and was sailing his craft July 4, last a few miles east of Eaton Neck, about two miles off Long Island when it was rammed by the U. S. S. "Glouster" which was being navigated by the Naval Militia. The "Albiore" was badly damaged, the claimant says, who adds in his brief:

"Said collision was due solely to the carelessness and negligence of the officers who operated the "Glouster" and was in no wise due to any negligence on the part of the owner of the "Albiore".

"The Glouster" is operated by steam, while the "Albiore" is a sailing vessel. The "Glouster" attempted to pass the "Albiore" without proper signals and without proper precautions and negligently.

It appears that the U. S. S. "Glouster" was assigned by the Federal government to the Second Battalion, Naval Militia of this State. The State agreed to protect and defend the Federal government against any liability which might grow out of any damage to life or property while it was in possession of the "Glouster." At least this is the declaration that Mr. Stanton makes in his brief. He also declares that by reason of the negligence of the officers of the Naval Militia operating the "Glouster" he was required to spend $199.33 for repairs following the collision and that he lost the rental of his boat during the time that it was laid up for repairs. The amount for such loss the claimant places at $450.

The naval militia of New York State prides itself upon its navigators and the knowledge of seamanship generally and it is believed that every effort will be made to establish the fact that the accident was caused by any other cause than negligence or failure to give or display the proper signals.

It is rumored that Eckford C. McKay, a commander in the State Naval Militia and at one time military secretary to Governor John A. Dix may be called upon as a witness when the case is tried, but there is at this time nothing more than a rumor upon which to hang the statement.

Claims for all manner of damage have been passed upon by the old Court of Claims, and the Board of Claims, but the novel situation presented is a precedent. Both the Federal and State governments figure in the details of the accident, yet it is the belief of the claimant that the Federal government cannot be proceeded against because of the circumstances that the "Glouster" had been loaned to the State with the assurance that if any damage to other property or to human life resulted the United States government would not be held liable.

When the case goes to trial, and no definite date has as yet been set considerable interest is bound to be aroused. The Naval Militia in this State is made up of three battalions; the First, located at New York; the Second at Brooklyn and the Third at Rochester.

The club now has representatives in Hannibal, Palermo, Phoenix and Minetto as well as in this city and the surrounding districts.

The election of officers for the year took place and the results were as follows: B. J. O'Grady, president; Dr. H. L. Lake, vice-president; J. C. Murphy, secretary and treasurer. A committee was appointed to stock the various streams and lands in this section with the game and fish which will be supplied by the state, comprising, Messrs. Stewart, Nichols, Brewer Taft and Foster. This committee will commence the work of stocking the streams as soon as the first shipment of fish arrives from the State Board.

Several topics relative to the club's activities were discussed informally. Among others, the question of stocking the swamp lands in this section with rabbits was considered. The date of the formal opening of the clubhouse at Stop 28 was not set, but as soon as the weather moderates the club will begin its regular shoots. The club will meet again in about two weeks and at that time several other subjects will be considered.

A cordial invitation is extended to every sportsman in this locality to join the club and share in its benefits. The dues are only a dollar a year, and membership cards can be obtained from the president or secretary.

"Another Taxpayer" Asks of the City Attorney a Few Questions Pertinent to the Present Topics of Discussion.

ON THE RIALTO

Speed fiends are burning up the good streets of the city every day. A police motorcycle has been proposed, but whether the department will get one or not is a question. Something in that line is needed and at once. Oneida st. is a speedway for joy-riders from the Canal bridge out. Almost any afternoon some speed fiend can be seen taking the corner of 1st and Oneida st, at a speed well over 20 miles per hour. Some day there will be an accident and then of course the police will get busy, but what is needed now is prevention. The speed limit in Fulton is 15 miles per hour and corners are to be taken at slow speed at all times. If there are any officials in charge who doubt this statement let them spend a few hours some afternoon along 3d st. or 4th st.

Friend Syracuse Herald had a bad dream yesterday. All this "knocking" which is so "annoying" to the public (poor public—please let them sleep) aggragravated our friend to such an extent that he decided to commission the Chamber of Commerce to action, said commissioning of course, being decided upon without consulting the chamber. However, we all overlook things sometimes. When the statement appeared in his "colyum" last eve, and we learned that certain things and people were to be "investigated," were, of course, properly alarmed and hastily consulted time tables.

But it seems that our friend had been misled. President Whitaker of the Chamber stated that he has been wondering where our friend got his "info"—and also informed us that the meeting was not to be a public one for the hearing of grievances, fancied or otherwise.

But, as heretofore stated, mistakes will be made, and even by the Herald.

The twins have moved. The McKinstry store and Stranahan and Love, old "pals" and next door neighbors on Oneida st. are still real chummy in their new location. A good team, at that, and one that gets the business.

The first newsboy who tears the wrapper off his Sunday papers tomorrow and casts said wrapper into the thoroughfares of the city may find himself in the "hoose-gow" before night. Chief Dyer is determined that the streets of the city shall be kept clean and he will have his men on the look out tomorrow. After some hard work on the part of the "White Wings" last Sunday, the city streets were in fine condition. But in an hour's time they were littered with paper again.

Sme of the school tots who participated in the school carnival showed unsual ability for children so young. Many a young lad and lassie think this morning that the stage is their future and to those we would repeat the words of the prophet Hamfat—"I am an actor—and I don't eat."

Buffalo has a high tax rate—and New York is groaning— but Fulton smiles bravely (?) under the yoke of a rate higher than either city. New York had a Tweed and there's a reason.

Bankrupt now, the second largest city in the world can't borrow a lead nickel. Is Fulton, to have a Tweed or has she already had one?

OFFICIAL WAR BULLETINS

GERMAN

Berlin (by Wireless).—The statement from the War Office today is as follows:

"Near Ostend and Nieuport some enemy destroyers took part yesterday in artillery fighting, but were quickly silenced.

"On the southern border of St. Eloi we occupied two houses. South of Lorette height fighting began again last night.

"Between the Meuse and the Moselle only artillery duels took place.

"The use of bombs developing asphyxiating gas and of explosive infantry cartridges by the French is daily becoming more frequent.

"Aviators were unsually active yesday, as the weather was favorable. Hostile aviators threw bombs on places behind the German front. Freiburg also was shelled. At this place several civilians, including children, were wounded.

On the western front the situaiton is unchanged. In skirimishes near Kalvaria (Russian Poland) in the last few days 1040 Russian were taken prisoners and seven machine guns were captured."

FRENCH

Paris, Saturday — The following French official statement regarding the progress of the fighting in the western theatre of the war was given out here today:

"At Notre Dame de Lorette the Germans delivered three counter attacks, each of which was preceded by a violent bombardment. They were all stopped short at the outset. They also failed in a counter attack at Les Eparges last night.

"At Bois de Montmare there was an artillery duel. We silenced three batteries and blew up an ammunition depot."

The communication of the afternoon added nothing to the information communicated last night except the following:

"Our artillery brought down during the afternoon of April 15 a German aeroplane which fell in front of the English lines, but behind the German trenches, north of Ypres."

RUSSIAN

Petrogade, via London.—The official communication of the Russian War Office issued this evening says:

"In the Carpathians our troops, noiselessly approaching the enemy's barbed wire entanglements between the villages of Telepotch and Zuella, broke through and, after a brief bayonet engagement, gained possession of two heights and took numerous prisoners. The enemy sent the 121st reserve regiment to make a counter attack, and the fighting continues.

"In the direction of Rostoki the enemy made fruitless attacks near the village of Croszpatch against the heights occupied by us.

"On Wednesday we successfully repulsed persistent attacks by the enemy in the direction of the Stry.

"Reports arriving from various sectors of the Carpathian front show that verywhere the roads are in a bad state owing to the thaw and the swollen rivers.

"On the rest of the front there is no change.

"Yesterday in the Black Sea our destroyers sank off the Anatolia coast four steamships, two of which were laden with coal, and several sailing vessels, and also exchange fire with the Susuguldaik (Asia Minor) batteries."

AUSTRIAN

Vienna, via London—The foolowing official communication was issued today:

"In Poland, near Blogie, east of Piotrkow, a Russian attack has been repulsed.

"On the Lower Nida our artillery set fire to a Russian ammunition store. Several trenches within effective range of our artillery were quickly evacuated by the Russians.

"In the Carpathians isolated fighting has taken place in the wooded sectors. Advancing Russian infantry was replsed with heavy losses. We captured 400 prisoners.

"In the fighting in the Stry Valley we have taken an additional 208 prisoners."

"Another Taxpayer's" Letter of Invitation Receives the Seconding of The Evening Times, Whose Columns Remain Open to the Desires of G. M. Fanning, City Attorney.

Editor of the Times:

With your permission, I desire to ask the following questions to City Attorney George M. Fanning through the columns of your paper:

1. What law, Mr. City Attorney, gives you the right to engage and the Common Council the right to pay a stenographer in your law office a salary of $60.00 per month?

2. Is it not a fact, Mr. City Attorney, that this stenographer is used by you and your brother, H. J. Fanning, in your and his private law practice as a stenographer and a process server; and, Mr. City Attorney, is it not a fact that this same public servant is now and for several years last past been used as a stenographer by William J. Hartnett, J. H. Conners and the Pathfinder Construction Co., Inc.

3. Is it not a fact, Mr. City Attorney, that you and your brother have never paid into the City Treasury one cent for the services this stenographer has rendered you and your brother in your private business, and is it not true that you have never asked nor received for the City of Fulton a reasonable sum or any sum whatsoever from Messrs. Hartnett and Conners and the Pathfinder Construction Co. for said stenographer's service to them?

Mr. City Attorney and Special County Judge, the taxpayers of the City of Fulton would like to have you tell them in the next issue of this paper if the foregoing is true or false, as they are vitally interested. In case [illegible] this letter, such silence shall act as a sufficient answer.

ANOTHER TAXPAYER.

BILL MAY PASS

Supervisors Believe That Appropriation for Minetto Bridge May Be Made

According to last night's Palladium County Superintendent Howard, County Attorney Gallagher and the members of the Highways Committee of the Board of Supervisors, composed of C. H. Nichols, V. V. Vant and H. Louis Wallace, returned from Albany last night, where they found that the special appropriation bill carrying $50,000 for the Minetto bridge, now in the Ways and Means Committee of the Assembly, would be passed this week, and where they also secured the pleasing information that the plans for the Pulaski-Altmar road, five miles long, and the Williamstown-Comden road, seven miles long, would be completed in a few days and sent here for approval.

The new roads will cost in the neighborhood of $15,000, of which the county will pay approxiately $50,000 and as soon as they are returned and the Minetto bridge bill enacted there will be a special meeting of the Board of Supervisors to authorize the raising of the county's share of these projects. At the same meeting John C. Henry will probably be appointed County court stenographer at a salary of $1,200 a year.

The building of the new State roads will complete the trunk line from Oswego to Utica, with the exception of a short stretch between the county line an Camden, which it is hoped will also be put under contract later this year: The Williamstown road runs across the town from Albion to the Oneida county line.

With this road finished Oswego will have good connections with Watertown, Syracuse, Utica, Rochester still lacks fourteen miles of improvement betweed Wolcott and Sodus, but it will be possible toogo to Rochester and Buffalo over improved highways via Elbridge, Auburn and Canandaigua. Every effort is being made to push the Wolcott-Sodus stretch and this also may be put under contract this season.

BERLIN JOURNAL HEAPS ANATHEMA ON DECEIVERS

Paris, Saturday.—The Paris Matin reproduces the following article from the Berlin Tag, a conservative newspaper, according to the Eclaireus de Nice, of March 29:—

"We have been deceived in all our calculations.

"We expected that the whole of India would revolt at the first sound of the guns in Europe, but, lo! thousands and tens of thousands of Indians are now fighting with the English against us.

"We expected that the British Empire would crumble to pieces, but the British colonies have united, as they have done before, with the mother country.

"We expected a victorious revolt in British South Africa, and there was only a fiasco.

"We expected disturbances in Ireland, and Ireland sends against us some of her best contingents.

"We thought the peace party all powerful in England, but it has disappeared amid the general enthusiasm that the war against Germany has aroused.

"We reckoned that England was degenerate and incapable of being a serious factor in the war, and she shows herself to be our most dangerous enemy.

"It was the same thing with France and Russia. We thought that France was corrupt, and that she had lost the sense of national solidarity, but we now learn that the French are formidable adversaries.

"We thought that Russia could do nothing; we believed that her people were too profoundly discontented to fight in favor of the Russian government; we counted on its rapid collapse as a great military Power, but Russia has mobilized her millions of men very rapidly and very well. Her people are full of enthusiasm, and her force is crushing.

"Those who have led us into all these faults, all these calculations, all these mistakes about our neighbors and their affairs, have assumed a heavy burden of responsibility."

PREMIER ADMITS COUNTRY MAY ENTER THE WAR

London, Saturday.—The Daily Mail's correspondent at Sofia telegraphs under a Friday date:

"The Bulgarian Premier, M. Radoslavooff, has acknowledged the possibility of Bulgaria's impending participation in the war in support of the Triple Entente Powers. This attitude was brought about by Germany's refusal to deliver munitions of war which Bulgaria has paid for or to make the April loan advance as agreed upon."

The Times Sofia correspondent also takes the view that Bulgaria canot long maintain her position of neutrality.

"It is realized," says this correspondent, "that time is on the side of the Entente Powers, and the attack on the Dardanelles has caused all parties to recognize the fact that a change is at hand. It is believed a reconstruction of the Cabinet is impending which will facilitate this change. The Cabinets of Berlin and Vienna are becoming alarmed and desperate efforts are being made to compromise Bulgaria in the eyes of the Eentente Powers by provoking hostilities between Bulgaria and Serbia. But the Bulgarian government is firmly resolved not to allow its hand to be forced."

COST OF MOBILIZATION WILL DRIVE ITALY TO WAR

London, Saturday.—The Daily Telegraph publishes a dispatch from Dr. E. J. Dillon, its special correspondent at Rome, regarding the probable outcome of the negotiations between Italy and Austria-Hungary. The latter, he says, has made certain conditional offers, but these are accompanied by important reservations.

Meanwhile the financial and economic strain of the situation created in Italy by her military preparations is very severe, and Dr. Dillon maintaines the belief he has held from the outset that within a short time Italy will intervene in the war on the side of the Allies.

Londan, Saturday.—The Times' correspondent at Petrograd says:

"Prince Eugene Trubetskoi contributes to the Retch an article discussing the recent rumors of the Austro-Hungarian overtures for a separate peace. Disavowing all precise information regarding whether Austria actually has attempted to enter into negotiations with Russia or to sound government circles the writer nevertheless deems the rumors so far plausible, in that at the present moment a separate peace would confer very real benefits upon Austria.

"So long as war continue, he says, and Italy and Rotmainia, join the Allies, Austria risks losing Trieste and Transylvania, whereas if immediate peace is concluded she may preserve these provinces."

Opinions

The Spirit Still There

The flurry in Bethlehem steel was a sign that all the dash and take a chance spirit has not gone out of the stock market. It is a long time since there was a killing on exchange and a long time since rumors of a melon to be cut or a stock to be boosted gave the speculative the thrill which is necessary for an active market. It all came in Bethlehem. Mr. Schwab set the stage months ago in hobnobbing with royalty in the story of millions upon millions in contracts, in the state department's notice that he must not violate neutrality, etc. Before all this Bethlehem was selling at 30. Slowly it went up to 45. On Tuesday it reached 155 and an hour later it sagged to 125. The point is that the intrinsic value of the property had not changed since it was quoted at 30. The difference represented the belief that its future was assured and that it would be a dividend payer.

So much for Bethlehem. The lesson is the buoyancy and hope of American business men. Give them confidence and business will boom. Let them believe there is to be stability, dividends and the wheels of industry will turn. Even the slight chance of profit will make men embark in new lines. What this country needs today is a business policy which will give men encouragement and hope. America has the captains of industry, the capital and the best labor in the world. It needs reasons for confidence and then we shall hear no more of depression.—Watertown Standard.

The Canneries Bill

Governor Whitman should veto the canneries bill which the Legislature has just sent to him. Whether he views this legislation as a matter of politics or principle, it will still be desirable for him to veto it. From either angle it is lamentable that the Republicans in the Legislature passed it. It would be incredibly stupid and dangerous for the Governor to fall in with them in supporting so vicious a measure.—New York Tribune.

Thus does one of the great metropolitan newspapers misrepresent a great industry of the State and appeal to all that is vicious and degrading in honest labor. The Tribune does not understand the conditions in the canneries. Just listen to this from its editorial columns:

"On the one side are a few canners who expect to grow sleek and rich on the process of the toil of women and children days, nights, Sundays, at 10 cents an hour. On the other side are these women and children, breaking down their nervous systems, ruining their health, not working cheerfully, but driven in competition with machines in noisy, unsanitary, moisture-reeking factories for a mere pittance."

This fits the East Side—the slums—of New York, the home of The Tribune. Anyone would imagine from The Tribune's sodden misrepresentation of the up-state canneries that they are hotbeds of disease instead of wooden sheds through which the pure air of the country circulates, and where the odors of fresh vegetables from Mother Earth give health and vigor to human life. The "moisture-reeking factories" abound in The Tribune's home town but not in the open country, and "10 cents an hour" in the country is worth as much and will go as far as 25 or 30 or even 50 cents an hour in the turkey-trotting, sewer-satured, noisy, nervous, racking, unsanitary metropolis.

IMPROVE THE BAD SPOTS

While there may be nothing new in the suggestion, how many of us stop long enough in our mad rush to think of the wonderful possibilities of transforming the Oswego river bank into one of the most beautiful spots to be found south of the many islands in the St. Lawrence river.

Then again there is another spot belonging to the city that should receive attention now so that in a few years Fulton may have a public park shaded by trees and overlooking the surrounding country for miles. The ground surrounding the imposing looking standpipe has wonderful opportunities for improvement as a place of recreation.

East Park is conceded to be beautiful. Its beauty lies in the naturalness of everything within its borders—from the unpaved pathways to the very tops of the noble trees. But the city is not complete with one such place as East Park. It should prepare to acquire more beauty spots. Indeed, it may not be too early to cast longing eyes at those beautiful grounds owned by the Oswego County Agricultural Society on the West Side. There nature has been lavish, and the West Side needs just such a place as the shores of Lake Neahtawanta as a spot for the recreation of the hundreds of toilers who live beyond "the great divide."

This article is not meant to usurp any of the prerogatives of the new Chamber of Commerce. It is merely a suggestive thought—a thought that, if realized might help to make the city a still better place in which to live.

East Broadway is a beautiful street. It leads to two of the most beautiful resting places to be found anywhere—Mt. Adnah and St. Mary's cemeteries. The street should be as beautiful as the cemeteries, and the beautiful ground owned by the city overlooking the cemeteries, and surrounding the new standpipe, ought to receive now a lot of attention in the way of practical forestry.

It is doubtful whether aside from the river's banks there is a place in the city where forestry is needed so badly as upon the standpipe hill; there is no place where a few trees would produce grander results. A noble purpose would be served by devising a plan for making a public park on the land surrounding the concrete standpipe.

HOME-DESTROYING BALLOTS

"Woman's place is in the home"—all the anti-suffragists are agreed on that. They will, therefore, be intensely interested in the experiences of Mrs. Ida B. Sammis, who cast a vote on tax matters at Huntington on April 6. Her diary for that day shows to what extent the burden of the ballot tends to take woman out of her proper "sphere."

Arising at 6 a.m., Mrs. Sammis prepared the breakfast for her family. Thereafter she washed the dishes and cleaned the first and second floors of her house, hung some pictures, prepared luncheon, including the cooking of soup, meat, vegetables and dessert, and after luncheon she washed dishes again and cleaned house some more. Then she sallied forth to vote, finishing the casting of her ballot before her husband, who could vote for candidates, whereas she was safeguarded under the law from that tax on her intelligence.

Having voted, she appeared as a witness in a will case, then went to her lawyer's office to transact some business. There followed a visit to the bank and the organization of a Bible class for adults. Leaving there, she foregathered with an anti-suffragist returning from a card party, who reminded her that "woman's place is in the home." Stung by that to a realization of her duties, she hastened home and had dinner ready for her husband when he arrived; then spent the evening with her family over books, newspapers and music until she retired at 9:30 to rest "after the fatigues of voting."

It is indeed fortunate for the public that it has been privileged to learn these things. There must be settled this fall the question whether women are to have the burdensome ballot thrust upon them and be swept by it from their serene haven of peace and propriety. Ballot or no ballot, the Home must be preserved. When the ballot conflicts with the Home to the extent set forth by Mrs. Sammis' diary, there can be no hesitation about the side all home-lovers must take on the equal-suffrage referendum.—New York Tribune.

The canneries bill ought to be signed, not as a matter of politics, but as a matter of principle and justice.—Oneida Dispatch.

Do you like clean-made rye bread? It's nourishing. The Black Baking Co's product is just what you've been looking for. adv112

PURPLE PANSY BRIGADE LATEST BRITISH CRAZE.

Flower Is Sign Wearer Has Some Friend Among Wounded at Front.

One of the latest war crazes in English society is the "purple pansy brigade." If you have an intimate friend or relative wounded at the front you wear a buttonhole of purple pansies. The result has been an unexampled demand for the purple pansy.

Now that there is almost no one who has not a friend among the casualties, practically all the women at fashionable gatherings wear a cluster of the sympathetic flower, and some of the men do the same. At some of the smart luncheons at the big hotels the effect is most curiously mournful.

But the purple pansy also serves as a useful conversation opener. "My dear, what friend of yours has been wounded?" leads to all sorts of interesting, mysterious, sentimental inquiries. The purple pansy, therefore, is a great relief, although it does indicate suffering on the part of somebody else.

In London the demeanor of the smart crowd is distinctly more cheerful as the war proceeds. Conditions, the mere prospect of which seemed unbearable, have now become second nature. It would be wrong to say it is possible to get used to having one's relatives killed or wounded. But one is inclined to think that when bereavements come in mass, when more or less every one is suffering, the shock and horror diminish in intensity.

WANT BIG JULY 4 FETE.

Philadelphians Plan Special Celebration This Year.

Plans for celebrating July 4 next, not only as the nation's birthday, but as the fiftieth anniversary of the conclusion of the civil war, have been launched by the Fourth of July committee of city councils in Pennsylvania, which will ask an appropriation of $50,000 from the state and the increase of Philadelphia's appropriation from $6,000 to $15,000.

President Wilson and members of his cabinet, as well as the governors of the forty-eight states of the Union, members of congress and other officials will be invited to Philadelphia Sunday, July 4, to attend services in Old Christ church. To have President Wilson press an electric button connected by wire with the churches throughout the country and give the signal for the simultaneous singing of a hymn of praise has been suggested as one of the features of the day.

The celebration proper will be held on Monday, July 5, beginning in the morning at Independence hall, where President Wilson will unfurl a large American flag, whose stars will be contributed separately by the governors of each state of the Union. The banner will be made in the Betsy Ross house.

BLONDS GET COMFORT.

America Finds It Can Supply All the Needed Dyes.

The feminine world, which had been alarmed over reports that the supply of henna and other hair dyes was cut off because of the war, is now somewhat relieved by the discovery that henna is not exclusively a product of Turkey, but grows as well in North America.

The price of pyrogallic acid, which is used with henna, has been raised 25 per cent. It has heretofore been manufactured in Germany, but the increase in price has induced French manufacturers to undertake to supply the demand, and so all is well in the boudoir.

Farewell, Winter

Enter now the joytime! Gray winter pecks his grip.
He gets a parting blessing, "God speed you on the trip!
Take your blizzards with you—your regiments of snow,
But first we'll turn the fiddle for a heads-round ere you go!

(Keep the fire blazin'—
The farewell times in view,
But the roof we will be raisin'
In a thunder whirl with you!)

Enter now the joytime! The winter fires you made
With home sweet warmth and cheerfulness throw summer in the shade,
And all the stories that you told—we ask not were they true,
Oh, winter, for your heart of gold, just one more whirl with you!

(Keep the fire blazin'
Till peal the bells of day!
The roof we will be raisin'—
We'll dance our friend away!)

—Frank L. Stanton in Atlanta Constitution.

SPRING
CLEAN-UPS AND FLIES

April is the month of clean-ups, and the custom of a municipal housecleaning in the spring is one that ought to be extended, not only in the cities but in the rural districts as well.

Disease germs do not originate in the filth, but are spread from person to person. Insanitary and filthy surroundings lower the individual's resistance and render him more liable to infection. Filthy and insantary conditions and accumulations of dirt may also act as breeding places for flies and other insects, which may disseminate disease.

Commissioner Biggs of the State Department of Health has therefore asked the presidents of local Boards of Health throughout the State to organize a State-wide Clean Up Week or Clean Up Day (April 22).

In his letter he points out that "Our first duty, one which we may consider the householder owes to himself, should be to give the entire household a thorough housecleaning—such a cleaning as it is practicable if not impossible to accomplish during the winter. This housecleaning should be thorough and should especially include the cellar. Rubbish and filth of all descriptions should be accumulated and removed. The house should then be carefully swept and dusted with windows wide open; floors and woodwork washed; bedding, rugs and upholstering shaken, cleaned and aired, and the entire inside of the house with its furnishings exposed to the fresh air and sunshine.

The next duty of the householder, one which we may say he owes to his neighbor, is to see that his premises are cleaned and placed in as sanitary and attractive a condition as possible. All piles of rubbish and especially every trace of garbage and putrescible material should be gathered up and carted away. The yard should be cleaned and raked, manure piles removed, the privy cleaned and disinfected with chlorine of lime and made fly-proof. If the well has not been cleaned recently it also should be cleaned. This cleaning of the premises should in brief be considered merely as extension of the housecleaning within the home. We will thus be able to start the season with a clean sheet, as it were—a healthful and sanitary condition of house and premises which will establish a standard to be maintained at all times.

The final duty of the householder, which may be considered one which he owes to the community, is to co-operate with his neighbor and the health authorities in cleaning up the village streets, public areas, streams and public buildings, etc. Here the householder must show his broadmindedness and public spirit. He should inquire whether the garbage of the community is being disposed of in a sanitary manner; whether any cesspools are overflowing or any drains discharging into streams; whether the dairies supplying the community have been inspected and put in sanitary condition. Finally he should support the board of health and health officer in every way in their endeavors to see that all health measures and health regulations are intelligently and strictly enforced."

The fly is the commonest disease carrier in New York State and it is the fly in particular which revels in all sorts of dirt. It breeds in filth and feeds on filth and walks on filth, and then carries the germs it has picked up on its feet and deposits them in the mouth of the milk pitcher or on the sugar.

The female fly lay her eggs in preference in horse manure, but if horse manure can not be found, human excreta or cow dung or any fermenting vegetable refuse or even kitchen garbage or any sort of rubbish, such as old moldy papers, will do.

The fly lays about 120 eggs at a time and a little simple arithmetic will show that if a pair of flies begin breeding about the middle of April, and if all their descendants live, and breed once in three weeks, their offspring will amount to more than five millions of millions by September. Of course it would never be possible for all the offsprings to live in this way, but the calculation illustrates the fact that the time to stop fly breeding is in the spring, for every fly which fails to reproduce at this time means thousands of flies less in August.

OLD TIME WARS

THE PRESENT ONE

By Victor Elliott

Ponderous deliberation played a big part in old-time wars. Rapid action plays a more important part in the wars of the present. Last summer half a million men were mobilized and several battles fought within two weeks after t he war was declared in Europe. This feverish activity was not peculiar to one army corps, but characterized several fields of battle hundreds of miles apart.

Now, after a period of several months from the day the first shot was fired, there have been more battles fought and more engaged than in all the four years of our Civil War and the entire 20 years of the Napoleonic wars combined.

Again, at sea the loss of ships and lives through naval engagements exceeds by three times the total loss and destruction in all maritime wars since the days of the Spanish armada.

In the recent Balkan wars, from the firing of the first shot, the battles were immediate and continuous.

In the Russo-Japanese war, although the field of activity was hundreds of miles from Japan and thousands of miles from Russia, the fierce battle of the Yalu was fought a few days after the declaration of hostilities.

What a contrast between the startling swiftness and continual fighting of these wars and the leisurely deliberation of former conflicts.

In our Civil War the actual conflict was ushered in by the firing upon Fort Sumter early in April, 1861. Three months later, July 21, the initial battle of the war was fought—the first battle of Bull Run. Fewer than a hundred thousand men were engaged, although both sides had been preparing for a year previous for the trouble they felt could not be avoided. At that time, it should be noted, the population of the North and South was nearly as large as the present population of France. About a thousand men were killed at Bull Run, and the result was so paralyzing to both North and South that eight months went by before other serious battles were fought.

The seven days' fight around Richmond—latter part of June, 1862, was the second important battle of the war. Stonewall Jackson had been active in the Shenandoah Valley in the meantime, but encounters between main bodies on a large scale had been avoided.

Following this occurred the second Bull Run campaign, wherein —from the middle of August to the latter part of September—there was lively fighting around Cedar Mountain, Bull Run, Crampton's Gap and Antietam.

Three months later the battle of Fredericksburg followed. Then for five months, the two armies lay idle within sight of each other.

The battle of Chancellorsville was fought May 1, 1863.

Two months later came Gettysburg, and then for ten months the army of the Potomac and the army of the northern Virginia rested on their arms, their trenches hardly a rifle shot apart.

How a Parrot Effected a Match

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

"Lucy," said Mrs. Arnold to her niece, Lucy MacKnight, "how about this affair between you and George Horbison? George has been attentive to you for six months and so far as I know nothing has come of it."

"What can I do, Aunt Rebecca? I can't make him propose."

"My dear," said the old lady in a kindly tone, "I have a suggestion to make."

"What is it, Aunt Beck?"

"Get a parrot."

"A parrot!"

"Yes, a parrot. But you'll understand me better after I have told you a story. When I was your age a number of young men at different times showed me a good deal of attention, but any one who married me must furnish all the income on which we would live, for I hadn't a cent. There's many a splendid girl who has remained a maid for this reason. Any prudent young man is liable to balk because the girl he would make his wife can furnish nothing toward the family support.

"Half a dozen young men had been devoted to me, but when each had became convinced that he must shoulder the whole load if he married me he withdrew. One day at the beginning of the summer a friend of my mother's came in and said that she and her family were going to the country and asked if we would take care of her parrot while they were gone. Mother said she would be happy to accommodate her, and the parrot—they called him Roger—was brought over. He was a queer-looking bird—all parrots are—and was very amusing. The way he would climb about his cage, muttering to himself, made us all laugh. To me he seemed like an alderman in a red waistcoat.

"We put Roger on the porch, which was nicely fitted for summer lounging, and usually left him there all night, except when it stormed. In the evening we sat there ourselves; at least I did, for I found it a very convenient place to receive my friends.

"That spring I had met a young man who seemed to be as much pleased with me as the others had been, and by the time summer came he was giving me the usual devotion. But he was a clerk on something like $1,200 a year salary, with nothing laid up or in prospect, and I expected that when September came and those away for the summer returned I should be left out in the cold again.

"During August there was scarcely any one in town, and my admirer had no place to go except to our house, and he was there four or five evenings a week. The truth is, this fact of his having nowhere else to go was the principal reason for his coming so often to see me. He never said a word about love or marriage, though I admit—but I am getting ahead of my story.

"Well, Jack, as I have said, spent nearly every evening during July and August at our house. Sometimes my mother used to sit with us, but mother was afraid of the night air, and since we always sat on the porch she didn't trouble us very much. Jack used to apologize for being at the house so much, saying that if we could stand him till his mother and sisters came home he would give us a rest. I knew very well that he said this to prevent my considering his attentions serious. Of course I told him he was quite welcome and since all our friends were out of town I was as needful of his company as he was of mine.

"On the 1st of September Roger's owner returned to the city and the same evening came around for her pet. Jack was there, as usual, and mother and the lady came out on to the porch for the parrot. Jack rose and was introduced to the lady. He did not reseat himself, but stood on the step where he usually stood when I bid him good night on his leaving me.

"Roger was evidently quite pleased to see his mistress again and strutted about, whetting his beak on his perch and showing off all kinds of antics. When Jack said that he would bid us good evening the parrot suddenly exclaimed:

"'Goodby.'

"Every one laughed, and doubtless this excited the parrot to further remark.

"'Give me another, Beck,' cried the bird.

"Our porch was furnished with an electric light, which Jack and I always kept turned off. Tonight it was turned on, and my crimson cheeks betrayed Roger's meaning. Jack in confusion was walking away when the parrot cried out:

"'Come back, Jack. You may have one more.'

"I turned and ran into the house and up to my room, where I suffered no end of mortification. I knew the story would soon be all over town, and it was. Every time Jack met an acquaintance he was hailed with the words 'Give me another,' and my girl friends taunted me with 'Come back, Jack; you may have one more.' The result was that Jack was driven into matrimony with me and I with him. We were married and have lived happily ever since."

"Aunty," said Lucy, "where can I get a parrot and how much would one cost?"

"You don't need a parrot, dearie. There are plenty of other devices that will do as well."

"Yes, auntie, but the parrot does it all himself."

SELECTING AN OUTFIT

A Few Correct Pieces Better Than Many Indifferent Ones---A Deciding Factor

New York, April 17.—Prospective brides are not the only people interested in selecting the outfit that will best fit their requirements and come within their means. This is a problem that every woman must solve in one fashion or another, and that requires special study and self-restraint at this time of year when Nature calls for new garnishings, and the shops spread tempation in one's way, in particularly enticing guise.

The wise shopper, first takes account of what she has on hand, and determines whether she can cleverly remodel a dress or whether she must pay so much for the work that a new gown will be a better investment.

The desirable outfit, even for a bride, should contain only a moderate number of changes, but each should be the best to be had of its kind.

A very smart three-piece suit that will be complete with or without the outer coat, is the first necessity for average needs. This may be of wool in fine gabardine, serge or poplin, or of silk and wool poplin, or faille or taffeta, if one has another plain suit to do duty for times when the silk is too light, or too dressy.

Princess Gowns

One piece, or Princess gowns, are decidedly smart, and this may be the best investment with a smart top coat, of covert, golf-cord, or fancy woolen, that will do duty over a plain or dress rig. The old time idea of a dark blue skirt and tan covert coat is revived this year and promises to be well endorsed.

Whatever the choice, some sort of a get-up must be had that makes one ready to go to any daytime function feeling correctly gowned. This means that the hat, boots, gloves, etc., must all be in perfect accord, though those may go equally well with an entirely different toilet.

McCall Designs

One or two frocks that will suit more elaborate use—the kind generally termed dancing frocks—should be in every wardrobe that aspires to completeness, and these may be simple or elaborate as taste and purse dictate. The coloring should be first of all becoming, the model suited to the style of the wearer, and it is a good plan to have the bodice cut so that it's low without a guimpe, and high with one, to answer various requirements.

In the catagory of sport toggery, comes the whole line of separate skirts of wool and cotton, and the smart plain shirt waists of linen, batiste and silk. The loose coat that will do duty for sunny or rainy weather, and the sweaters of silk or wool that fill a place for which nothing else answers.

Hats and Fixings

It all depends on the environment whether two hats, or more are necessary. Many people get on admirably with a smart knock-about hat of tailored style, and one dressy hat that goes with anything in their outfit.

Extra care is needed in securing just the right type of hat if the supply is limited, only one should remember that the plainer hat is seen several times as often as the fancy one, and reckon its importance correspondingly. Shoes and gloves, veils and fixings, must be neat and trim, and may be as elaborate as the dress limit will permit.

The Fulton Evening Times

Fulton's Logical Newspaper and Advertising Medium

The Fulton Evening Times has the largest evening circulation of any newspaper circulating in this city—not even excepting one single Syracuse daily. It is almost greater than that of the two Syracuse evening papers combined. Its sworn statement on April 1, 1915, was as follows:

"Average number of copies of each issue of this publication sold or distributed, through mails or otherwise, to paid subscribers during the six months preceding the date above, 2150.

"G. WILLIAM BRAUN.

"Sworn to and subscribed before me this 1st day of April, 1915.

"A. T. JENNINGS,
Notary Public.

A NEW ERA IS COMING

Beginning with next Monday morning The Evening Times will put on board a circulation campaign that will win for the paper a PAID circulation list of more copies than ARE SHOWN in the above sworn statement.

The Evening Times has engaged the services of a man experienced in circulation work upon large city daily newspapers. He comes to us with all the qualifications necessary to give service to the publishers, the people of Fulton and, last but not least, to the advertising patrons of this newspaper.

NOTE THIS ALSO

The advertising rate of The Fulton Evening Times [illegible] per inch per thousand circulation (not all paid), than [illegible] other daily newspaper entering the homes of Fulton.

CITY MARKET GETS IMPETUS

Campaign to Begin Monday That Will Result in Securing One of City's Greatest Needs

The directors of the Chamber of Commerce held an executive session last night at the office of the Chamber for the purpose of appointing several committees.

Educational, city, market, merchants and advertising committees were discussed and although the personel of all the committees was pretty well decided on there may be some slight changes and for that reason the committees were not announced officially. Secretary Heydecker announced this morning that the Chamber will commence an active market campaign Monday, and the plans of the Chamber in regard to the new city market idea will be set forth in the columns of The Times. Seventy-two cities have tried the market idea under the supervision of their various chambers and the testimony of these cities will be well worth reading.

The directors of the Chamber of Commerce believe that a city market will be a great boon to the merchants of this city. One merchant when questioned the other day (a hardware dealer) said that Fulton was losing out on the trade of the farmer because he could find no market for his produce, butter, eggs or the like, in this city. Instead of coming here, therefore, the farmer goes to Hannibal, and likewise instead of buying his hardware here, he buys it in Hannibal. The city market here would restore the farmer trade to the merchants and at the same time provide the housewives of the city with a convenient, sanitary and up-to-date shopping center.

PATENT TO H. J. MEADER

Invents Improvement to Machines Used in Paper Mills.

The United State Patent Office has recently granted an important patent to Henry J. Meader, formerly of Utica but now superintendent of the Skaneateles Paper Company's mills.

The patent relates to beaters, which are machines used in paper mills to transfer old paper and similar paper-making material into paper stock from which new paper is to be made. Mr. Meader has invented an improvement in this machine which feeds the aterial to the beater in such a way that a large part of the time and power formerly used in the operation is now saved. This result is obtained by placing in front of the beater roll a feed-fall which slants downward towards the bottom of the beater tank from a point considerably removed from the beater roll to a point on the bottom of the tank at some distance from the bed plate, leaving a level space at the bottom of the tank between the lower end of the feed-fall and the bed plate. This arrangement produces a rapid gravity feed of the stock without the roll being choked by contact with the stock until the materials reaches the bed plate.

Mr. Meader's patent is already installed in all the Skaneateles mills, also in the Oswego Falls Pulp and Paper Company's mill, in the Mutual Box Board Company's mill in Utica, in the Crescent Paper Co.'s mill in Phoenix an in several other mills. It saves considerable time in furnishing the beaters and in preparing stock, saving both time and labor, increasing the production of mills and requiring less power to operate beaters.—Skaneateles Press.

JOHN C. PARTRICK

John C. Partrick, aged 55 years, died at his home, 519 Cayuga st last night after an illness of some months. Mr. Partrick was a resident of this city for forty-eight years, and conducted a cafe on the west side for many years past. He was born in Richfield, Conn.

He is survived by his wife, two sons Clarence M. Partrick, of the United States navy, and Harry E. Partrick, of North Rose, N. Y., a daughter, Ruby Partrick, and a sister, Mrs. C. M. Havens, both of this city.

The funeral will be held from the Church of the Immaculate Conception Monday morning at 9:30 o'clock, and Rev. Father Lindsman will officiate. Mr. Partrick was a member of Fulton Elks and had many friends in the city.

Interest in the Great Game

Interest is picking up in the great American game. This is indicated by the fact that the game is receiving attention on the front pages of the newspapers, as well as on the regular financial pages, where the information is usually supplied. They are batting them out strong on the New York Stock Exchange and the financial sports of the country are enthusing. The stock market is going up.

There is always a widespread interest in the price of stocks, for that is why every daily newspaper prints the quotations. A lot of people own four or five shares, if not more, of something or other and their mildest glance at the market to see how much more or less they are worth than they were when they looked the last time.

There are still others in great numbers who follow the game and consider how much they would have made if they had only purchased Bethlehem Steel when it was down at 30. There are some who follow the game who have never bought a share of stock in their lives and hope for the love of Mike that they never will.

The real sports, however, are the ones wo purchase stock on margins, "which is just like buying real estate on a mortgage," with this difference the stock can slip away so quickly that one doesn't realize he had it.

Interest in the market is becoming large because stocks are going up, and, of course, the interest may be something more than just the excitement. The stock market is a barometer of business. The wisdom and foresight of business men are concentrated there. It is there that the shadow falls before the storm and where the silver lining appears when the storm is overhead. The price of stocks reflects business condition and reflects before the conditions fully arrive. Businecc men in large industries, therefore, take some note of this fact, and shape their plans and acts accordingly.

The majority of those who play the great American game buy stocks when the prices are high. That is because optimism is in the air. Nobody is afraid and every one is sure things are going to be still better. They sell, when things are going to the dogs, on the theory that one might as well save what he has; and, anyway, one can buy the securities back when they get down to rock bottom. It is a costly game when theus played and the way to make it more costly is to do the business on margin.

If prices should continue to rise, the interest will increase and will culminate when thep rices are at the top; then as the sag comes, interest will decline. The game could b playd on the fall as well as on the rise, but that is contrary to the habits of thought of the average human being, particularly a Yankee.—Utica Observer.

I wonder what all the skeptics have to say,
When they read Rube's feat in the papers today
The Dodgers were stunned before his mighty swings
When the southpaw shot the ball as if on wings.
If that's lack of condition I'd like to know
How good one must be to stay with the big show.

Local Heirs of Moses Ludington Should Communicate With Western Lawyer At Once

The following communication was received by the Times this morning:

Postmaster, Fulton,
Oswego County, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—In connection with the settlement of a valuable estate in San Francisco it becomes necessary to communicate with the descendants of Moses Ludington who lived many years ago in your city and had a large family.

In order that they may receive their dues I should appreciate it if you would hand this letter to your local press so that it may have some publicity and your fellow townsmen who are interested have the opportunity to communicate with me.

If any of the descendants of Moses Ludington are known to you, I should be very glad if you would show them this letter.

Very truly yours,
Sid M. van Wyck, Jr.

A Times reporter interviewed several of the older residents of the city this morning in an effort to learn something regarding Moses Ludington. John Bogue, of S. 1st st., formerly a contractor here, remembered Ludington well. He stated that the man was engaged in the contracting business here in the 50's with Thomas Keeler, who died many years ago, in Mexico. Most of their work was done on the enlargement of the old canal here and Ludington resided in the house now occupied by William Bogue on S. 1st st. Ludington left the city about the year 1857 according to Mr. Bogue, and went to California. He made a considerable amount of money here and it is presumed that fortune also favored him in the West. Mr. Bogue could not remember whether Ludington had any children or not.

There are several Ludingtons in this section and some in Syracuse and Pulaski. If any of the above can claim relationship with the man Mosses Ludington, they can obtain further information from The Times.

WAR AT THE QUIRK

Films Showing War's Action Here Monday—Thrilling Moving Pctures.

Actual scenes on the field of battle, the engagement of allied and German forces, the surrender of cities, the destruction of buildings, the speeding of armored motor cars, bombardments, the flight of terror-stricken inhabitants from threatened towns, the blowing up of bridges, artillery duels and and hundreds of other thrilling and touching scenes of the European war, presented in moving pictures will furnish Fulton an opportunity to get a real idea of the war and what it means.

The excitement, the danger and bravery, the losses, the terrible destruction and destitution resulting, the war's tragedies and comedies will all be portrayed in a manner far better than writer or artist could ever show them.

Previously only those actually engaged in war itself could have a true knowledge of its action. Now, however, made possible non-combatant may sit comfortable in his theatre chair and without exertion or fear watch the details of events which change the courses of nations. To bring about this thing, at least one non-combatant was forced to face the tempest of real war—the photographer. To get the pictures which will interest thousands of people he hung from moving trains, stood in the midst of the fire of guns, faced, besides cannon, the dangers of hunger, cold, disease, execution. But he succeeded.

To mention every scene would be practically impossible, for there are 5,000 feet of film. However, besides cavalry and infantry charges, with desperate men storming trenches held by equally desperate enemy, there are Zeppelins flying over the outskirts of Paris, civil panic in the form of a run on a bank, the Belgian-German fight at Namur, the German army entering Brussels, the swift rush of dog-drawn mitrailleuses into battle and an armored train at Avrin firing broadsides as it passes.

The camera man was in the thick of the fighting along the River Lys. The Belgians are shown fighting in their trenches and building pontoon bridges across the River Scheldt. Louvain with the wreck of St. Peter's and roofless and windowless habitations is seen. A lecturer will explain the pictures and connecting events.

CARNIVAL'S SECOND NIGHT

A Pretty Feature of the Evening Was the Presentation of Flowers.

Another capacity house thronged The Quirk last night at the second performance of the school carnival. As on the first evening the pupils did splendid work, and if anything even eclipsed their previous performance.

Many of the little people were the recipients of beautiful bouquets, the gifts of fond parents or friends. The sketch by the High school pupils was again a feature, and the "Cinderella" number was also a big success.

A large sum was netted by the Carnival for the benefit of the library and the High school Athletic Association.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, April 17.—Strict adherence to parliamentary procedure will be insisted upon by Chairman Elihu Root of the Constitutional Convention and there will be little opportunity for a delegate to be recognized when he desires to be heard either in favor of or against a proposd amendment to the Constitution, if he resorts to a spontaneous interpretation of parliamentary law.

Senator Root is a master of parliamentary ethics. His long public career which carried him to different countries and which has been marked by membership of many deliberate bodies and councils, has fitted him most amply for the high office of chairman of the Constitutional Convention.

The distinguished diplomat and former United State senator realizes that ignorance of parlimentary law causes delay and that such delays are not desired by the delegates; neither does he desire them.

It has been said by many that during the present session of the legislature that there have been frequent illustrations of lack of parlimental law knowledge in both the senate and assembly. The experienced clerks behind the desks, however, have prevented the records from showing any blunders.

The session now practically over, has been conspicuous on account of the large number of new members of both the senate and the assembly. To this fact has the general lack of parlimentary astuteness been attributed. The main idea which it appears has been in the minds of the majority of the mebers, was that the quicker that action was taken on a bill the better its chances for final passage were. This belief lead to urgent requests that bills be reported when as a matter of fact, they had not been fully discussed by the members of the committee, or committees, which reported them.

The correct rule to be followed when it is the desire of a member to amend a bill is to do the amending on the order of second reading so that when the measure is on the order of final passage it will be correct in every detail. It has been a frequent custom this year to request that a measure be amended upon the order of final passage and in some instances it has been done. Such a procedure necessitates the reprinting of a bill and adds greatly to the work of the clerical force not to mention the details attending the reprinting of the measure.

There has been a dearth of such parlimentarians in the last few years as the late Thomas F. Grady, Democrat. Fred Nixon, the veteran speaker of the assembly, no longer alive; Assemblyman Burnett, at one time the Republican floor leader, also dead; the late aPtrick H. McCarren, the able aid to Senator Grady for many years and the late Senator John Raines, Republican.

Those who recall the old days at the Capitol remember the numerous repartee sessions when points of order and counter points were raised and settled without so much as sarcastic remarke being passed, let alone the exchange of angry words. These devotees of the legislative halls tell of debates when every section of the books of rules was resorted to in order that some advantage might be gained.

While it cannot be said that there is an absolute lack of parlimentary knowledge on the part of all of the present legislators, it is a recognized fact that the high standard of procedure from a parlimentary standpoint has not been maintained this year. The reason for this is not immediately obvious since the lawyers aong the members of the legislature outnumber the members of the other profession.

THE QUIRK TODAY

The feature of today's program is a three-reel Vitagraph, "The Sage Brush Girl"; the other three reels are "Palmy Days," "The Green Cat" and "The Worthier Man." Tomorrow Charles Chaplin will be seen in a Keystone comedy entitled, "Film Johnnie." Seven other reels will be shown. There is only one word to say regarding Chaplin and that is "laugh." It covers it all and to laugh is medicine to the sick and increased health and happiness to everybody.

About Sports Generally

That much-talked-of Packey McFarland-Mike Gibbons bout will be worth going miles to see if it is ever staged. And the prospects at this writing are that it will be staged within the two or three months.

McFarland and Gibbons rank as the greatest boxers in the game. They are the two brainiest, the two greatest ring generals. Both are masters of the mitt game. both are Irish, both are game and both can fight.

If the pair ever meet it promises to be a real fight. There has been a bit of ill-feeling between the two for several yeafs and this has been increased by hurling defies at each other.

McFarland one was a lightweight, but he passed from that class many years ago, although he has been fighting lightweights during that period.

The probable cause of Jimmy Clabby's weakness in his right mitt is explained by Tom Andrews of Milwaukee.

About three years ago Clabby came to Paris from Australia. I happened to be there at the time with Mrs. Andrews. We got up a dinner party and as we were leaving the hotel two negroes were standing on the sidewalk. One of them, a huge fellow, made some remark about the ladies.

Quick as a flash Clabby jumped over to the two negroes and demanded an instant apology.

The larger negro of the two made a sneering refusal. Hardly had he finished his sneer when Clabby sent a terrific right hand punch to the mouth. The negro went down in a heap.

The other negro had a cane and was just at the point of landing on Clabby's head when one of the other chaps in our party jumped in and enegaged the second negro. A few seconds later the second negro staggered to his feet. Then it was that Clabby hit him again with his right—and I think that was the punch that hurt Clabby's hand. The negro went catapaulting in the gutter and he took the count six times over.

Later Clabby said his hand hurt him and since then it has given him trouble.

After Freddie Welsh has drawn down about $20,000 in American money he probably will risk losing his tjtle in a finish fight with Willie Ritchie—if Ritchie is still a lightweight at the time.

The American public has clamored for a Ritchie-Welsh bout ever since Welsh won in London last summer. Welsh partially assured the call by granting Ritchie a 10-round chance at him in New York. Welsh gambled on the chance of staving off a Ritchie knock-out punch—and he won. Ritchie outclassed Welsh in that bout but it was a no-decision affair and Welsh retains the championship.

A whirlwind stock of trotters has come to the front in the past 20 years and Peter the Great has sired the majority of those that rank better than 2:10.

The famous sire is still alive, hearty and vigorous on the Patcher Wilkes Stock Farm in Lexington, Ky., and horsemen are certain that he will sire many more racing wonders before his breeding usefulness is over.

Detailing the record of this wonderful stallion, the Trotter and Pacer Magazine in its breeders' number, says:

"Peter the Great is the sire of a faster trotter than the world's champion of 20 years ago.

"He has 30 trotters in the 2:10 list, which is only one less than comprised the entire 2:10 class in 1895.

"He has 14 trotters with records of 2:08 or better, just 60 per cent. more than the entire list 20 years ago.

"He has placed five 2:10 3-year-old trotters to his credit.

"He has had three 2-year-olds take records of 2:10 or better.

"Peter the Great now has a total of 30 trotters in the 2:10 list, or 10 times as many as had Electioneer, the leader in 1895.

"Peter the Great, last season, had 13 trotters take records of 2:10. The season of 1915 may see a dozen or more additions to his 2:10 list.

"While no son of Peter the Great as yet holds the stallion trotting record, good judges expect to see Peter Volo, (3), 2:03½ beat the coming season.

"The above is by no means the entire story of the achievements of Peter the Great, but merely a comparison of things as they were when he first saw light and how they are now.

Another high achievement attained by Peter the Great was that of putting in more new standard performers in one season than was ever before put in by one horse, he having added 42 new ones in 1914, the best previous record being 39, established by Electioneer, who was the leading sire of 2:10 trotters at the time when Peter the Great was born.

"Peter the great also holds many honors in other lines. He is the only horse to ever win that blue ribbon of the trotting turf, the Kentucy Futurity, and in turn sire a winner of the same event. In addition to this he has also sired more winners of this classic event than any other two sires, having had four winners of the major event and two winners in the junior event.

"The get of Peter the Great have established enviable reputations for extreme gameness, and in addition to this the family as a whole is noted for its soundness. During the season of 1914 the offsprings of Peter the Great won upwards of $128,000, which is more than has ever been won in a single season by the get of any one horse.

"Peter the Great himself possessed a sensational flight of speed and was officially timed a first half of a race heat in 1:01—, with the second quarter of 29½ seconds. This was the first instance of where a trotter was officially timed a starter below 30 seconds in a race.

"As a 4-year-old Peter the Great won the fastest two-heat race ever trotted by a stallion of that age, and this record was not lowered until 1909, a period of ten years. At this age he also won three races in faster time than any other stallion of his age, with one exception.

NOTABLES IN THE LIMELIGHT

General Radko Dimitrieff, Russian Army Leader.

General Radko Dimitrieff, who commanded the czar's forces at the siege of Przemysl, was Bulgarian minister at St. Petersburg when the present war broke out. He resigned his portfolio to take service under the czar. Although one of Bulgaria's distinguished soldiers, General Dimitrieff has lived a great part of his life in Russia. He was born in Eastern Rumelia in 1859 and in 1880 was sent to Russia to complete his military education, having already served as a lieutenant in the Rumelia militia. He returned home in 1885 and took part in the revolution that made Eastern Rumelia a part of Bulgaria. In the subsequent war with Servia he was appointed chief of staff of the eastern army corps and served with gallantry.

The following year he showed his Russian sympathies by taking a leading part in the overthrow of Prince Alexander. But when a counter revolution ended in Prince Ferdinand being placed on the throne Dimitrieff was compelled to flee to Russia, where he remained until his pardon in 1896. On his return to Sofia he received a commission in the Bulgarian army and eventually became chief of staff.

In the war of 1912 against Turkey he served as commander of the first army, under the supreme command of General Michael Savoff, and won fame by his victory at Kirk Kilise, in the first battle of the war. When the war between the Balkan states broke out the following year he was made commander in chief. General Savoff declining to serve. At first he conducted a brilliant campaign, but eventually Bulgaria was compelled by exhaustion and the intervention of Roumania to give up the fight.

Governor of Tennessee.

From farm hand to chief executive of the state of Tennessee is the record of Governor Thomas C. Rye, the first Democrat in recent years to regain the state from Republican control. The story is told that when a youth Tom Rye trained a red bull calf to saddle and used him as a mount when going a-courting or to church. On his first appearance on this queer steed some young fellows began to gibe the young farmer. Leaping from his saddle, Tom tackled his tormentors and put them to flight.

The future governor was educated in the common schools of Camden, Tenn., his native town, and then went to Charlotte, Tenn., where he became a student in the law office of his uncle, Major T. C. Morris. In two years he passed his examination and returned to Camden to take up the practice of his profession. Mr. Rye became a leading lawyer in his section and established an enviable reputation for kindheartedness and sympathy for the distressed. This reputation has followed him through his life. His popularity stood him in good stead when he entered politics. He served several terms as district attorney of his district and gradually acquired prominence in state politics. So when last fall he secured the gubernatorial nomination he entered the campaign with spirit and won handily from his Republican opponent.

Identified.

In many parts of England and especially in the villages of the Black country it is quite a common thing for a man to be known so exclusively by a nickname that his real name is forgotten. A gentleman had occasion once to ask a potter for the whereabouts of a certain John Williams.

"John Williams?" repeated the man thoughtfully, knitting his brows. "I have heard tell of it. John Williams—it is familiar. I say, sir," he explained, as if seized by a sudden inspiration, "do he be married?"

"That's it," was the reply.

"And has three of a family?"

"I believe so."

"Well, sir, I'm John Williams."

HOBOES NOW GET COUNTRY RETREAT

WILL GROW GARDEN TRUCK

Are Seven Miles From Nearest Saloon, but Close to River—Will Sleep in Tents and Have Great Time Fishing and Shooting Ducks and Maybe Bathing.

Now that the spring is here the hoboes, who gather in New York city for the winter and this year were enabled by Mayor Mitchel's grant of an old house to open the Hotel de Gink, are being sent to a farm on Long Island. Instead of wandering about the country, as usual, they are going to grow chickens, flowers and vegetables.

The first squad of them has already reached the 450 acre farm which has been lent by George Crater, Jr., a New York lawyer. The farm is six miles from Riverhead and the same distance from the nearest saloon. This last was the only drawback the hoboes could see in their new rural retreat, which they have named the Farm de Gink.

Jeff Davis, king of the hoboes, motored down with the pioneers. Twenty other recent patrons of the hostelry used auto furniture vans, which carried also the travlers' baggage, nicknacks, tents and equipment so necessary to the advanced scheme of life in project.

They Put Up Tents.

When Mr. Crater and his companions reached Riverhead they tarried there long enough to stock up with shovels, pickaxes and provisions, for which—must it be said?—Mr. Crater paid. He took a kindly interest in his bright young men. He says they are not hoboes. He describes them as mechanics out of work.

The mechanics did not use the farm apparatus on reaching their new home at Flanders, dusk having come on prior to their arrival there. After it had been established that the supply of food was sufficient to cover their temporary wants the young men became anxious over the whereabouts of King Jeff and his retinue.

For it happened that in Jeff's suit were the only men who knew how to put up tents, and, which was still more important, they had the tents and tent poles with them. There are not enough wooden buildings to house all the mechanics, so most of them will have to sleep in tents.

Once the tents were erected the men turned in, and they declared their only trouble was the lack of a moving picture theater or a street organ. The quiet rather oppressed them.

Another Farm in View.

Mr. Crater said he is going to see to it that life on the Farm de Gink will not be all work. He thoroughly agrees with the man who remarked that all work and no play makes Mike a dull person. So there will be plenty of diversions for the mechanics. As this farm is within three staggers of the Peconic river, there will be plenty of opportunity to go fishing and, when the duck season is on, hunt ducks. The sprightly sports of chicken raising and tree chopping will claim their devotion.

Tame ducks and tame garden truck will be encouraged to grow under the hoboes' care, and Mr. Crater thinks that the end of the summer will see a handsome profit reaped through the efforts of his lovers of nature. But he is not engineering the scheme for that reason. He intends to let the men who make the money retain it.

Should the plan work out at Flanders, Mr. Crater says he will also turn over his 467 acre farm at Yaphank, seven miles distant. The fact that there is no water at Yaphank may be likely to make the second proposition unpopular with the mechanics, but there is an attraction—the county almshouse is at Yaphank.

Mr. Crater's main idea and difficulty just at first are to keep his guests from dwelling on their departure from their recent comfortable quarters in the Hotel de Gink, at Centre and—Worth streets, Manhattan.

LANDS IN BRIDAL GOWN.

Girl Creates Sensation on Pier at New York.

When Miss Bianca Pierontl, a pronounced brunette, landed at New York the other day on the steamship Stampalia from Naples she was all arrayed in a bridal outfit. She created no little sensation.

Bianca weighs about 210 pounds, and from toes to the crown of her head the bride to be carried out in the color of her garb the significance of her first name. Pumps, stockings, gown cloak, hat, trimmings and gloves—all were white (Bianca is "white" in Italian).

Her sweetheart, Julio Scianamia, was waiting on the pier, and the couple at once obtained their license and were married.

England Cries For Cradles.

There is a serious shortage in the supply of cradles in England, and prices have more than doubled in the last three months. The chief beds of cradle from which English cradles are woven, are in Belgium, in German hands, and there have been no importations since the war began.

Golf in the Old Days.

Centuries back golf was a pastime of the royal family, though then usually played in Scotland. The Stuart family was very fond of the game, and the first English club was established at Blackheath in 1608 by James I. His eldest son, Henry, frequently played and on one occasion nearly struck by accident his tutor with a club, whereupon he coolly remarked, "Had I done so I had but paid my debts." Charles I. was playing golf when he received the news of the Irish rebellion. James, duke of York, afterward James, II., was another ardent player. Golf is frequently mentioned in ancient Scottish records and in the fifteenth century was prohibited because it interfered with the practice of archery. Strutt considered it the most ancient game at ball requiring a bat.—London Standard.

Puss and the Weather.

The cat is an excellent barometer. When you see a cat wetting its paw in its mouth and then rubbing it energetically over the upper part of its ear you may feel pretty certain that rain is coming. This action is pussy's method of relieving the uncomfortable feeling in its ears caused by the change in the atmospheric pressure which precedes a storm. If the unpleasant feeling in the ear were due to a foreign substance then the cat would scratch the ear with its hind foot. But when pussy scrubs its ear with its saliva moistened paw it is when rain is impending.

GIRL OF TWELVE MARVEL OF MIND

Winifred Stoner's Learning Astonishes Scientists.

MOTHER RELATES THEORIES.

When Winifred Plays Chess She Talks Only French—Parent Says Children Should Begin Study of Languages Before They Are Twelve—Wants to Edit Children's Magazine.

Winifred Sackville Stoner, the twelve year-old daughter of James Buchanan Stoner, because of her remarkable mental attainments and physical development has attracted much attention from educators and scientists all over the world.

Dr. Stoner, who has been surgeon at the United States Marine hospital in Pittsburgh, has been transferred to Wilmington, N. C., and the family shortly will go into its new home.

Mother and daughter, both remarkable for their vitality and enthusiasm, if nothing else, received reporters in their suit in a New York hotel. Mrs. Stoner did most of the talking. Her big, sturdy youngster is a wholesome, rosy cheeked tomboy girl and wanted to romp rather than show off.

Training Began Before Birth.

Mrs. Stoner said she began her process of "natural education" before her baby was born.

"As soon as I realized that the good fairies were going to bring me a baby I began to plan for her," said Mrs. Stoner. "I knew that I must always be cheerful and happy if I wanted my baby to have a sweet disposition, so I was always thinking pure thoughts and smiling.

"I started training my child within two weeks after her birth. Instead of giving her rattles to play with, I tied a ball on a string across two chairs and let her kick at it, so that she was really playing football before she was a month old. When she was two months old I propped her up on pillows and rolled a ball to her, at the same time quoting lines from Virgil, so she has been familiar with them practically all her life.

"Her evening prayer was Tennyson's 'Crossing the Bar.' She could say that before she was a year old. I would never allow any one to talk baby talk to her."

Wants to Ride a Horse.

Winifred has not decided just what she wants to be when she grows up, but she surely wants a horse.

"I think now I'd like to be the editor of a magazine for children," she said, "but I would like to be a cowboy girl at the same time. If I had a magazine I would give every struggling writer every opportunity in the world to show what he could do, because I can't imagine anything on earth more discouraging than to have a manuscript returned.

"A few of my things have been returned, so I know just what the feeling is."

When Winifred plays chess she talks only French. Two or three nights a week the Stoner family decides that for the entire evening only Italian will be spoken, and all play games, sing and converse in that language. Other times only Spanish will be spoken or Japanese, Latin or Esperanto.

Little Miss Stoner is enough of a modern young lady to dab her face with powder when her nose looks shiny.

"Just look at me!" she exclaimed when she caught a glance of her face in the mirror. "I am a perfect sight."

And she promptly used her mother's powder puff.

Mrs. Stoner says children should begin the study of languages before they are twelve years old, because after that time they do not get the correct accents. However, Winifred is so far advanced now that mamma will "just let her take things easy for a couple of years."

SURE IT'S SEA SERPENT.

Florida Folk See Fabled Monster Washed Ashore.

If buzzards had not reached the spot before naturalists the Smithsonian institution might now have a really creditable specimen of the fabled sea serpent, for one was washed ashore at Indian Rocks, Fla., a few days ago. Its remains have been visited by numerous people.

From head to tail the length of the thing was estimated to be twenty-eight feet. The head was like, with its like teeth in immense jaws.

Extending the whole length of the back was a continuous fin, supported by spines several inches long, connected by a sort of gauze.

NO "LAW'S DELAYS" HERE.

Slayer Is Tried and Sentenced Day After His Crime.

Law's delay had little to do with the case of Robert Smith of Cleveland for the murder of Mrs. Grace Steinhauser of Saginaw, Mich., to whom he was to have been married that night. Smith was next day sentenced to imprisonment for life.

Smith met Mrs. Steinhauser in the county jail recently, where he was serving a term for vagrancy.

ARCTIC FROST BITES.

And the Popular Error That Rubbing With Snow Helps Them.

The idea that when your face or any other part of your body begins to freeze you must thaw it out with snow is declared to be a superstition by Vilhjalmur Stefansson. Few things could be more absurd, he says, and yet this is a superstition that has been carried with many an arctic explorer through long experience in the north. Tales are told of how even the application of snow failed to relieve the freezing, and these are taken as indications of the severity of the case instead of proof that, as a matter of fact, the snow only assists the freezing process. Any high school pupil, Stefansson says, could tell us offhand what would happen if liquid air were applied to a man's cheek or nose. Of course the part would freeze instantly. Snow has the same though less rapid effect.

The whole secret of dealing with frost bites of the face in arctic travel, he says, is to keep the hands warm and to run the warm hand over the face every few minutes to see if any part of it is frozen. Usually, also, one can keep oneself fairly well informed about the condition of one's face by wrinkling it and "making faces." If a spot of skin or cheek the size of a twenty-five cent piece becomes stiff one can always detect it by making a grimace. Then all one has to do is to take one's warm hand out of one's mitten and press it to the frozen spot for a moment until the whiteness and stiffness are gone.—Indianapolis News.

His Blasted Life.

John Grimes, a noted skinflint, residing in a rural district, became engaged to a lady of some means who chanced to be visiting in the neighborhood during the summer. Ascertaining his true character as the weeks passed, she told him all was over between them, whereupon Grimes threatened to sue for breach of promise. Rather than incur publicity and notoriety his former sweetheart, through her attorney, offered to settle for $200. "Two hundred!" shrieked Grimes melodramatically. "Two hundred dollars for ruined hopes, a blasted life! Never, never!" "How much do you think would be about right?" asked the attorney. "Make it three hundred and it's a bargain." declared Grimes instantly.—Argonaut.

Offer Declined.

It was after an attack, and two highland soldiers were lying flat to escape the flying bullets. During a brief lull in the firing one of them said, "Let's be moving on, Jock."

"I can't, Sandy," was the reply. "I got it in the leg."

"Then crawl on me my back," said Sandy, "and I'll carry ye in."

"No, danger, fear," exclaimed Jock; "the Victoria cross for you and another bullet for me."—Boston Transcript.

Odd Happenings In the War News

Union workmen in England will have no strikes during the war, having agreed to submit all differences to arbitration.

More than 700 women willing to take the places of men workers who are needed by the government have registered in twenty-four hours in London.

The Chicago postoffice authorities estimate that 12,000 pounds of food have been sent to Germany and Austria by parcel post during the last thirty days.

The death is reported of Henri Collignon, counselor of state of France, fifty-eight years old and a private soldier, although several times offered promotion.

When the Canadians took over a position from an English regiment it was found they were too tall for the trenches, and the firing bay had to be specially dug.

TAFT FINDS BOYS HAVE NEW SPIRIT

Ideal of Nation Now Is High, Says Ex-President.

COLLEGE LADS PROVE THIS.

Have All Their Old Mischievousness and Ambitions, but In Addition Have Idealized National Impulse In a Noble Standard of Clean Living and Public Service.

Ex-President William H. Taft, Kent professor of law at Yale university, has a new vision of young American manhood. Out of the business turmoil, industrial unrest and uplift movements with which the spirit of the United States has tried to express itself in the past fifteen years Mr. Taft has sensed out a new instinct in the new generation.

The discovery is one of the reasons, doubtless, why Mr. Taft is a younger man today than when he left the White House, for he is younger, and he is happy; he admits it himself. Speaking to a newspaper man the other day, the ex-president said:

"The college boy of today, as I know him, is a better boy than the college boy of my time." Mr. Taft was graduated in 1878; if anybody else has forgotten it, he hasn't. "He has higher ideals of his duty to himself and the world. The college boy of today has mischief, high spirits and a fighting spirit, too, and ambition as we knew them, but to them he has added a very high standard of clean living and public service; he has idealized the new national impulse.

"In the small, concentrated college community it is becoming impossible for a man to win the prizes—I do not mean scholarship distinction, but the awards of the honor of leadership—unless he is clean and high minded and has a pretty well fixed purpose to make himself useful to somebody besides himself and the members of his immediate family. The spirit of the country has changed a great deal of recent years. This new generation of young men shows the permanent stamp of the change. Older men are groping for it; the younger men are being molded in it.

Leaders Must Be Clean.

"In my day the test of college leadership was merely the power to lead. Among these young fellows, which it is my privilege to know, mere leadership is not enough; the boys will not accept a leader unless they believe him to be clean and unless they believe that he is trying to do things which are worth while and not things which are merely exciting or amusing for the moment.

"The whole outlook to me is encouraging. The college boys are boys who are more earnest and higher minded than were the boys of my time in college. It is only fair to assume that the same holds good in a sense of all our coming generation."

Mr. Taft told of individual young men who have come to him from the Yale employment agency on his requisition for men to perform what he spoke of mysteriously but significantly as "public service involving a great deal of moral courage." He said that he was tremendously impressed in these interviews to find what devotion to unselfish ideals of doing right and accomplishing public good he found in these boys.

Is Strict Disciplinarian.

As a judge of youthful crimes and misdemeanors the former president is a strict disciplinarian. His vote is always for a stiff sentence if a boy has done anything really wrong. If it is merely a question of playing ball on the campus and breaking a window or for some other such overenergetic amusement he will pass it off with a laugh. But if it involves reckless living, rowdyism, anything mean or yellow, no penalty is too severe to gain his vote.

Of Mr. Taft's enthusiasm as a baseball fan all America has known since he first began rooting behind Walter Johnson at Washington. There is a special double seat for his comfort at the Yale field. Never is it vacant if he is in New Haven when a game is going on. If Mr. Taft was a whole souled fan in witnessing professional baseball he is as wild as a flapjack batted sophomore in New Haven. Nor is his boyish enthusiasm limited to baseball. His own youngest son could not get mad quicker or more joyously sound the call to victory than does the Hon. William H. Taft on the field, in the gymnasium or on the observation train beside the river. He lets all that is in his healthy heart come out, and he doesn't care who sees him do it.

(Told by The American City)

Canton, Ohio.—The Junior Chamber of Commerce which has been lately organized in the Central High school of Canton was formed for the usual purpose of developing civic pride and good citizenship among the students. This organization has a distinctive feature, however, in the large amount of attention which is given to vocational guidance. One of the principal objects of the organization is to connect both the school and the student body more closely with the business interests of the city, in order that through their acquaintanceship with a good live group of students the merchants and manufacturers will be led to select the recruits for their business from this group.

The school has been for some time conducting also an employment bureau, and it has been found that the bureau has been able to place its services at the disposal of employers more effectively as a result of the activities of the Junior Chamber. Mr. Frank M. Sheldon, principal of the school and father of the local Junior Chamber movement, reports that during the last summer vacation the high school boys and girls received in wages over $21,000.

It is expected that the members of the Junior organization will be assigned definite problems to handle for the senior organization, which is is thought they are in many ways better fitted to handle than the members of the older body. It is also expected that they will prove to be "the eyes of the city for civic improvement."

Addresses by some of the leading business and manufacturing men of the city are frequently made before the Junior Chamber, and these are followed by trips of inspection to the factory or interest represented. By these means the boys gradually form definite ideas along the lines of selecting their life work.

The boys have their own committees, and it is said that they conduct their own organization with very little suggestion and direction. The training thus secured would seem to be in itself sufficient for the formation of a Junior Chamber.

Knoxville, Tenn.—An effort to train young men to think in terms of civic and industrial betterment is being made for the young men of Knoxville through the Juvenile Department of the Knoxville Board of Trade, which is under the leadership of J. Bailey Wray, chairman of the department. Boys between the ages of fourteen and eighteen are eligible to membership in the Juvenile Club.

The club is young, having been organized less than two months. The first work undertaken was that of industrial excursions. The boys were divided into groups of five each, one of the boys in each group acting as captain and a supervisor of mature age having charge of each group. Other work undertaken by the club is that of collecting the dues of deliquent members of the senior organizations. Work of this kind, it is thought, gives them a keen insight into human nature and also into methods of doing business.

A plan devised by which the boys were able to earn money for financing the work of the club and which also teaches them salesmanship and independence was for them to undertake the sale of a product of a local concern for a week on a commission basis, the commission to be placed in the treasury of the club. The local concern ocered a prize of $10 to the team selling the most of its product during the week.

Other matters which it is expected that the boys will take up are the question of agitating a parks playgrounds bond issue, a clean-up campaign, a survey of the city market, and the furthering of the work of the Beautification Committee of the Board of Commerce, which intends to launch a campaign this spring for the installation of flower boxes in the stores of the merchants on the principal business street.

Rome, N. Y.—The Junior Division of the Rome Chamber of Commerce is an organization requiring no membership fee and open to any boy doing academic work in the schools of the city, parochial or public. Its object is to stimulate a pride in the city by increasing the knowledge of the individual regarding the facts of his home town and the factors which have been ecective in its growth and upbuilding. Incidentally, the young men acquire a knowledge of general business and an interest in civic affairs which in the ordinary course of events would not come until long after they have left school.

This division works with a committee of the senior Chamber, but elects its own officers and conducts its own affairs. For a long time its principal feature was a series of factory tours in which studies were made of the manufacturing plants. A steady and continued interest was shown in the workings of these industrial plants and quite a keen understanding was indicated in the reports written by the young students regarding them. When the Camber of Commerce undertook a clean-up campaign, a part of the work of inspection and reporting fell to the juniors and was done in a most satisfactory manner. Their greatest single achievement, however, was in the help given at the time of the safety first campaign, as described in The American City for September, 1914.

This year the Juniors felt that there were some other things that they would like to know about in addition to factories, and they made a request that men from the senior Chamber meet them at stated times to discuss such subjects as "How Banking Is Done," "Everyday Law," "Advertising," "Salesmanship," "Merchandising," "Copper Products" and similar topics.

The only limits of the activities of the Junior Chamber are such as the boys may see fit to draw. There has been considerable thought of making an effort to raise money for a local worthy charity, and various matters of this kind are taken up and discussed in much the same way that the senior Chamber might consider them. It is not difficult to see of what benefit this will be within a few years to many of those who will become members of the senior body and who will come into the organization more or less familiar not only with its purposes and scope, but with its methods of operation.

Alliance, Neb.—The junior department of the Alliance Commercial Club, organized about three months ago, as in the cases of the three junior organizations mentioned above, is performing a valuable function as an auxiliary to the senior organization. The members are helping in the campaign for a community building for Alliance, an undertaking being fostered by the parent organization, and it is expected that they will be used extensively in working for improvements at the city park and also in a clean-up campaign.

The purposes of the Junior Commercial Club, as listed in the constitution of that organization, are: (1) To study the civic and industrial life of the city by first-hand observation; (2) to learn to think seriously and wisely concerning the various vocations being taught; (3) to keep the city clean and to co-operate with the city officials to the fullest extent of their ability; (4) to strive to make the city flyless, and with that end in view they have asked the co-operation of every merchant and citizen of the city; (5) to connect the work of the public schools more closely with the life of the community; (6) to have debates along the line of civic affairs; and (7) to help build more parks and playgrounds and see that such property is protected.

HOW I WON THE TITLE

Second instalment of the story of his life as recited by Jess Willard, heavyweight champion of the world, to Ed. Smith, well known fight referee and ring expert.

You can imagine that the farmer boys around a little town like Emmett, Kan., never got a great deal ofencouragement in athletics. The boyhood life of a farmer's son is usually pretty much full of drudgery, but our community was a little different because most of the farmers there were well to do and the boys had a little more time for recreation. Early I attained a reputation for being something of a sprinter, though I was a mountain of flesh and bone and weighed, when I was 21 years old, little short of 280 pounds. Of course, I never trained a minute and never knew the slightest thing about training for any kind of athletic contest, yet I could go out at any time and turn off 100 yards in 11 seconds. This was fast enough to beat any of the lads around that section of the country and I took down many a prize at the county fair.

In addition to that I could jump a little and managed to toss the weights about with some effect. As a swimmer I was a regular star and could beat any of the boys in the river, either at short or long distances.

Had I known anything about the latest ideas of starting and getting underway fast I might have improved my time some. But like other rube sprinters we just stood up to the line until the word was given and started to run as fast as we could. Spiked shoes were unknown to any of us and had anybody sprung a pair of them in our company, he probably would have been lynched as a ringing professional.

Boxing Unknown.

Glove fighting in those days was totally unknown to me and the rest of the boys in the Pottawatomie country district. We used to read of some of the mighty gladiators of the day and marvel at them, but as for knowing just how they fought, we were totally at sea. It has been my boast at different times that I never in my life engaged in a rough and tumble fight. I say it still and believe I am telling the truth, but a friend of mine who came to Havana to see me battle Johnson tells me I am wrong. He recited to me one day in the training camp how I had gone to a dance one night with my girl and had been insulted by a band of rowdies who happened to be in the neighborhood at the time. He further tells me that I slapped the nearest one to me and slapped him so hard that he fell flat on his back. A second one rushed at me, but I hit him on the top of the head with an overhand swing and floored him.

My friend claims that I then pitched in and walloped the remaining four of them putting them all to flight. I remember indistinctly of once having trouble with one of the Kelly boys at a dance in my neighborhood and that I slapped him so hard he was knocked out. That gave me a reputation for being a strong man and one who was not afraid because, as I remember it, the Kellys were fighting men and nobody in that vicinity cared much about crossing them. Yet they never bothered me after that.

Irish Judge Picked Him.

At one time, still a young man, I was mixed up in a law suit over a ho[illegible] judge was an Irishman from Kentucky and was a great admirer of a good fighter. After I got through with my testimony he asked me a few questions about myself. Afterwards he told my attorney, Mr. Crane, who was at the Havana fight, that he never saw such a splendidly built young fellow as I was and figured that if I started fighting, it would be hard for anyone to whip me. "I never saw such a thigh on a man," he said. "No horse in the world could do a thing with him that's sure."

And no horse that I ever saw could do anything with me. I was a real horse tamer as well as a horse trader and was proud of my skill.

Next I will tell you how it happened that I saw my first ring fight and started on my career towards the top.

HOT LINERS

By Frank G. Menke

Ty Cobb's advice to aspiring baseball recruits, who aspise to be hard hitters is "just hit 'em where they ain't."

* * *

"The thing to do to be star,
And win a great big motor car;
By bold and brilliant bingling
With an art that's far from faint.
Just take a tip from one who's wise,
(Now watch his batting average rise.)
Step briskly to the plate and then,
Just hit 'em where they ain't."

The frills attending the openings are over and the teams will now shoot along until October.

Both Boston teams had inauspicious openers. Goose eggs were all they could score up. But the season is only beginning.

Cold dinners were the order in St. Louis last night. The game lasted about three and a half hours and no housekeeper will keep victuals warm that long.

Must have been fake reports about the Giants being unable to hit. Eight bingles, including several doubles and a home run, does not show any weakness with the wallop.

WHEAT MADE HOME RUN DRIVE

Perritt Makes Debut as New York Twirler, but Was Given Weak Support

Having allowed the Giants in the first two games to display to their fulness batting and pitching strength, Wilbert Robinson ordered his Brooklyn cohorts yesterday to go and do likewise. This order was timely and carried out tothe letter, for at the finish of nine highly interesting innings the Dodgers were two runs better than John McGraw's veterans and had achieved their first triumph of the season by a 5 to 3 score.

Possibly "Rube" Marquard's mound exhibition Thursday and the Manhattanites' batting display Wednesday had a lot to do with firing the Flatbush visitors with enough ambition to attempt a duplicate performance, but whatever the reason Brooklyn turned on the Giants with a determination to win that allowed nothing to withhold them. They batted "Pol" Perritt, McGraw's most recent pitching acquisition, timely, and "Ed" Appleton, one of the many youngsters signed for twirling duty by Robinson, pitched meritoriously and effectively. Also, "Zach" Wheat, Hy Myers and Casey Stengel delivered safe drives when their teammates to a man were begging for such a hit.

It was decidedly Brooklyn's day at the Polo Ground, notwithstanding the efforts of "Hans" Lobert to attract attention. The Giants' Teutonic third baseman still refuses to allow his teammates to be acclaimed above him. Yesterday he collected three safe hits, two of which sent across the plate the only runs that should have been marked to the credit of McGraw. He stole a base. He made a bare handed stop and lightning throw of the ball that cut down a runner and held off defeat. And he messed up two plays, one of which cost a run. Aside from this he was only in the game offering encouragement all the time and showing a brand of "pep" that brought to mind the Giants of pennant winning days.

Rube Marquard is in poor condition. McGraw has had a hard time whipping the pitcher into shape to start the season.

Rube certainly is jumping into fame. First he ties the consecutive win record of long years' standing, then twirls the longest contest in the major league and caps it all by pitching a no-hit game.

The Braves lost again. They could not buck the elements let alone the Phillies. Rain, snow and hail swirled around the players.

Ty Cobb's lamps are growing dim. He only made two hits yesterday, one of them a circuit clout.

The Braves are floundering around in the cellar. But remember what they did last year when they were at the bottom.

British Lose Submarine in Dardanelles; Russians Take 70,000 Prisoners in Month

BOAT PASSENGERS SEE AIR CHASE ABOVE CHANNEL

London, Monday.—Passengers crossing from England to France yesterday saw a Zeppelin being chased over the Channel by British aircraft.

Hugh Martin telegraphs to the Daily News from Chios:—"After a somewhat inglorious career of three weeks passed in playing hide and seek with the Allied fleet at the mouth of the Dardanelles, the Demir Hissar, a Turkish torpedo boat of ninety-seven tons, lies a melancholy wreck on the shore of the Gulf of Kalamoti, on this island. The Demir Hissar was the only Turkish vessel which succeeded in eluding the Allies on watch at the outlet from the Straits.

"A few days ago near Tenedos she fell in with a troop ship and fired three torpedoes, none of which took effect. The attack served to reveal her presence and the daring little Demir Hissar fled precipitately southward, making for the Gulf of Smyrna, where she hoped to take shelter under the fortress guns.

"Headed off by British and French war ships, she turned westward and again south, with men-of-war in hot pursuit. The pursuers kept up a dropping fire, sending about thirty shells after her till her commander ran her ashore, taking the precaution before he did so of throwing overboard all his torpedoes and ammunition. On scrambling ashore the officers and crew were taken charge of by Greek coast patrols. They were thirty-four in number and included seven Germans, two being officers."

SUBMARINE ASHORE; CREW CAPTURED BY TURKS

Londay, Monday.—The British submarine E-15 ran ashore on Kephez Point, in the Dardanelles yesterday, and, according to Turkish reports, three officers and twenty-one of the crew were rescued and made risoners. Seven men are missing.

The Admiralty last night confirmed the report of the loss of the craft and said that, at the time, it was engaged in a difficult reconnaissance of the mine field located near Kephez Point.

Later the Admiralty issued in another statement the substance of a further report concerning the loss of life aboard the transport Manitou, which was attacked by a Turkish torpedo boat near the Island of Chios. The report shows that twenty-four men were drowned of one hundred, as first reported, and that twenty-seven others are missing. The transport itself was not damaged.

The loss of life was due to the capsizing of one boat in the water and another while being lowered, owing to the breaking of a davit.

Reuter's Athens correspondent says the bombardment of the Dardanelles was resumed on Saturday. An aeroplane also circled over Tenedos and unsuccessfully dropped bombs in the port and at several war ships. Allied seaplanes pursued the Turkish aircraft, which escaped.

The British aviators in the Egyptian campaign have been dropping bombs on the Turkish encampment near the border, while a French cruiser, the fire of which was directed by a sea-plane, has been throwing shells on the Turks near El Arish, where the army for the invasion of Egypt has its headquarters.

These operations were undertaken presumably to harass the Turks, as the Turks have not shown any intention of attacking the British since their last repulse along the canal.

Mr. Winston Spencer Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, has issued the following denial of recent rumors:

"There has been no naval action of any kind in the North Sea during the last month, nor any action of any kind in the Dardanelles, other than local bombardments and reconnaissances by single ships.

"Since March 18 only two or three men have been hit in the Dardanelles and there has been no loss or injury to French or British ships."

LIEUT. GLADSTONE, M. P., RECEIVES WOUND IN HEAD

London, Monday.—News has been received that Lieutenant W. G. C. Gladstone, M. P., who was killed at the front, was shot in the forehead while endeavoring to locate a sniper.

Sir Roland Corbet, aged twenty-three, of the Coldstream Guards, has been killed in action. He belonged to a well known Shropshire family which traces its male line in direct descent from a family which came over with William the Conqueror.

STAURING IS DRILLING TEAM

High School Team Will Practice on Athletic Park This Week

The Fulton High school baseball squad has been working hard for the past week under the supervision of Coach Stauring. The boys are gradually getting the kinks out of their arms and in spite of the fact that the Academy street grounds do not permit of any extensive practise considerable improvement has been made.

The Athletic Park grounds over the river are now being put in shape, and a force of men started work their today with a sprayer and roller. The grounds should be in condition for good ball playing by Wednesday and at that time the squad will report in uniform and get down to real work.

In spite of the fact that there are only two pitchers available this year, this department promises to be one of the strongest of the team. The infield looks pretty good with Pullen on first, Lewis at second, Martin at short and Keeler, a veteran on third. There may be some slight change in the personell of the infield, but it is pretty certain that Keeler will retain his job and Pullen looks like a fixture at first base, with an occasional turn in the box. Bray is displaying mid season form behind the plate, and there is a great battle for positions in the outfield. Stauring is determined that no favoritism shall be shown and when the first practise in uniform is called the work of weeding out the regulars of the team will be begun. Stauring will devote an entire work to drilling the infield in concerted team play, and another long drill will be spent on the bunt.

The season tickets are selling fast and indications point to a record turnout at the first game of the season on April 30.

The members of the team are conducting a gum shoe campaign for a permanent athletic field which can be used for baseball, football and track purposes the year round, and it is rumored that the Chamber of Commerce will so shortly be waited upon by a committee of players who will submit a number of sites. The idea is to have the Chamber advocate the purchase of one site which can be used for athletic purposes. The city has a playground at present but it is inadequate for baseball, football or track work.

DANIEL G. HENNESSEY

Daniel G. Hennessey, 35, former superintendent of public works, died yesterday morning at his home in West 3d st., after a long illness.

Mr. Hennessey was by trade a cigar maker, and also filled contracts for excavating. He served as superintendent of public works under Mayor Boland, and was a member of the Fulton Lodge of Elks.

Surviving are three sisteres, Mrs. Edward Cavanaugh, Miss Anna Hennessey and Mrs. Thomas Lilley, all of this city.

The funeral will be held at 9:30 Wednesday morning from the Church of Immaculate Conception. Burial will be made at Mt. Adnah.

CAPT. JOHN MCKAY DEAD

Former Resident Was One of Oldest Masons in America, Became Captain in 1857

Robert Horatio McKay, a former resident of this city died yesterday at Kingston, Ont. He was born on the 29th of May, 1823, near Kingston, Ontario. He was a son of John Henry McKay. The family came from Argyllshire, Scotland, and settled in Quebec City, Canada. His grandfather was a master ship builder, and was sent from Quebec to Kingston by the British Government to assist in the laying of a warship in the navy yard for the war of 1812. His father was also in the British naval service. The McKay family received from the government a grant of land on the Kingston Mills road and there they resided for years.

When fourteen years of age, the lad McKay joined the navy and for two years and nine months served as ship's boy. The year he joined the navy saw the outbreak of the Rebellion of 1837 in Canada, and the youth saw the rebel general Von Shultz hung on the gallows at old Fort Henry opposite Kingston.

The late Capt. McKay received his education at Baxter's High school in Kingston. When seventeen years of age, he set out for himself as he craved for a life on the rolling deep. In turn he sailed aboard these vessels: Invincible from Kingston to Port Dalhousie; William Penn, Allenora, Chief Justice Robinson, Commodore Barry and Highlander. In 1857 he became a captain and in 1861 he quit sailing. For eighteen years he was with the Northern Transportation Line. Afterwards he became interested in farming and lived many years near Oswego, N. Y., and in Fulton, N. Y.

Capt. McKay's wife died at Fulton about nineteen years ago, and for the past fifteen years the deceased had resided most of the time in Kingston, desiring to end his days near the place where he was born. He was frequently called upon by those interested in historical matters for information about the old British warships in Navy Bay after the war of 1812-14 and with regard to the building of Fort Henry.

In religion, Capt. McKay was a Presbyterian and a very devout man. He was one of the oldest Masons in America, having joined the Masonic Order in Smith Falls, Ont., in 1857, later transferring to Hiram Lodge 144, Fulton, N. Y., and being of the 33d degree.

Capt. McKay is survived by two sons and one daughter: Robert M. McKay, Fulton; Mrs. H. B. Mills, Kingston, Ont., and John A. McKay, publisher, York, formerly editor and joint owner with the late F. W. VanWagenen of the Fulton Times.

The body will be brought from Kingston for burial in this city tomorrow morning. Services will be held at Mt. Adnah's chapel at 10 o'clock. Rev. Charles Robertson will officiate.

$500 CHECK CITY'S ONLY SECURITY AGAINST PROBABLE ACTIONS

Board of Public Works Permits Contractor Massaro to Begin Sewer Contract Without First Filing Bond Required by Law

After an investigation covering two days, it was learned definitely this morning by The Times, that the Board of Public Works has allowed Frank Massaro, who was given the contract for the new storm sewer along the old canal, to start work without the formality of filing a bond. The specifications read that the contractor shall not start work until he has filed a bond, and in Massaro's case no bond has been filed. It is always customary to demand a bond of any contractor engaged in city work, in order that the city may be indemnified from any actions which may result from accidents or injuries received by persons or property in the performance of the contract.

Massaro was awarded the contract three weeks ago, and he has had men working on the sewer almost daily since. The work has been held up for some time owing to the fact that the route of the sewer has not yet been decided. The Hunter Company has entered an objection to the proposed route of the sewer, and City Engineer Hill went to Albany last week to obtain a permit from the state, in order that the sewer might take a new route over the state lands on the west bank of the old canal. It could not be learned this morning whether or not such a permit had been obtained.

At the time of bidding, Massaro deposited a certified check for $500, for the purpose of showing his good faith. That check was deposited for that purpose and that alone, and it is a question whether or not the city could hold the check as a bond. At any rate, the check is inadequate, as the mount of the contract is almost $2,500, and the amount of the bond should be 50 per cent. of that at least, dependant entirely upon the discretion of the Board of Public Works. When the Boards thinks that the case is an extraordinary one or that litigation might ensue, a larger bond is required.

It is quite possible that the Hunter company may object very strenuously to the entrance of the sewer into its tail-race, at the point proposed—directly opposite their fire-intake pump. In the event of litigation, the city will be unprotected, $500 would hardly cover the costs of any complicated action.

No blame is attached to Mr. Massaro for the failure to file a bond. It is the office of the Board of Public Works to see that such a bond is filed in the office of the City Clerk, before the contractor is allowed to start work.

City Clerk Scudder stated this morning that no bond had been filed in his office. He said perhaps the bond was in the office of City Attorney Fanning. Mr Massaro was called on the telephone and after stating that he had a certified check on deposit, he admitted that no bond had been filed, but said that the City Attorney could give further information.

From time immemorial it has been the custom to demand a bond of any contractor engaged in such work, but in this instance an exception seems to have been made. As stated before, in the event of any accident or injury resulting from the work, the city stands responsible without any possibility of recourse from the contractor.

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

LAST SHALL BE FIRST

BILL BUNK was an awkward and old fashioned guy, he wore a snuff suit and a plum colored tie. He had little money to board up or spend, his shoulders were round and his legs had a bend. He'd blush when the ladies would hover around, as humble was he as a worm in the ground. He worked in the daytime and studied at night; the folks often wondered if Bill Bunk was right. Claude Pill was a dashing and up to date sport, his collars were high and his trousers were short. He worked for A's father and worked when he would, the people all said that he sure would make good. His features were handsome, his manners were fine; the ladies were charmed by this grand social lion. A promising future awaited Claude Pill, he'd be a choice product from fame's grinding mill. Be that as it may, in a very short while Claude had little use for his dash and his style. His father went bankrupt, and what could Claude do? As helpless was he as a bug in a stew. He took a position at very small pay, he's still selling ribbons to this very day. Bill Bunk kept on working, at night studied law. Bill Bunk was a comer the people soon saw. He rose in their favor and, skipping to relate, Bill Bunk was elected, the 'Gov' of the State. The moralis as good as a well to a thirst—the first shall be last and the last shall be first.

BETTER MOTION PICTURES

Magazine Recommends More Than a Hundred Good Films.

The Woman's Home Companion is carrying on a great campaign for better motion pictures. In the May issue it ercommends 134 films. Along with these recommendations appears a special article entitled, "Better Films for Children," in which a report is made of an interesting experiment conducted in Louisville, Kentucky, by Mrs. Frederic Levy. Mrs. Frederic Levy discovered that her children had attended an undesirable motion picture show. This aroused her interest in getting better motion pictures for Louisville children, and she arranged with moving picture managers for a special performance, for children, given in o Louisville theatre once a week—every Saturday morning. The usual ushers are dispensed with and young women attend to the comfort of the children who come from all kinds of homes and vary in age from four to sixteen. Following is an extract from Mrs. Levy's own account of how the children have received this kind of an arrangement:

"Do they appreciate it? You just ought to hear them! They applaud the hero and hiss the villian in true melodramatic style. At a critical moment they jump up and shout advice to the despairing heroine. They weep, they laugh, they yell, according to which chord of their emotions is twanged. They are not seeing pictures. They are living life, a life as full of sweet adventures as a plum pudding.

"We have not worked out all the problems, by any means. For instance, the theatre is centrally located in the business section. This means that many children must pay care fare, which is a considerable item in some families.

"Our plan holds possibilities for any city to work out a systematic method for children's programs. Our chief expense is due to our long distance from the exchanges which serve us, the nearest being Cincinnati and Indianapolis. If the interested women in those cities where exchanges are located could work up special programs, their judgment could be taken by women in other places. A network of cooperative service could be built up over a considerable territory surrounding an exchange if o number of intelligent people would devote some of their time to this urgent need."

TAKING CHANCE

You say what you want, rub the magic lamp of advertising and a successful business springs into being. This is the way a company which sells houses by mail speaks of the possibilities of that best of mediums by which the seller gets in contact with the buyer.

Two young men with an idea and but $200 in capital built out of the power of advertising in nine years $1,500,000. Apropo advertising one of the members of the firm said c "We have never used a single advertisement, of any size from a half-inch up to a two page spread, that has not been profitable for us." Yet who would have forseen the possibility of a $200 investment growing in nine years to a $1,500,000 industry through the power of advertising.

Advertising to be successful must instill in the reader confidence in the firm. Every act must be carefully planned to inspire confidence. All possible advice and information must also be given. Sales often result from inquiries a week, a month or a year old.

Further in speaking of the firm's success the president said:

But it has not been easy. It has required courage, faith and a willingness to invest money and wait for results.

For one advertisement recently—a single insertion—the firm paid $12,000.

Perhaps a part of the answer to the whole story is found in a quotation from Kipling that hangs over the desk of one of the firm's members—the first two lines of which are these:

"I didn't begin with askings; I took the job and I stuck
"And I took the chances they wouldn't; an' now they're calling it luck."

TIMES—HERALD

By I. E. Hyde, Fulton, N. Y.

The word—"time"—means "today," and who is there to say, that times, and place, and man must not ask questions when they can; or, have a quest propounded. There are issues now at stake, and some are but a fake; to reach those issues, and send their tissues. A live tax-payer has compounded a question for the Mayor, He doesn't pose as a slayer of things that's true and ought to be; He's doing it for you and me. A mind that's broad and free. Now, Herald; can't you see the wisdom of his pen? And, Herald; don't you really think that Fulton now is on the brink of broader views; is spreading out? And, do you think taxpayer's snout is snubbed by asking questions? You know, when Socrates educates, he throws a line, and uses baits of questions and their answers. And, honest Injun! I'll say now, I like a question, but I vow; I also like an answer. And when a question stops a man, then he should raise his strong right hand, and say—"Give up, your honor"—Now, Herald; do you taxes pay? and, will you think this o'er today?

A BAD BILL DEAD

The withdrawal of the Bewley canneries bill from Governor Whitman means its death. It means that this vicious assault by greedy canners on an enlightened labor law drawn to protect women and children has been defeated—for the time, at least. Attempts will be made to gain by indirection those exemptions which the employers have found themselves unable to gain by the barefaced favor of the legislators who voted for their measure, and subsequent manoeuvres at Albany will bear close watching.

Not only was this bill dangerous in its immediate effects, granting permission for nerve destroying, vitality sapping hours of labor for cannery workers, but it was against public interest as a question of policy. New York State, since 1913, has had a broad, modern labor code, designed to protect individual workers, who are the real wealth of the state, rather than the dollars heaped up by those who exploit the employes. That bears hard on the old practices which made many people rich, and, naturally, they resent it. Nevertheless, they should become reconciled, for the general public will never consent to any retrogression from the state's present intelligent policy. Health and lives of individuals are more important than dollars.

For the withdrawal of the bill Governor Whitman is responsible. He has done nothing better in his whole public career and deserves unqualified praise.—New York Tribune.

REVIVE SHEEP INDUSTRY

As beef becomes less plentiful if the American people are to east meat, that is if the wage earner of this country is to be able to pay for this form of food, the country must raise mutton.

Every state and every community ought to be interested in the news that there is a movement to revive sheep raising in Maryland. It has not been many years since this industry flourished in that section. But the wide use of lands for fruit growing and the failure of the Maryland legislature to take any steps against the predatory dogs gradually killed off this industry.

Since the other thickly settled states, Connecticut, for example, have solved this problem by imposing a dog tax and using the funds thus collected in reimbursing sheep owners from loss from the attacks of dogs. In Virginia this is done by some counties.

There should be no difficulty about obtaining protection almost anywhere and everywhere when the sheep-raising industry is revived or stated. If ever there was an inducement for that industry the inducement exists right now in the high prices of mutton and wool.

Beef is not going to become plentiful. It will grow scarcer and scarcer. There is no better meat food than mutton. Sheep can live and thrive nearly any place in the country. Every state should be doing what Maryland and other states are doing to promote sheep raising.—Watertown Standard.

Opinions

Rules of the Road

In these days of improved highways and of the increasing use of them by all manner of transportation vehicles, it becomes not only desirable but a matter of necessity for the safety of lives for all people to know and observe the rules of the road. Indeed, Secretary of State Hugo considers it of such importance that he would have special instruction on the subject given in the public schools.

Motorists as a class have to be the best trained in regard to the rules of the road, because they operate the fastest vehicles on the road. Moreover they are forced to suffer from neglect of others, both in passing and overtaking. In fact, it is the commonest remark of a novice at the steering wheel that he had no idea before how many persons habitually proceed on the wrong side of the road, how many drivers of slow traffic are careless, and how many risks the average pedestrian takes in the course of a day.

These rules of the road are of rather obscure origin, but have grown up by common consent and have been engrafted on the highway law. Law gives to custom the force of authority. Sometimes court decisions take the place of law.

For example, there is no statutory requirement that a driver on a secondary road must give way to one on a main road, but in court decisions it has been held that the driver of a vehicle coming out of a side street into one of the more prominent thoroughfares must give way, and should have thrown upon him the obligation of seeing that the main road is clear.

But the rules of the road are imperfectly understood, nevertheless even by those who should be most familiar with them, and therefore Secretary Hugo suggests that it would be well to teach in the elementary schools, by rules and diagrams, all the more important facts concerning the management of traffic and the duties of drivers. By this means, many accidents might be avoided and "safety first" beg iven a big boost.

Already the educational authorities in one of the cities has issued a set of rules, and the schools in other cities are teaching the road law as a part of the regular school instruction. Looking forward to the time when the number of motor vehicles on the road will be much greater, it is important that this subject should receive more and more attention and the child cannot begin too young to receive such instruction. — Batavia News.

New-Style Farming for New York

Forming and conservation are not generally bracketed together in the public mind. Yet farms, so called, are being maintained in various parts of the state which are actually experiment stations in conservation of animal and forest life. They are of material benefit to this generation and give indication of incalcuable material and sentimental value for future generations.

One of the most interesting of these farms is a tract of 750 acres of mountain land in the Northeaster Adirondacks, fenced in about three years ago by Mr. John B. Burnham, president of the American Game Protective Association, and stocked with deer—mostly white-tail deer, but including a few European red deer, similor to our elk. As Mr. Burnham describes his farm in the April "Bulletin" of the association, it is distinctly a profitable enterprise. He has now a herd of one hundred deer; the enterprise costs him somewhat over $160 a year, and he expects an income of from $1,500 to $2,000 a year, beginning this autumn.

The deer have nothing save the natural food of the tract—evergreen and hardwood browse—except some hay cut from a beaver meadow on the place and salted to induce them to eat it. A three-year-old deer's carcass is worth from $30 to $50 in the market here. The deer, Mr. Burnham declares, actually benefit the land for forestry purposes—except the red deer, which break off the tops of small trees—because they destroy hardwood shoots which otherwise would shade and kill young white pine trees which he has planted.

Another unusual farm is that of Mr. Charlees F. Dietrich, who raises German hare, white-tailed deer, pheasants and quail at Millbrook, Dutchess County. The German hare he has found, furnishes excellent sport and a cheap, abundant and desirable source of food supply. From his preserve deer, pheasants and these hare have escaped from time to time and bred in the neighboring country, so that the farmers have a fine game supply, and a hunting club combines fox hunting with coursing hares on horseback.

New York State itself has recently entered this new field in farming. At Sherburne, in Chenango County, there is a game farm which, on an oppropriation of $8,500, last year produced and distributed for hatching pheasants' eggs and birds which estimated at $50,000 in value—a neat addition to the state's resources. In consequence of this record a new game farm is just getting into operation in Jefferson County.

Every farm of this nature, whether privately owned and operated for profit or owned by the state and operated entirely in the interest of game propagation, is a benefit to the public. While quail, ducks, pheasants and deer can be thus raised for restocking and for the table, there is no danger of their following the praire chicken, the wood pigeon ond the buffalo. Future generations will not have the reason to blame this one for its "game hogs" that this one has for blaming its predecessors.

Views of State Editors

Since Governor Hughes no such high standard of appointments has been set by any Governor as Governor Whitman has set. And best of all, the Legislature is passing the needed legislation to enable the fruits of the good work to be made permanent. — Delaware Express.

The Legislature has acted wisely in killing all of the half dozen bills introduced to amend the excise law; This statute is good enough as it stands. It is the best of its kind. Of course, there are liquors sellers who think it is unduly severe and there are fanatics who think it does not go far enough, but the great body of calm and sensible citizens are satisfied with it. It is steadily reducing the number of saloons, since no new ones can be started and old ones are constantly going out of bzusiness for one reason or another. It is greatly to the interest of every proprietor to obey the law. It is far better to have a regulatory law of this kind than an ineffective prohibitory statute.—Kingston Freeman.

No one wants a direct state tax; Governor Whitman and the republican legislature would be glad to avoid it; they are not preparing for it, because they want it, but because they have to. The Tammany government made the bills and they have to be paid. It isn't a republican deficit but a democratic deficit that has to be made up.—Watertown Times.

The Whitman administration, is engaged in a work which means bonafide retrenchment and when the system of elimination and reconstruction is complete, it is a safe prediction that the business of the state will move along much more economically as well as creditably in every respect.—Middletown Press.

There isn't any tax question before the state aside from that of paying up. We owe the money. Governor Glynn cleaned up the debts Sulzer took over from Dix and added to. He started with a surplus, but he cared so much more for a bookkeeping economy than for a balanced ledger that he failed to raise enough money to run the state on the lines he had laid down in his budget. The present administration has the choice of paying or repudiating. The choice brings a direct tax. If the treasury were to be put in the condition the Democrats found it in 1911, $18,000,000 wouldn't suffice.—Watertown Standard.

In view of the rapidity with which the number of state officials increased after the Democrats went into power, and in view of the straitened condition of the state treasury at the present time, Democratic attempts to work up public indignation over bills that deprive men like "Packy" McCabe of $10,000 offices will not meet with any alarming degree of success. One man, drawing $8,000, a year; will be at the head of the new commission, and the state will save $22,000 a year in salaries for conservation commissioners.—Rochester Democrat & Chronicle.

Fair Play! It is not surprising that all the daily newspapers in New York City that opposed the nomination of Governor Whitman are now picking flaws in his administration. We do not say that it is without flaws, but it is too early to pass judgment. While these newspapers have no responsibility for the government, they are all very busy telling the executive what he ought to do, the appointments he ought to make or not make, the bills he ought to sign and the ones he should veto. The Governor scarcely has had an opportunity to become familiar with the tremendous responsibilities of his very trying place. Give him at least a fair hearing. Judge of his merits by what he has accomplished at the close of the legislative session. Judgment in the midst of the session is neither fair nor just. The New York newspapers which so bitterly opposed his nomination and which are now so anxious to conduct his administration might bear this admonition in mind.—Leslie's Weekly.

BOY PRINCE OF BELGIANS GOES TO FIGHT AS PRIVATE SOLDIER

Vivid Stories of War's Horrors Tell What Young Duke Will Have to Face in Trenches.

Germans In Amazing Marches Outdo All Records of Either Ancient or Modern Armies.

FAR more vivid pictures of conditions in war stricken Europe are given in private correspondence than in the official reports. This is so not only of life in the cities, but even in the field. Major Anton Numeyer of the Twenty-third Bavarian infantry in a letter to his brother, John Numeyer, in Philadelphia, says:

"People far removed from the scene of this war are in no way able to appreciate the ferocity of the fighting or the horrible suffering following the battles. Small battles with us have been as large as the largest ever fought in the history of the world.

"When one of our soldiers goes into a country he never knows when he will get out, nor does he know which country he is in, for that matter. He can write a letter if he's on the firing line, but he does not know where he is.

"First I was fighting against the Russian mixed forces. From the eastern I was transferred to the western side near Luneville. Five consecutive days in the trenches near that place was a dreadful experience. If you lifted your head above the level of a trench you were apt to be left without it. Many a poor fellow lost his life that way.

"The trenches are a war necessity, but to be intrenched in them brings intense suffering and all kinds of diseases. Yet despite this warfare our boys are in prime condition for any fight into which they may be ordered."

DUKE OF BRABANT, HEIR TO BELGIAN THRONE, WHO HAS JOINED ARMY AS A PRIVATE.

Shells Sing a Mean Song.

William Kysh, a New Yorker, who was in the old Twenty-second engineers, New York national guard, and enlisted in Princess Patricia's Canadians, writing home from France, shows that he is having no easy time with the allies.

"Things are pretty tough here on the firing line," he writes, "especially sitting in the trenches full of water and getting shelled all day. The 'Black Johnsons' which the Germans send us sing a mean song. But we are getting used to it now. We are gradually driving the Germans back, but thus far only by yards, and you may realize what work that is.

"I am writing this in an old barn which has been occupied in turn by both French and Germans. All the ground we are now on has been fought over. We get a certain number of days in the trenches and then a certain number of days out, different regiments relieving each other, and all getting a turn at the good and bad features of the campaign. In some places our trenches are only a matter of fifty yards from the Germans. There are all kinds of sniping going on both day and night and occasionally a charge."

Duke of Brabant Not Fourteen.

Just going to find what life in the trenches is like is the little Duke of Brabant, the not yet fourteen-year-old son of the king of the Belgians. He has joined the Twelfth infantry regiment as a common soldier, according to reports from Dunkirk. Recently the prince, with a rifle on his shoulder and a knapsack on his back, marched past the king, the queen and Prime Minister de Broqueville in the midst of his company.

Heir to the Belgian throne expects to enter the trenches whenever his regiment is ordered to the firing line.

Prince Leopold has been in constant touch with the Belgian army for three months. He begged his father, King Albert, to allow him to join, and ultimately the king gave his consent. The boy joined on his father's fortieth birthday.

When the regiment in which the young prince enlisted paraded before his mother and father the king expressed his joy at seeing his son in such a heroic regiment, which had made a glorious defense of Dixmude.

The prince is unusually tall and looks much older than his years. He was born in Brussels Nov. 3, 1901. He has one brother, Prince Charles, who is eleven years old, and one sister, Princess Marie, who is eight. The home life of the Belgian royal family is said to be particularly happy, and the Duke of Brabant has seldom been away from his mother.

Dispatch Rider In Perils.

How death rides beside the dispatch bearer is shown in a letter Robert Stovold, a New York citizen, has received from his brother in France. The letter says:

"Three times a week George has to take dispatches up to the firing line.

GERMAN SOLDIERS HAVE MAIL BOXES FIXED TO TREES OR ANYTHING HANDY.

This is a pretty risky job, and he has had several narrow escapes. Once he had to jump out of his automobile and lie down for several hours while shells and bullets went whistling by over him. Another time as he was driving along with his automobile some Germans hiding in the woods fired at him. Fortunately they missed him, but several of the bullets struck the automobile.

"Another time a shell burst twenty yards from him, but by a miracle he was not touched. He was enveloped in smoke, however, the fumes of the shell making him feel sick and giddy. George, however, seems to think it great sport."

Germans Outdo Armies of Old.

A Berlin letter says the prodigious marches of the Germans in East Prussia and Poland have outdone all the records of the armies of old.

An average German march, the writer states, is twenty to twenty-one miles, but after three days a day of rest is observed if that pace has been kept. On the famous retreat of the 10,000 Greeks after the battle of Cunaxa, in 401 B. C., from near Babylon to Trebisond, on the Black sea, the average day's march was sixteen and three-quarter miles, but this average was secured by several forced marches of twenty-seven and one-half miles, and the normal day's march was about fifteen and one-quarter miles.

A striking accomplishment was that of Napoleon's guards, who covered 110 miles in six days on their march to take part in the battle of Jena, and that over bad roads through the Thuringen forest. The Ninth German army corps, with exhausting marches behind it, covered forty-six miles from the vicinity of Blois to Orleans in thirty-six hours on Dec. 16 and 17, 1870, over a muddy road and was ready to fight the next day.

One East Prussian regiment marched 122 miles in five days to join Hindenburg's army and took part in the battle of Tannenberg in the afternoon of the fifth day without stopping to rest.

Stokers Are Other Extreme.

But the trenches in the wet and the long marches in the snow have been only one extreme. The other extreme lies in the stokeholds and engine rooms of the battleships; for that matter, on all ships just now when they are in the war zone around Great Britain and have to flee for their timbers from the German submarines.

Away down in the hot coal bunkers, almost naked, the grimy stokers will be serving the coal to feed the roaring furnaces while the engineer and his staff are attending to the powerful engines. These men get little glory for in action the stokeholds and engine rooms are battened down in order that the furnaces may be run under forced draft, and this means that when the order "Every man for himself!" goes forth the stoker has not even the chance of swimming for life which his comrades on deck have.

He has no knowledge of how the battle is proceeding above, and, although he can hear the shells bursting and fearful explosions occurring on deck, he must stick to his work of feeding the engines so long as the orders come through from the control station. And all he knows is that if the enemy's torpedo comes it will be aimed straight for him, for he is in the very vitals of the ship, whether he is on warship or merchant craft.

Gets King's First Whistle.

"Well done, Indomitable stokers!" signaled Admiral Beatty after the fleet he commanded had sunk the Bluecher and crippled the German fleet as it scuttled back to Helgoland, while in his report afterward he said, "Great credit is due to the engine room staffs for the fine steaming of the squadron." That tribute gave as much pleasure to the men as the admiral's little son, David, felt later when King George specially invited him to Buckingham palace and presented him with a whistle, the very first one which the king himself had owned and which when he was a small boy was attached to his first sailor suit.

Aviators Delight In Job.

Midway, perhaps, between the extremes is the air man, with perils and excitements that are all his own. There are joys in flying which not even war can take away, and letters from the men show that the aviators keenly delight in their part in battle.

There is still some popular misunderstanding on matters aerial. The vision of warfare in the clouds, of air craft dropping bombs on armies and forts and themselves grappling in the central blue has so taken possession of the average imagination that the capacities of both dirigibles and aeroplanes are exaggerated considerably. The truth is that fighting in the air and dropping bombs form a very small part of the flying man's business. His main occupation is to get information about the enemy and to prevent the enemy from getting information.

At the same time amazingly daring feats are being performed by airmen, but the facts are hidden from the world because of the exigencies of war. Only the barest statements are made in the reports.

It would be difficult to exaggerate the value of the flying man to his army. He reports on concentrations of the enemy many miles behind the fighting line and thus enables commanders to guard against surprise. He brings valuable information regarding the nature of the enemy's defenses, the lay of the country and facts that the best of maps fail to make plain. Then his services in directing gunfire are practically indispensable.

Germans Saw Value First.

It was the Germans who first saw how the aviator could control the fire of the big guns. They knew it long before the war started, and in the early days of the march through Belgium the Belgian defense in the field was quickly broken down because of the accuracy of the shrapnel fire directed by taubes overhead.

Much of the land between the Germans and allies in Flanders now is absolutely flat. There is no ridge or eminence to command the plain that stretches league after league on every side, with something of the vast monotony of the open sea. Without aerial observation artillery fire would be largely a matter of pure guesswork in such a country. With the aid of the flying scout a quite invisible target is reached with a high degree of precision.

The labor and organization required to keep an aeroplane fleet ready for action hardly can be conceived by the uninitiated. The engines and framework of the modern machine are pretty substantial, and it may surprise many persons to know that many of the aeroplanes employed at the beginning of the war are still in use and quite effective. Many of them have spent the winter in the open air practically all the time. Violent gales and exposure to night air have not ruined them.

Still there is need of constant repair. New parts have continually to be supplied, and consequently an aeroplane base is a factory as well as a camp. In one place scores of machinists are employed in stitching the canvas wings, in another one finds an immense store of spare parts and engines, in still other mechanics are busy over repairs. The work is continually on the increase too.

SUNDAY "MOVIES" ARE CONDEMNED

Priest Urges Parents To Watch Closely Over Their Children

Members of the Holy Name Society and men of the parish to the number of 200 received Holy Communion in a body at the Church of the Immaculate Conception Sunday morning. The men met in the basement of the church before the service and occupied the entire centre aisle of the church during the mass.

At the 10:30 mass Father Lindsman took as his text the words of the Gospel, "I am the good shepherd." "I know mine and mine know me." The priest asked how many of the people today really know Christ. He said that Christ knows us and our innermost secrets but that the great majority of the professed Christians today do not know Christ nor his most familiar precepts or, knowing them, fail to obey them.

In comparing Christ as a shepherd with the father and mother of today, Father Lindsman pointed out how the parents of the present time are sadly lacking in their duties to their children. He denounced the moving picture craze, especially the Sunday moving pictures, and advised the parents to watch closely over their children in regard to their religious duties and church attendance. "The home of bygone years, said the priest, has passed and the dwelling now is simply a place where people eat, drink and sleep. In former years, the mothers used to teach the children their prayers, and the father would help with the lessons and act as a companion to his children. How different it is now—mothers are out every night—fathers are away almost all the time, and the children are left to their own devices Then in after years, the parents say, "What have I ever done that my child should come to this." It is not what they have done," said Father Lindsman, "it is that they have done nothing that the children should be otherwise."

It was announced that the Knights of Columbus will have a reception and entertainment Tuesday evening at the lodge rooms and all the men of the parish were cordially invited. The Sodality will receive Holy Communion Sunday next, and the members of the choir were urged to attend the rehearsal Friday night.

THE RIVER OF GRACE

A Subject Dwelt Upon Recently in a Sermon by the Rev. M. J. Peters of Zion Episcopal Church of This City

There is a river the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God.
—Psalm 46:4.

The prophetic power of the Hebrew psalmists is wonderful. This 46th Psalm was probably composed as Israel's song of praise to God for deliverance from some political enemy. The trial and turmoil of the battle field is vividly contrasted with a reign of quiet and peace that followed the hostilities. The Psalmist is ascribing praise to God who supported His people through the terrors and trials of the battle-field and led them again into the blessing of peace.

Mark the vivid contrast in the opening verses of the Psalm. The author begins with a picture of struggle and terror, * * * though the earth be moved, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof." But now the scene is changed to one of serene peace. From the noise and unrest of the battle, we are led to the quiet and pleasant valleys, where the soft murmering voice of the river takes the place of the raging of the stormy sea; "there is a river, the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God." It is a song of rest after the battle, and humble confidence in the God who gave His people victory and led them through the storm to the peaceful valley beside the still waters of comfort.

But the Psalm points not only to Israel's past troubles and the peace which immediately followed; it points also the future. The poet's words take the wings of prophecy, and come soaring down through the ages, bringing to souls in this 20th century a very precious lesson for this Dispensation of Grace in which you and I live. This river of which the Psalmist sings is the blessed stream of Grace which is poured from the Great Fountain of All Good upon the Earth, to cleanse and refresh all who are redeemed from the bondage of sin and the law by the atoning blood of our Savior, Jesus Christ. The prophecy of the Hebrew Psalmist has become history.

Rich Blessings

St. John the Divine, the great prophet of the New Dispensation saw the rich blessings of the new river of Grace, and he takes up the Psalmist's figure and gives it to us with added splendor. At the close of the Apocalypse he writes, "And He showed me a pure river of the water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the lamb. * * * On either side of the river was there the tree of Life which bare twelve manner of fruits, and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations."

It is of this river, spoken of by both the Old and the New Testament prophets, that I wish to speak to you this morning. Let us try to read some of the truth that comes to us in this parable of nature. Let us strive to learn something of that river of Grace that God has appointed to make His City glad.

There are two necessary things that go to make up a river: there must be first of all WATER which is its life, and there must be of necessity be a channel to hold and use the water. The water, or the life giving power in the river of Grace, is God; the channel or the divinely appointed medium for conveying and distributing the life giving power, is the Church here upon earth. In the Church of Grace there is God's part and man's part. His Grace is the heavenly treasure; we, His people, are the earthen vessels that hold it. Let us think of God's Grace this morning under the figure of the river and its streams.

1. First of all we will think of God's part in sending His grace upon His people.

The first thing to be considered about any river is its source. It always begins at a point high up above the country that it washes. We never look for the source of a river in the lowlands or in the valleys, but upon the hills or the mountain side. In its course the river traverses the whole country, beginning where it is highest and pouring itself into its outlet at the lowest point of its course.

This river of Grace has its source in the pure and holy atmosphere of heaven. It springs from the Fountain of all good, enthroned high up above the world. The Psalmist says, "With Thee is the Fountain of Life; in Thy light shall we see light." The river of Grace flows from the throne of God and of the Lamb. It is the river of the water of life, clear as crystal. It is the river of God's pleasures. It is the river of which Jesus spoke when He said, "If any man thirst, let him come unto Me and drink. * * * Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." As the Fountain of Grace, God is the Author of all that is good. As St. James says: "Every good and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of Light."

So much for the Fountain or Source of God's gladening river; let us think of the river itself. The river which begins with God in heaven makes its course through the world through the channel of His Church. It revives and stimulates the tree of life, that its fruit may feed the world and its leaves heal the nations.

What are the functions of this river whose streams are making glad the city of God? Let us look again at the rivers of nature.

One of the functions of a river is to cleanse. We look for cleanliness and health in those lands where rivers are found. They are the arteries through which the land is purified. The rains gather the impurities of the land together and wash them down into the streams and rivers, and they are borne on to the sea.

So it is that the cleansing river of Grace with its streams is purifying the spiritual world, the abode of men's souls. We are all by nature born in sin. Our very nature is defiled by the sin of our first parents. But God has provided a means of cleansing our defiled souls.

In the Sacrament of Holy Baptism we throw ourselves into the purifying waters of the river of Grace; we are cleansed of our sins and made the children of God. As Naaman the Syrian entered Jordan defiled and diseased and emerged from its waters whole, so we enter God's river of grace afflicted and defiled with the leprosy of sin, and come forth new creatures, made whole by the grace of God.

But let us look to Nature's rivers again. They have another important function. Along their valleys we always find nature at her very best. The pastures are greenest, the earth yields her best and choicest fruits The onward and upward trend of civilization follows the courses of the waters. Our own country flourishes like a green bay tree because of her many rivers. The Desert of Sahara is barren of all fruit because no life-giving waters traverse her wastes of sterile sand.

Apply the principle to the spiritual world. The regenerated souls of men are kept alive and built up by God's eternal river of grace. The water and blood that flowed from the wounds of Calvary's Sacred Victim are borne to us upon the stream of God's river, and our weak and fainting souls are strengthened and refreshed by that life in the Blessed Sacrament of the altar. The Prophet Ezekiel had a vision of this refreshing power of God's river of Grace. Led on by his Angelic guide, he sees the health-giving stream flowing from the altar of God's temple. "Behold, water issued out from under the threshold of the House eastward, * * * and the water came down from under, from the right side of the House, at the south side of the Altar.

This vision of the prophet points forward to this day of Grace in which men's souls are fed and nourished by the sacred stream of Grace from God's altar.

Thank God for the precious river which bears to men's souls the strength and refreshment of God, purchased for us at the cost of the life blood of His Only-Begotten Son. Hear our Lord's testimony, utteréd before the great sacrifice was made, "The Bread of God is He that cometh down from Heaven, and giveth life unto the world. * * * I am the Bread of Life; he that cometh to Me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thrist. * * * I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever; and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world. * * * Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day."

O, the countless precious blessings that God sends down to us from heaven upon the pure river of His grace.

Accordin gto His gracious promise the glad river is flowing on through the world, laden with blessings innumerable for their multitude. The Holy Fountain is inexhaustible in its richness. It is free and open. "The Spirit an dthe Bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."

We have been talking about God's part in the work of Grace—now let us think of our part. If we know the riches of the Water of Life, let us not neglect the channel through which it flows. There are many and varied channels through which God dispenses His Grace, but the chief one, and the one into which all others flow is His organized church here in the world—the Church which He has built upon the Apostles and prophets, Himself the chief cornerstone.

A Timeless Senator

History will rank Nelson W. Aldrich as a statesman who put the stamp of his genius for public affairs upon the history of his country. His capacity was great, his labors tireless, and many months before his death he had come to feel that he had found himdeward in substantial success. The reproaches showered upon him by political opponents were such as men prominent in politics and affairs have to put up with. They concerned his public career, for his private honor was above all aspersion, and even now, somehoidy do the currents of public opinion shift their course in this country, the judgment of men upon him and upon his acts has become more favorable, the bitterness inseparable from party strife has disappeared, and those who were his unrelenting opponents have come to admit the very great value of his services to the Nation.—New York Times.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

By Frederic T. Cardoze.

Albany, April 19.—In an endeavor to have a picturesque portion of the ground used as Letchworth Park, for years owned by an aged woman, preserved by the state, a bill has been introduced to bring about that result. The introducer of the bill is Senator Sanders of Genesee county to whom the officials of the American Scenic and Historic Preservation Society appealed.

The desired property comprises about two and one half acres containing a small house and shed. In the somewhat dilapidated dwelling Maria Davis spent many of her years and her last days. She is described as an eccentric old lady, yet her sense of business was such that when she secured title to the land upon which her humble home was built she obtained possession of the most beautiful portion of Letchworth Park which it appears, was then not owned by the state.

There are beautiful glens, stately trees and most attractive views of the surrounding country on the property of the aged lady who has but recently passed away. So desirable is the location of the two and one half acres that it is feared by the American Scenic and Historic Preservation Society that they may be secured by some undesirable person. It is the opinion of the officials of the society that the land once owned by Maria Davis should become a part of Letchworth Park.

Several attempts were made to purchase the property of the recluse during her life-time, but all efforts failed. The sentimental reasons for failure to sell, if there were any, on the part of the one time owner, have been removed by her death.

It is estimated that the two and one half acres in question is from $600 to $800. The bill introduced by Senator Sanders provides that they shall be acquired by the State by eminent domain proceedings. The heirs of Maria Davis or her distant relatives will receive the benefit of the amount at which the property is appraised.

At the present time the State attorney general has the details of the prospective purchase of the property under consideration, yet on account of the lateness of the present session of the legislature it was deemed wise to have a bill introduced before final adjournment and not wait until the session of 1916. An attempt will be made to obtain from Governor Whitman a special message to accompany the Sanders bill so that the legal steps to secure the Davis homestead and acres be facilitated.

The initiative was taken by Walcott J. Humphrey of Warsaw, chairman of the Letchworth Park committee and shortly after the death of Maria Davis, he communicated with Senator Sanders, laying the matter of the desire of the trustees of Letchworth Park to acquire at once the little plot of ground where for years so quietly dwelled the quaint old lady who jealously guarded her acres and steadfastly refused to part with them while she lived.

Letchworth Park is a State preserve of scenic grandeur in Wyoming county. It was at one time the home of William Letchworth a western New York millionaire. He presented his estate to New York State during the last year of the administration of Governor Charles E. Hughes. It comprises over one thousand acres.

Its geologic and physiographic attributes have caused innumerable tourists, students and artists to visit it annually. It is generously protected by the State, there being a corps of guardians to safeguard it from vandals and malicious intruders.

OSWEGO'S MASONIC BALL.

Fulton and Phoenix Will be Well Represented.

It is very probable that the Fulton delegation to the Masonic ball in Oswego Wednesday evening will number twenty-five couples. The committee in charge of the affair has arranged to have a special car run from Phoenix into Oswego Wednesday night, and those of the Fulton contingent who do not make the trip by automobile will travel by that car. There has been a large sale of tickets in this section.

The affair promises to be the one of the most successful social gatherings of the winter. The program will consist of twenty-four dances, and the numbers will be equally divided between the modern steps and the old time waltzes, two steps and square dances. A special orchestra will furnish the music and the affair will be strictly informal. The special car will return to Phoenix with stops all along the line, directly after the ball.

LOOTER OF HEN HOUSES CAUGHT

Robinson Confesses to Several Robberies of Hen Roosts in the City

Commendable work on the part of Police Chief Dyer, and his staff on clues furnished by Thomas McGovern of South Third street, resulted in the arrest Saturday of Theodore Robinson on a charge of stealing chickens. Complaints have been coming in all winter from chicken fanciers that their hen houses have been invaded by prowlers in the dead of night and valuable fowls removed. Mr. McGovern is an expert breeder of Rhode Island Reds and his fine stock is a source of great pride to him. Last Thursday he went to his hennery in the morning and perceiving that his birds were not present in their usual numbers, he counted and found that seven were missing.

He at once reported his loss to the police, and Chief Dyer took the case in hand. A tour was made of the butcher shops of the city, and in the establishment of Mike Louise on Second street two of the missing fowls were found and identified by Mr. McGovern from the punch in the web of the foot with which he marks all his birds. Mr. Louise aided the police by describing Robinson perfectly and the culprit was rounded up Saturday.

When confronted with the facts at Police Headquarters, Robinson admitted his guilt and after close questioning on the part of Chief Dyer he also admitted complicity in other chicken thefts in the city. He said that he had robbed the Ingamells brothers hen roost, as well as one owned by George Grandjean of South Fifth street. The Grandjean house was not locked but the prowler broke two windows in making an entry and several valuable birds were stolen. The theft was reported at the time, and the police investigated. Birds that answered the description were found in the Broadway market, but there was not enough evidence to justify an arrest.

Robinson in his confession said that after robbing the roost he took the birds to the Fair Grounds where he penned them up until he had arranged for their sale.

When arraigned before Judge Wilson he entered a plea of guilty, and he was charged with petit larceny.

Judge Wilson remanded him for further hearing this morning and in the interim the police will investigate other complaints from chicken owners. The police believe that Robinson carried on his work on a large scale and that sufficient evidence can be obtained which will result in his spending a long term in the County Jail.

AUTOISTS FIGHT SULLIVAN BILL

State Association Deems Measure Unjust to All Classes of Persons

Albany, Monday— Melvin Bender, general counsel of the New York State Automobile Association who has directed the fight against the passing of the Sullivan Bill which doubles the taxation on motor vehicles has sent forth a call to every one of the 80 affiliated clubs of the association to make a last stand against this bill which comes up for a vote Tuesday (April 20). The desperate fight which the New York Automobile Association has waged against this bill has resulted in staying action repeatedly. The new York State Automobile Association considers this measure not only unjust and unfair an unconstitutional, but highly dangerous to the welfare and the prosperity of the State. Further taxation is the assertion of Mr. Bender, will means a serious draw-back to the State's best interests.

Mr. Bender pointed out that if this bill were passed, it would sound the death knell for prosperity. It would increase the taxes of small automobiles of medium horse power over 400 per cent. A car of twenty-five horse power would pay a license fee $7 instead of the $5 which they are paying now and they would have to pay an extra $3 for each passenger capacity which would make a tax of $22 for the average touring car carrying five passengers.

This bill has been set aside from day to day and a vote seems imminent Tuesday, Mr. Bender asserted. It is likely that a caucus will be held on automobile legislation before the vote is taken.

Mr. Bender declared that the passage of this bill would be breaking faith with the motorists. He has pointed out also that the present bill under which the motorists are taxed was passed only after and agreement between the motorists of the State and the legislature that no additional tax would subsequently be levied.

About Sports Generally

One of the several mysterious incidents concerning the Johnson-Willard fight was the fact that the actual weights of the two fighters were given to the newspaper man and that entirely different weights were megaphoned to the crowd.

Johnson's actual ring weight was 227 and Willard's was 247. Immediately after the men stepped off the scales. Ben Rosenthal, secretary for the promoters, gave the real weights to the newspapers. Then the official announcer heralded to the crowd that Willard's weight was only 238 and that Johnson's was 225.

"Hey, how about those weights," several newspaper men yelled at Rosenthal.

"The weights I gave you—Johnson 227, Willard 247—the correct," answered Rosenthal. "I don't know why they arec hanging the weights in the megaphone announcements, but those weights are incorrect."

A minute later, Jack Curley, promoter of the fight, leaned down, and said to the newspaper men:

"The correct weights are: Willard 247, Johnson, 227."

Willard Won't Fight for Year

Willard won't fight for a year or so, but it won't be his fault. Wily Tom Jones knows that Willard can make much more money—without risk—as an actor and an actor Willard will be.

When Willard was whirled back to the Hotel Miramar, immediately after his victory over Johnson, Jones said to him:

"Well, Jess, old boy, you can take things rather easy now."

Willard looked at Jones in a surprised way.

"What do you mean, Tom?" he asked.

"I mean that you can loaf for six months to a year."

"Loaf?" Willard's tone was one of amazement. "Why, how can I afford to loaf, Tom? I'm the champion now, you know, and I've got to defend my title. But I hope I don't have to fight for a month or so. I'm a bit tired."

Jones smiled.

"No, you won't have to fight for a month, not for six months, Jess," said Jones. "As for defending your title; well, you'll do that soon enough, but then you'll be an actor."

"But I'm not an actor," objected Willard.

"Not yet—but soon," said Jones.

Willard Likes Acting

Willard is taking to theatrical work as a small boy takes to having his face washed. It's something that has to be done—but gosh, how he wishes it were over. And how he hates the time to come when he must have it done again.

Willard, however, shouldn't feel extremely basemul as a performer. He performed for nearly three weeks in the courtyard of the Hotel Miramar in Havana before a crowd that rarely averaged less than 600 and often ran to 1,000. And he showed no stage fright then.

ON THE SPORT TRAIL

We might go at it the way the toastmaster does. Or, again, we might get a letter from the Mayor or the secretary of the Chamber of Commerce. We might make it by way of a regular ad, with borders, headlines, pictures and all that—but what's the use of introductions, any way. We'll just take it on the run, like the umpire who called a third strike on the home team's heaviest hitter with the bases clogged, two out and just one little bingle needed to win.

When You Haven't a Gun

These are the days one thinks of base hits, earned runs and bobbles. But despite the prevalence of baseball fever, a fellow the other day had the nerve to cut loose a line of football talk. It went something like this: "If Colgate can shape up a team that will hold West Point and even beat the Cadets in the early season, there's no doubt but that they will repeat their 1913 performance at Yale and as for Syracuse—Ya see, Yale ain't got any material at fall this year, etc., etc.

There's noo hope, Miranda, no hope.

Might just as well try to dope out the Davis cup affair in mid-December—and with just as much possibility of its correctness.

Squire McDonough ought to make a good sort of manager. A guy who can take a team from seventh to second without a whisper from the ghost on pay day is there, and that is what McDonough did with the Senators two years ago, when Jim Tamsett "retired" from baseball. The owners had been booting 'em regularly on pay days and Mac told his men frankly it was a chance. If they climbed, would be straightened out: Otherwise—it was beat the town, boys, he was certain the net receipts would follow suit and everything before the tailors get wind of this. So they went at it and climbed—from sixth to second.

No Money in Baseball

There isn't any money in baseball. How many times have State leaguers told us this. There was Harvey Teal, the elongated school master, who used to pitch for Syracuse. Down at the Utica Athletic Field one day three years ago, Teal sat in the press box watching the game. He had pitched the day before.

"Look at that poor cuss out there working for $200 per month per-haps," lisped Harve, as he watched one of his mates bending 'em over. "Starvation pay," he exclaimed, as an afterthought.

"What's the matter with that?" we inquired, solicitously.

"What's $200 in a four-month business that leaves you unfit for anything else the rest of the time?" Teal inquired rather indignantly, and added, "That's only $800 for a yea.

"Well, Harvey, why do you stay with it?"

"Oh, you know," he said, "the game, etc., et c., etc."

Teal couldn't even stay away from the park his off days.

Down at the Albany schedule meetin heard another no-money-in-baseball wail. A fellow who has made a living in the game for years arose from a softly cushioned Ten Eyck arm chair about 2 a. m. and in labored accents intoned, "There ain't no money in baseball."

And just about then he got the merry old horse laugh, for he was looking around for some one to point to a dotted line and say, "Sign here."

For Love of the Game

There may be no money in baseball, but, how the boys do stick," for the love of the game." Hoy they come back, year after year, until the final gong sounds and the fans mope around with thumbs turned down; they play the old salary wing to the extreme tip of the limit—and then get jobs as umpires.

But the unfitness for other fields after a baseball season does not appear.

KELLEY'S EXPERIENCE

Once upon a time a sporting writer by the name of Kelly was lured from his home in Buffalo to the town of Niagara Falls which is in the same Empire State and quite nearby. This fellow Kelly went to the town which made the waterfalls famous for the purpose of refereeing an affair that is known as Match de Boxeo, in Spanish, and is called a prize fight in vulgar Anglo-Saxon language.

Kelly is a very famous fellow and what he doesn't know about the Match de Boxeo business is not worth confining in one's dome. He has in addition to other qualities an unerring judgment as to who wins. But on this momentous occasion, which took place during the period when decisions were permitted in New York, his unerring judgment conflicted with that of a large part of the audience.

It so happened that one of the contestants in the Match de Boxeo was something akin to local talent in Niagara Falls. At any rate, a large flock of money had beenwithdrawn from the bank that day by the Niagara Fallers so they could bet on the local talent's chances.

No Decision for Local Talent

Well, in due course of time, the end of the fight was reached. Both men were on their feet and of course a decision by the referee was necessary In view of the fact that the local talent gladiator had been beaten up in a way that should have demanded the attention of the Humane Society there was only one thing for this Kelly fellow to do. That was to award the decision to the guy who had battered the local talent party into a sad looking wreck.

Kelly did what he should have done—he lifted up the arm of the outsider as soon as the final gong had been sounded. And then things began to bust.

For a fleeting second after Kelly had made his ruling silence reigned in the house. And then a wild roar shook the place. The roaring grew wilder and wilder as the crowd that had bet on the local talent realized that its money belonged to the enemy.

Realizing that discretion is the better part of valor Kelly did the only thing that could be done. He leaped from the ring and sped to the nearest exit with the crowd in mad pursuit and only two-jumps in the rear. Kelly struck out into the night with both legs and he went faster than anyone ever ran before and that includes Mel. Sheppard, mercury of Grecian fame, and Howard Drew.

A Cold, Cold Night

Of course, in view of his speed, Kelly soon distanced pursuit but when he discovered that he had done the distancing pursuit he also discovered that he had no hat and no coat or overcoat and no collar and no vest and that it was a very cold night in the middle of winter. He also discovered that it was about 23 miles to his home and that he had left all his money in his overcoat.

In due course of time this Kelly fellow, after suffering profusely from the rigors and terrors of travel in mid-winter minus the necessary clothes reached his home in Buffalo and St. Peter forgave him for what he said enroute because of the conditions that forced Kelly to mutter cuss words even and anon.

Morals. If you referee a prize fight always keep your things handy so that you can make a quick getaway in case of necessity.

WRITER FORETOLD TITANIC DISASTER

Morgan Robertson Vividly Described Wreck of the Titan.

MADE A DEEP IMPRESSION.

Many Anecdotes of Famous Author of Sea Stories—Began and Finished in One Night His First Effort, "The Destruction of the Unfit," Writing on a Washtub Until Dawn.

Morgan Robertson, one of the foremost writers of sea stories, who died suddenly in his hotel room in Atlantic City, proved that he was a prophet as well as a teller of tales. In 1898 he wrote "Futility," in which he vividly described the wreck of the Titan, the largest and finest steamer ever constructed, the wreck being caused by an iceberg in the vicinity of the Titanic catastrophe. When the Titanic went down, just fifteen years after the book had been written, the similarity of names in the imaginary book and the locality where the ship hit the iceberg made a profound impression. Mr. Robertson followed the sea for many years before he took up literature.

Illustrating the impossibility of one man knowing all there is to know, Robertson told this story:

"I used to sail with a skipper who was a good seaman, but he was what you might call all at sea when he was on land. He was driving one day along a country road in England when he came to a signpost. An index finger pointed in the direction from which the skipper had come, and the inscription on it read, 'Selkirk, 12 miles.'

"Now, Selkirk was the town for which the skipper was bound. He did not want to turn around, so he climbed the post, tore it loose and nailed it to a post on the other side of the road, so the hand pointed in the direction he was going. Then he climbed back into the buggy and drove on."

"I admire a liar," Robertson used to say, "even when his prevarications strain my credulity. A friend of mine, who objects to efforts to pry into his personal affairs, recently limped into my workshop.

"'What's the matter with your foot?' I asked, more to be polite than because I cared what was the trouble.

"Then he gained my everlasting admiration by a display of nerve and mendacity I never saw equaled. 'An eel stepped on it,' he said."

Gets Clippings on "Ghosts."

Robertson used to delight in telling this story:

"Sometime ago I gave an order to a concern which furnished newspaper clippings, telling the manager that I wanted ghost stories. I undertook to explain that what I wanted was fiction that dealt with spirits and spooks, and the clipping man said he understood and would fix me all right.

"In a few days I began receiving clippings about ghosts. One of the slips was taken from a country paper in Pennsylvania and it said that a rival sheet had 'given up the ghost.' Another clipping, taken from a Louisville paper, was a pert paragraph from some other paper regarding Bryan and the Democracy, over which was the caption, 'Hamlet Without the Ghost.'

"Another clipping referred to the production of Ibsen's 'Ghost' in London, while the fourth was an editorial paragraph from a North Carolina paper in which a political convention was referred to as a 'ghost dance.' I never realized before that there were so many kinds of ghosts."

In 1896 while he was in New York a friend handed Robertson one of Rudyard Kipling's sea stories and told him to read it. He did and that night he began and finished his first short story, writing on a washtub until dawn. He called it "The Destruction of the Unfit." After a long delay it was accepted by a magazine which paid $25 for it. During the year that followed Mr. Robertson wrote and sold about twenty short stories of the sea. Since then not a year and perhaps not a month passed in which one or more of his sea pieces did not appear.

Rough on Rosebery.

Lord Rosebery has all his life been a wonderful orator, and he has probably made as many speeches as any politician living. He has told an amusing story against himself about a certain proofreader who, after he had read the proof of a particularly long speech of his lordship's, wrote at the end of it the words, "Thank heaven!"

The proof was duly returned to the printer, who set up these words in type. The next day the speech was published in the newspaper with the following startling ending: "At the conclusion of his speech Lord Rosebery left for the south. Thank heaven!"—London Tit-Bits.

Ferreting Out An Injustice

It Was All Done by a Young Lawyer For an Attractive Widow.

By WILLARD BLAKEMAN

There has been the same development in jurisprudence as in everything else. From the time of trial by battle to trial by jury there has been continued progress, and, strange to say, there are more reforms being considered today than ever before. In other words, confidence in the justice dispensed in our criminal courts is dying out.

The reason of this is that legal justice is mechanical, and mechanical contrivances do not always work. The many ingenious happenings that have been conjured up by detective story writers have doubtless helped to make people chary of believing in the infallibility of courts. I, as a criminal lawyer, have often, by thought and energy alone, turned the results of a month's trial into an absurdity. In the first place I judge of an accused person's innocence from intuition. After that I think and work—principally the latter.

I was in a criminal courtroom one day when a young woman was convicted of having sent a dose of chloral to her husband. I watched her countenance and made up my mind from its emotional expression that she was innocent. You may sneer at judgment from emotional expression, but it is often the basis of my efforts in my profession. If you ask me how I can tell innocence from guilt by such a process I am forced to admit that I cannot enlighten you.

The case I have referred to is this. Edith Atwater married, through the influence of her mother, Martin Haywood, an elderly man, who was wealthy. It was a May and December match, and December soon froze the sap of May. The couple lived unhappily together. Haywood was a chronic invalid, and this with age made him peevish. He was very parsimonious and would not have a doctor, constantly experimenting with remedies which he procured himself.

The usual way for a young wife to get rid of an old husband is by poison, and the favorite poison is arsenic. The arsenic is always discovered in the deceased's stomach, but this does not seem to deter candidates for widowhood from using it.

Old Haywood died under very suspicious circumstances. These were that he was ill for some time and no doctor was in attendance. No druggist in the town where he lived and died had sold him any medicines. How could a man die without a doctor or even a druggist to help him? The idea was preposterous. It was the neighbors who noticed these incongruities, and their tongues wagged at one another accordingly. The rumors came to the knowledge of the police, who exhumed the body; a chemist made an analysis and found arsenic.

This was sufficient evidence in itself to convict his wife of having poisoned him. But the courts, which are instituted to give all accused persons the same chance before the law and use the same machinery for the innocent as for the guilty, insist upon putting both through the legal mill. A person brought up in refinement and morality is ground out through the same mill as a Black Hand murderer who, by a signal, informs a witness that if he tells the truth his life will pay the forfeit.

Mrs. Haywood was brought to trial, and, as I have said, I was in the courtroom when she was sentenced. She had been convicted by the law machine, twelve good and true men being its spokesmen, and was sentenced to life imprisonment. I knew that she was innocent. How? I have told you that I cannot tell you this. Scoffers have since said that I mistook sympathy for intuition. Let them scoff.

I will admit that I went away from the courtroom with a heavy heart and that the agony of despair in that beautiful face haunted me. It continued to haunt me. When at the end of several months I found I could not get rid of it I determined that I must prove the innocence of the subject of it or continue to suffer indefinitely. I determined to begin a work for which I would receive no pecuniary compensation.

Having procured a copy of the evidence in Mrs. Haywood's case, after studying it I made up my mind, notwithstanding the fact that Haywood had bought no drugs during his illness, that he had taken more arsenic than was good for him. Whether it had produced his death or not did not matter. His widow had been convicted of killing him by giving him poison on the ground that he had not bought it himself and she had bought it. This was evidence enough for the court, but it was not enough for me.

I was tempted to go to the prison where Mrs. Haywood was confined and seek for points from her. But that is not in accordance with my methods. I preferred to work as a scientist, and a scientist should investigate independently of any influence. My theory being that Haywood had taken the drug himself, it behooved me to exhaust it before forming another.

Haywood had lived many years in the same town and the same house in which he died. I have said that he had never employed a physician. Nevertheless, to make sure, I inquired of every doctor in town if he had ever prescribed arsenic as a remedy for him. Not one of the profession remembered having even been called upon to treat him. I then eliminated the druggists in the same way. Not a druggist had ever sold him a particle of medicine. But one of them had sold Mrs. Haywood a considerable amount of arsenic with which to exterminate rats. At least this was her reason given for buying it. This druggist's evidence had been given at the trial and had much to do with the conviction.

Now, if Haywood had been used to buying medicines in the town when he wanted them my hope of proving that he had bought the arsenic which poisoned him would have been extinguished. Mrs. Haywood's legal defender had stopped at this point, either not considering the fact that the deceased had bought no medicine in the town at all, or if he had it probably did not occur to him that Haywood might have bought all his drugs somewhere else.

Persons who work for pay take such pains as it will pay them to take, and no more. Whoever takes more than this does it for love. I suppose I must admit that love was my incentive. My energies were bent upon proving that Haywood had bought the drug that killed him, and had I not fallen in love with the woman who had been convicted of killing him I would not have entered upon the matter at all.

Haywood having been a hypochondriac, I did not believe that he would get on without medicines. But, granting he had bought drugs secretly, to find the person who had sold them to him was like looking for a needle in a haystack. After inquiring of all the druggists in town I took in a circuit of the neighboring towns. I learned nothing for my pains.

It occurred to me that a possible reason for a man's concealing the place where he bought his medicines was that he was taking some nerve drug and desired to conceal his habit. In this case he would buy it secretly and might buy any other drug he wished in the same place. Haywood would have likely sent to the nearest large city for his dope, and that was a place of a million people, with a proportionate number of wholesale and retail druggists.

I went to the city myself, spending a week there, inquiring of every druggist whether he had ever sent Haywood any drug. No concern had done so. I was about to give up the matter when it occurred to me that one who would take pains to conceal his habit would not be likely to have the dope sent to his address direct. So I went the rounds again and asked every druggist if he had a record of sending drugs to any one in the place where Haywood had lived.

I found a number of druggists who had sent dope in very small quantities to A. R. Ingersoll at the general delivery of the postoffice. One of these druggists had sent Mr. Ingersoll at times a tonic of arsenic. I was struck with the fact that some of this tonic had been sent the person not very long before his death.

Eager to find whether Mr. Ingersoll and Mr. Haywood were one and the same man, I returned home at once and began an investigation. No such person as A. R. Ingersoll was or had been a citizen of the place.

On inquiry at the postoffice I finally found a general delivery clerk who had delivered small packages to Mr. Ingersoll. He described Mr. Haywood.

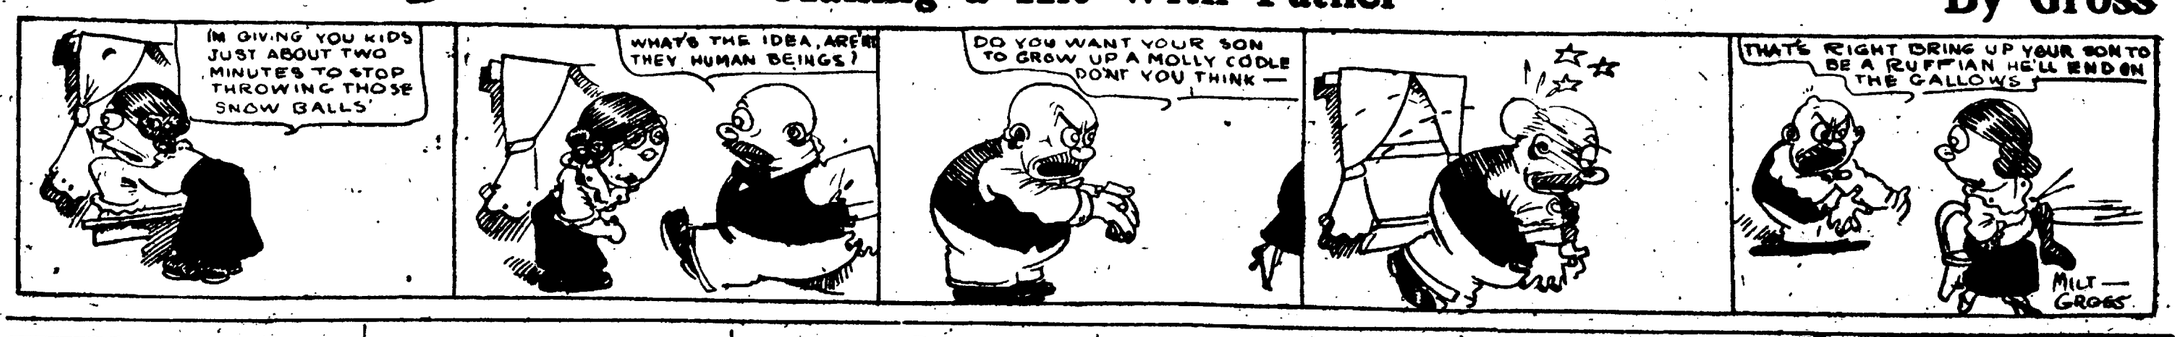
Eureka!

I now went to the attorney who had defended Mrs. Haywood and gave him an account of my investigations, propounding a theory that Haywood had had a drug habit and had bought arsenic for a tonic. He communicated what I had learned to the prisoner, and a new trial was applied for.

It pleased me to turn over the evidence I had elicited to Mrs. Haywood's attorney and keep in the dark myself. During the new trial I sat in the courtroom among the spectators and watched the prisoner as she eagerly drank in the evidence I had been at so much pains to hunt up without knowing that the man who had benefited her was looking at her.

When the evidence had all been placed before the court the prosecuting attorney made a motion that the judge instruct the jury to acquit the prisoner. The judge assented and the jury acquitted her without leaving their seats. I longed to go to the released woman and take her in my arms, but if I did this I preferred that it should not be in public.

The next day Mrs. Haywood's attorney told me that she had begged of him to explain how her case had been ferreted out and who had taken so much interest in her as to do the work. I permitted him to make an appointment for me to meet the young widow at his office the next morning.



At the hour named I was taken into the attorney's private office and was formally introduced to the woman I had been instrumental in releasing from life imprisonment.

I have given my story up to this point in full, and I doubt not that the reader is interested in knowing what occurred between me and Mrs. Haywood after being left alone together. Should I give an account of it the story might be spoiled for some who would fail to appreciate the tremendous importance of the work I had done for the lady and her action to a stranger in consequence. I will only say that when I had told her my story she asked me why I had taken so much trouble for her. Any one who has read the story will be able to judge of my reply, and some may correctly name the effect upon the widow.

THE TROUBLES OF BELINDA

Judging by Appearances Led to False Conclusions.

Frank and I concluded to spend our honeymoon in Washington. We wanted to inspect that beautiful city and see and hear the prominent men assembled there. We gave up the first few days to sightseeing, then spent our time in the senate chamber and house of representatives. I was much impressed with the dignity of the senators, and some of the representatives seemed to me to be very bright men.

The last day we were in Washington found me quite fatigued. I had been at the hall of representatives all day, where a discussion on the tariff was going on, and I was converted from one side to the other a dozen times. About 4 o'clock in the afternoon we went to the hotel, and Frank left me that I might take a rest before dinner. In the evening we were to visit some place of amusement. Frank had scarcely gone out before I heard a step in the hall and a key turned in the lock next door. Some one entered the room, and as there was a door between the two rooms I could hear very plainly. A man's voice said:

"Belinda, get up. Do you propose to keep your bed all day? Are you not aware that in political life a wife has a part to play as well as the husband? Here I am pestered all day by constituents, every one of whom has an 'ax to grind,' while you are dreaming the happy hours away. Get up, I say, and sew on this button."

Then a woman's voice:

"Jethro, you're a brute. Didn't I slave the life out of me when you were running for congress, cookin' for the whole county? Wasn't you always bringin' folks home to dinner, and didn't I have not only to cook for 'em, but play sweet on 'em? And what do I get for it? Shet up here in this lonesome hotel while you strut about in the lobby buttonholed by female constituents, who play sweet on you to get you to introduce bills for their relief. And you fool enough to think they love you."

There was no reply to this. The man had evidently been convinced of his injustice and kept quiet.

Oh, dear! Are Frank and I ever coming to speak to one another like this? And what a fraud political life must be, after all.

"Belinda!"

It was the man next door again. I wished they would go out. I had no hope of getting a nap and would be tired in the evening.

"Shet up!"

"Come out of that closet."

"I'm dressin'."

"Dressin', eh, gal! Do you mean you've got to go into a closet to dress when there's no one present but your lawful lord and master?"

The woman was evidently in the closet, for her voice was muffled, but I could hear it distinctly.

"You my lord and master! You'd make a beautiful lord, and as for a master, you're a slave—a slave to your constituents. You wouldn't dare complain to one of 'em if he rapped you over the head."

"I'll rap you over the head, you Ole Jesebel, if you say that again."

"You're no sort of a lord, and you're a slave—worse'n a slave. You're a"—

I heard one blow and a cry and covered my head with the bedclothes. I lay thinking what a horrid couple they were and what low people represent us in congress. When I took the clothes away from my ears the man was humming a tune. Every now and again there came a sob from the woman, but he paid no attention to it, and she seemed to be crying herself asleep.

I could not realize that the gentlemen I had seen during the day at the capitol sitting in their seats and speaking, many of them so learnedly, numbered among them even one who was a wife beater. But here was perfect evidence of it.

The brute went out presently and when he did so locked his wife in the room. I listened, but heard nothing. She was doubtless asleep and had forgotten his horrid treatment. Frank came in, and when I told him about it he was not surprised. But Frank is always talking about the low type of people engaged in politics. I dressed for dinner, and we went downstairs.

In the evening we strolled out to find some place of amusement. We passed a variety hall, and, since as a girl I had been denied such places, I begged Frank to take me in. We listened to women sing songs and men sing songs and people dance and saw trained animals. Then a man came out and threw down some little dummy figures. And what do you suppose was the first word he said?

"Belinda, get up."

Good gracious! He was the brute I had been listening to during the afternoon. He repeated the conversation I had overheard, which he had been doubtless rehearsing, and ended by beating one of the dummies, his wife, who sobbed as naturally as she did during the afternoon.

At the first word Frank and I looked at each other. Then Frank burst out laughing. And during the rest of the ventriloquist's performance we hid our faces in our handkerchiefs to conceal from the audience a mirth it could not understand.

"It doesn't do," said Frank as we walked back to the hotel, "to judge by appearances. Perhaps many of our legislators are good men after all."

WOMEN POLL BIG VOTE IN CHICAGO ELECTION.

Anti-suffragists deny that the women's vote was the controlling factor in the sensational mayoralty election in Chicago, in which William Hale Thompson, Republican, obtained a plurality of 140,000, the greatest in the history of the city, over Robert M. Sweitzer, the Democratic candidate. The suffragists claim the victory as theirs.

There were no fewer than 282,000 registered women voters, and the election was the largest experiment in women suffrage yet tried in this country in a municipal contest. The outcome was watched with interest the world over.

But, while it is believed that 60 per cent of the women voted for Mr. Thompson, it is claimed that he also had 60 per cent of the men voters in his favor. Consequently it is asserted that the result would have been the same without the women's vote. The women say they swung the men and produced the victory.

The campaign sizzled with charges of fraud. Local bitterness reached such a high point that at least one election shooting was recorded.

With the first flash of the landslide for Thompson the Republicans began to shout for 1916 and hailed the result of the mayoralty election as a reliable indication of what they hope will happen in the next national election.

Of the 282,000 women voters 243,549 went to the polls. This is the largest women's vote so far. The largest previous poll in Chicago was last spring, when 164,026 women cast their ballots. Of the 243,549 women 136,930 voted Republican and 86,624 Democratic. At the primaries 58,764 women voted Republican and 98,873 Democratic.

EVENING GOWN.

SMART FROCK.

COTTONS ARE POPULAR.

And Can Be Found in Prices to Suit All Incomes.

Never have there been prettier small patterns in cotton than are found this year, nor are they expensive, since they are found in every material, from 25 cent dimities to $2 and $3 embroidered chiffons.

Canton crapes in tiny flower designs, voiles of various prices and even our old favorite, dotted swiss and polka-dotted mousselines, may all be used for dainty little frocks, of which every one needs two or three, whether one remains at home or goes away for the hot season. The sensible woman who must consider the laundry selects one that will not soil easily, a well covered design or else plain white. She relies on what will always give her a fresh looking frock, not too elaborate, one that does not need to be laundered more than once.

Some women always send their wash dresses to a cleaner for the first laundering in order to set the colors and keep the shape of the skirt, but any of the materials should stand the home tubbing if the dress is first dipped in salted water and not hung in the sun to dry or sprinkled and folded up until ready to iron.

These sheer cottons and light silks stand much more fullness and flouncing than is possible in heavier fabrics, and milady can revel in billowy ruffles and gathers and puffings to her heart's content when hot days come.

Military Boot.

The severe shoe is the exception except for outing wear, and the military finish has the feminine cast that reminds one of the "fille du regiment" or some other light opera heroine, with its dainty patent leather finishing and high heel and tassel which are found even on the ties of the tennis shoe.

Old Enough.

"Yep," answered the thin carpetlist. "I've been invited."

"Did she keep her last birthday?"

ALARM CLOCK CURES HENS.

Farmer Tries Novel Scheme With Startling Success.

A writer in the Farm and Fireside declares that the surest cure for broody hens is an alarm clock. He says:

"Some years ago I was endeavoring to break up a sitting hen, but my efforts were in vain. Old Yaller continued to sit. Finally I took a small alarm clock and set it so it would go off in a few minutes. I placed it in one corner of her nest and watched. It went off. And so did Old Yaller. She left the nest and stood dazed for one horrified instant, and then, with one shrill squawk, she ran out of the henhouse and flew over the park fence and began to hunt for bugs in the grass.

"She not only stopped sitting, but she stopped clucking, and in a short time began to lay. I have since tried this method on more than 100 broody hens with complete success."

98, NOT TOO OLD TO WORK.

Aged Woman Resents Statement That She's Not Spry.

"I had to beg. They all said I was too old to work, but I'm not," said Mrs. Edna Sheppard when arraigned before Recorder Gaskill in Atlantic City, N. J., on the charge of seeking alms on the streets.

"Well, you don't look exactly like a spring chicken. Just what is your age?" inquired the court.

"None of your freshness, young man. I'm only ninety-eight, and I'm not ashamed to tell it either," was the reply.

"Prisoner discharged," was the verdict after investigation had shown Mrs. Sheppard really was within two years of the century mark.

RIBBONS FOR TRIMMINGS.

Placed on Millinery and Gowns Are Popular Decorations.

Ribbons will have large use for millinery decoration and for girdles on dresses, says the Dry Goods Economist. Narrow grosgrains will prevail for the former and wide, plain ribbons for the latter purpose. Striped and check effects will be dominant in the fancy novelties.

Veilings worn in loose, draped fashion will be in great vogue. Bordered ones will be popular. Hand run designs, velvet spots and fillet meshes will be features.

Millinery features are ultra small sailor, poke, toque and tricorn shapes, lisere straw in combination with other braids; small, flat, floral trimmings; narrow grosgrain and georgette satin ribbons, fancy button and straw novelties and compact feather effects.

Spring Cleaning Hint.

To clean ecru or cream curtains without washing tack a sheet to the floor, stretch curtain on this and cover with coarse salt and cornmeal. Rub briskly with a whisk broom fifteen minutes and you will have clean curtains and color as bright as new.

BEAUTY SNAPSHOTS.

It is claimed that tea boiled with water and strained is a mild astringent lotion for lessening hair falling.

A cold shower bath every morning will do much toward hardening the skin to winds.

An excellent practice to insure bright eyes and a clear skin is to take the juice of a lemon in a glass of water, with a dash of salt added. This acts directly on the liver, which has more to do with good looks than many imagine.

Pale, sparse eyebrows and lashes make a face expressionless. They can be coaxed into a better growth by rubbing the eyebrows nightly with vaseline.

If your hands perspire too freely, add a few drops of tincture of myrrh to the water in which you rinse them after washing. Then dry thoroughly and dust with boracic acid or oatmeal.

Suit Case Sewing Room.

For a woman living in a small apartment, or a home that is not large enough to include a sewing room, an excellent substitute for a sewing room—not a sewing basket—is an inexpensive Japanese suit case. The bag fastened to the inside of the cover (for shirts) is a splendid place to keep paper patterns, scraps of cloth, written lists of little things required on the next shopping tour, etc. The other part, of course, is for the sewing. A cushion can be attached to the side for pins and needles; also a box containing thread, scissors, tape measure, tailor's chalk, lead pencil, thimble, etc. Such a suit case is large enough to contain practically all that one needs in sewing. Furthermore, it looks neater when closed than a box of the same size would, is much more durable and is easily carried from one room to another, or kept by the side of the machine.

THE "JITNEY BUS."

Five Cent Motorcar Ride Helps to Solve City Transit Problems.

Jitney busses are the most recent of transit experiments and have excited much interest in the smaller American cities recently. "Jitney" is slang, borrowed from the Mexican for a five cent piece, and the only simon pure though highly varnished jitney bus is the one that charges a five cent fare regardless of its size, make, power or the number of passengers it may be carrying.

Starting in the cities of southern California about the beginning of the year, the jitney bus idea has spread quickly across the continent.

The jitney bus, of course, is far from popular with the street railway companies where it has won the approval of the public. The first effort to stop jitneys in the court has been made in San Diego and has failed. The contention was raised in the superior court of that city that jitneys could not be legally operated without a franchise. In denying the petition for an injunction Judge W. A. Sloan held that in the absence of any physical appropriation of the highway the jitney is not subject to the franchise laws. The right of the legislature to enact a law giving municipalities authority to require franchises was not questioned, but Judge Sloan said if the city had a right to regulate jitneys by ordinance there was no ground for injunction in the absence of such ordinance.

Among the legal restrictions that may be applied by a city are prescribed routes of travel, the number of passengers carried by each vehicle, the districts of travel and the promotion of the highest efficiency and safety in public transportation. The license power is also capable of adjustment within reasonable bounds.

Judge Sloan held that there was an absence of authority in law to indicate that the use of a public highway in the business of a common carrier of either freight or passengers by stage or omnibus lines had ever been treated as an unusual or unauthorized use requiring a franchise grant.

QUAINT PARASOLS.

The quaint styles of parasols used from 1820 to 1830 have again appeared. Shirrings, puffings, pipings, cordings and knife plaitings are used in a variety of ways, to emphasize ribs, to outline gores and to form borders. Many odd shapes and rich color combinations are seen. Plain, severe styles, the most prominent being the sand tones, are seen only with tailored dresses. There is a tendency to combine materials. In dressy, fancy models the sand tones are combined with bright colors. For instance, in one model of brilliant red there is a border and a piping between the shirred gores in a rich sand color verging on gold.

A smart parasol developed in contrasting colors has a row of shirring between the gores, producing a leaf-like effect. A very pretty parasol has a border of sheer crepe in a contrasting color, looped in each section and caught with a flat button effect. Battleship gray is a favorite color, being used alone in tailored designs and in combination with the new reds and blues in elaborate designs.

Many striking shapes are seen. Among these is one with wide gores of richly colored material and narrow portions in stripes or checks. A cluster of shirring appears at the edge. Of special interest is the return of flat Japanese and Chinese effects, both plain and richly embroidered. Japanese prints are in both silk and cotton. Many Japanese designs have dark borders, with here and there a delicate bit of hand embroidery in gold. Sometimes odd looking velvet birds in orange and blue tones are appliqued over the inside surface of the parasol.

Australia.

Nobody quite knows who discov[ered] Australia. The feat has been fa[thered] on Chinese, Malays, French, Venet[ians] and Spaniards, while dark hints ab[out] the existence of a southern continent were made by the ancient Greeks and Romans. Possibly the secret lies hidden in the unpublished records of the Dutch East India company among the state archives at The Hague. The founding of the first British settle[ment] at Port Jackson, near the site of Sydney, was on Jan. 26, 1788. But the earliest "settlers" were for the part involuntary colonists, being composed mainly of transported convicts.—London Mail.

Senator Brown's Statement

Leader of Upper House Shows Necessity of Indirect Taxes

Elon R. Brown, leader of the Senate, has issued the following statement to the press, showing the necessity of increasing the revenue of the state by new indirect taxes.

His points are:

1. That the expenditures of the state for activities to which it is already committed must be $75,000,000 within the next five years.

2. That its present indirect revenue is only $40,000,000.

3. That the bonded debt of the municipalities is one billion and that of the state $245,000,000, imposing a 12½ per cent mortgage on the present assessed value of the state, and that further bond issues are impossible.

4. That the federal income tax makes New York contribute one-third of the entire tax from that source and this and the federal excise tax of $26,000,000 on this state bear heavily on its taxpayers.

5. That the time has come to call a halt on all new enterprises and find ways and means of paying for those to which the state is already committed.

Senator Brown's statement in full is as follows:

Evidences of lack of understanding of state finances multiply. The opposition of New York city officials to a direct state tax can be accounted for upon no theory except ignorance of the condition of the state treasury and of the ordinary sources of revenue. Opposition to extremely moderate proposals to secure additional revenue from accumulated wealth other than real estate to meet the state's commitments already firmly established, and prevent an increase in direct taxes, cannot be accounted for by anything except ignorance of liabilities the state has already assumed and the inadequacy of its present tax resources.

INCREASE IN STATE FUNCTIONS.

Our present condition can best be understood by considering changes that have occurred in the functions of the state during the last thirty years. Mr. Bryce says in his American Commonwealth:

"The budget of the state is seldom large in proportion to the wealth of its inhabitants, because the chief burden of administration is borne not by the state, but by its subdivisions, the counties, and still more by the cities and townships. * * * In 1882 only seven states raised for state purposes a revenue exceeding two million dollars. In that year the revenue of New York was $7,690,416, (population about 5,200,000)."

New York's revenue in 1914 was $50,289,689.62, of which $7,701,271.81 was raised by the 1913 tax of .58 mills and $42,588,417.81 by indirect taxes. The tax rate in 1882 was 2.45 mills. Of the $7,690,416 revenue in 1882, $6,820,622 was raised by direct taxation upon the assessed valuation of the state, then amounting to $2,783,000,000. The assessed value of the state now is upwards of $11,000,000,000, and the rate of 2.45 mills imposed in 1882 would have produced more than $27,000,000 in 1914. This burden would now be intolerable because of the vast increase of local indebtedness and taxes. From the report of the state board of tax commissioners for 1913, it appears that the total bonded debt of all the local subdivisions of the state was $1,345,000,000; the sinking funds amounted to $305,000,000, leaving a net bonded debt of $1,040,000,000, or the equivalent of a ten per cent mortgage upon the entire assessed value of the property of the state.

THE STATE'S BONDED DEBT.

The state's bonded debt in 1882 was $9,000,000. The $101,000,000 for canals, $19,000,000 for canal terminals, and $100,000,000 for highways are to be supplemented with $25,000,000 to finish the canal system. The state's bonded debt will thus reach $245,000,000, and be a second mortgage of 2½ per cent upon the assessed value of the state over and above the ten per cent mortgage imposed locally. This means that the state and its localities have gone the limit in incurring bonded indebtedness. New schemes involving expenditures must be restricted to the annual revenues of the state. Otherwise the state will soon be in the condition of the city of New York. Another course may not mean bankruptcy and repudiation, but it will mean placing New York in the column of the debt-ridden states of Europe. It doesn't mean that yet. The state's credit is good. Its sinking funds have been defended against all raids, but it should cease to incur debt for new commitments.

The state has also increased its expenses by undertaking the care of the insane; by caring for prisoners formerly kept in county jails and penitentiaries, and by the building and maintenance of an extensive system of charitable institutions. The state has acquired 1,500,000 acres of land in the forest preserve; it has bought and maintains 25 parks, monuments and battle grounds. It has established the departments of labor, workmen's compensation, agriculture, conservation, highways and public service, and greatly increased its activities and expenditures for the public health. While many of these activities have superseded local functions, their assumption by the state has not checked local expenditure.

NECESSARY INCREASE IN REVENUE.

The state's policies thus established will require revenues for the next fiscal year between $55,000,000 and $60,000,000, and a direct state tax of not less than $15,000,000. Worse than that, if the state maintains the different branches of public service to which it is thus committed, the state budget will, under strictly economical administration reach $70,000,000, and probably $75,000,000 within five years. Of the total bond issue of $245,000,000 now authorized, only $159,000,000 has been issued, but the balance must be issued within five years. The interest and sinking fund charges on these bonds will be $15,000,000 annually. The highway system to which the state is now committed contemplates the building of 3,000 miles of highway, of which 2,000 miles are not yet constructed. They must be kept in repair when constructed. This will cost on the average $1,000 per mile annually, involving an annual expenditure of $9,000,000 for highway maintenance as a permanent charge for the highways contemplated under existing plans of improvement.

In spite of all economies, departments established and functions assumed grow in expense. While the increase in expenses is frequently excessive some increase is unavoidable. The cost of the administrative, agricultural, penal, curative and charitable departments increased in the ten years from 1905 to 1914 from $10,000,000 to $16,000,000 or 60 per cent. (Comptroller's report, 1915; p. 120-123). If allowed to increase at the same rate for the next five years, these departments will cost $21,000,000 annually.

In the ten years from 1905 to 1914, the cost of the legislative, judicial, regulative, educational and defensive departments increased from $10,000,000 to $18,000,000, or 80 per cent. If this ratio of increase continues, these departments will in five years cost $25,000,000 annually.

MUST CALL A HALT.

I have not taken into account in these estimates the increased cost of new enterprises in the departments of labor, health and workmen's compensation. Unless the state refuses to carry on the enterprises to which it is now committed, these and other miscellaneous departments may in the course of five years involve an expenditure of $10,000,000 annually. This would bring the total state expenditure at the end of five years up to $80,000,000. By finding the simplest plan of administration and adhering to it, by putting men who know about the state's affairs in office and keeping them there, by economy, by the reduction of padded payrolls, and by setting a firm face against new state functions, this increase may be checked and the annual appropriations possibly held to $70,000,000 or $75,000,000 for this decade, but that is the best that can be hoped for.

If preparation is not made to foot these bills by further indirect revenue, the state must be prepared for a direct tax levy within five years of from $20,000,000 to $30,000,000 annually. It is unfortunate in this crisis that the taxpaying capacity in New York is lessened by the national income tax, which bears so unequally on our citizens. This state paid last year to the national government on this tax $19,370,397.53 or one-third part of the levy upon the entire nation. If the state had shown the same aversion to the income tax amendment that it now shows to a direct tax and the levy of new indirect taxes, the burden might have been avoided.

Many burdens have been imposed upon the industries and wealth of the state for special interests and classes. Among these are the full-crew bill, increasing the cost of railroad operation in the state $2,000,000 annually, the extension of the eight-hour law and the prevailing rate of wages law to new classes of employes in state and municipal service, and workmen's compensation rates 50 per cent higher than other states. None of these swell the state treasury, while many of them draw

British Capture Height South of Ypres After a Battle in Mine Craters; Germans Prevent Rescue of Crew of Trawler Sunk in the North Sea

ALLIES' POSITION IS GEN. FRENCH'S STRENGTH

London, Tuesday.—The steady pressure by the British on the German lines running from St. Eloi to La Basse developed yesterday into an active offensive in the region of Zillebeke, southeast of Ypres, and the capture of Hill No. 60, two miles south of the village. The position is one of much strategic importance, and, since an official statement by the War Office last night says it now is occupied in force, it promises to be a tower of strength in any further operations in this region.

Hill No. 60, while a comparatively slight elevation, dominates the low lying country to the west, and German guns posted on it had a clear and unobstructed range into the British lines near St. Eloi, only a mile away. Gradually the British have been sapping and mining their way forward for the purpose of reducing the position, and yesterday they exploded a series of mines that tore much of the hill away. There was desperate fighting in the craters produced by the explosions, but in the end the Germans were driven out, the British statement says. Berlin declared last night a German counter attack regained possession of the hill, but dispatches from the front this morning indicate the British have well organized the elevation for defence.

Military observers here see in the capture of the hill a reversal of conditions in this vicinity. Heretofore military advantages have rested largely with the Germans. Guarded by the slight eminence, the troops operating in the sector occupied a strip of rough and well wooded territory almost approaching a forest in density, stretching from the hill two miles northeast to Gheluvelt. The hill dominates the canal and railway running from Ypres to Comines and highways leading from Ypres to Comines and Wervicq. With the British in possession of the superior gun positions they will be able to sweep the wooded country to Gheluvelt and extend their lines to the east at least a mile for a distance, north and south, of three or four miles.

There was an inclination in London last night to regard the day's action as the forerunner of a big and general offensive movement all along the British front that will have for its primary purpose the straightening of the trench line and eliminating the British salients at Ypres, Hill No. 60 and Frelinghem, northeast of Amentieres. While no announcement has been made officially, it is believed Field Marshal French has by now approximately 1,000,000 men on his thirty-five mile front with which to prosecute any offensive operations he may decide to undertake.

Reports from Petrograd continue to mention minor successes in the Carpathians, showing that the fighting has not been entirely suspended near the passes, but the Russian, Austrian and German official reports agree that spring virtually has put an end to all activity along the remainder of the eastern front.

Various rumors are current regarding the central Powers. Austria, through the medium of Venice, is credited with receiving with consternation the news of the extension of the Landstrum service to all classes between the ages of eighteen and fifty years, while Rome is sponsor for the statement, attributed to a high German authority, that the German general staff has discarded all plans for an advance on the French front, deciding simply to remain on the defensive.

It is again officially announced that operations are under way in the Dardanelles, where the Turks are reported to be building defences with all speed against landing parties, but the news of the breaking up of the ice at Archangel, the only large seaport on the north coast of Russia, may induce the Entente allies to be more deliberate in their attempts to unlock the gate to the Black Sea.

The irritation in Holland over the torpedoing of the Dutch steamship Katwyk has been greatly allayed by German's expression is found the sinking of the vessel was due to a German submarine. Is found the sinking of the vessel was due to aGerman submarine.

ADMIRALTY DECLARES GERMANS MURDERED

London, Tuesday.—Another wanton murder is charged to the Germans by the British Admiralty in the following statement:

"Yesterday a German submarine torpedoed and sank the trawler Vanilla. The trawler Fermo endeavored to rescue the men, but was fired at and driven off.

"All the crew of the Vanilla were lost. This killing of fisher folk for no military purpose should not escape attention. It is the second murder of this character committed within a week. A careful record is kept of these events."

The Vanilla was sunk by a torpedo from a German submarine in the North Sea yesterday, accordin gto a report made today by Captain Hill, skipper of the Fermo.

Captain Hill said he was within three hundreds yards of the Vanilla when she was struck. He made an attempt to pick up the crew, but he declares the submarine attacked him in his effort at rescue. It fired a torpedo at the Fermo, which forced her to seek safety in flight.

"Voter" Thinks City Attorney Should Reply to "Taxpayer's" Inquiry

The Evening Times is in receipt of a letter whose writer would have the City Attorney make reply to certain inquiries propounded by another writer who signed himself "Taxpayer."

Voter writes thus:

Editor Evening Times.

Dear Sir: I was very much interested in the letter in The Times in regard to the Johnson Springs and have been looking for some specific information in some of the papers. Now, I would like to make some inquiries.

I will state at the outset that I am not a taxpayer in the sense that I own property which is assessable in the city of Fulton, but, I know that if my landlord's taxes are raised one per cent., he will raise my rent at least ten per cent. Still this does not make me a taxpayer and the property owners of the city may vote as many rent raising city improvements as they wish and I have no voice in the matter. However, this is not what I wish to get at.

There has been in the past a large amount of discussion of the Johnson Springs—their value and their purchase and I had inferred that this matter was settled and done with; but it seems that it is not settled at all, from the reports I read, and that the parties who deeded the springs to the city do not know what the deed which they gave means, nor apparently does the city and they wish the city to make the description definite, thereby preventing any future opportunity for contention. Now I do not know much about law, in which being a layman, perhaps I am fortunate; but I take it for granted that the city attorney knew what he was talking about when he stated that the complaining parties should sue the city. Now the city attorney says through your paper that those seeking information should come to him. Well many, I for one, would feel [illegible] all who would like to know should question him he would be kept busy for quite awhile. Most of the voters of Fulton get the information which enlightens them as to the conduct of public affairs through the newspaper—the papers being their guides in determining if the employes are properly performing their duties. Now, if the City Attorney will state just why he told the party who complained about the Johnson spring deed, or conveyance, that he should sue; or if he did tell him so thru a newspaper that has a general circulation in Fulton (it does not much matter which one) he will please a great many people.

OFFICIAL WAR BULLETINS

FRENCH

Paris, via London.—The following official statement was issued by the War Office today:

"At half-past three o'clock this morning a German counter attack at Les Eparges was completely repulsed.

"In the Montmare Wood an infantry action, without appreciable result on either side, occurred in the region of Regnieville. There was a somewhat violent artillery duel in which we gained a clear advantage.

"In the Vosges our attacks carried out on both banks of the Fecht river resulted in a further advance by forcing the enemy to evacuate precipitately Esebrucke, above Metzeral, where he abandoned a large amount of material.

"The French aviator Lieutenant Garros was forced to alight at Ingelmunster, about seven miles north of Coutrai, yesterday evening and was taken prisoner."

"British troops yesterday captured in Belgium, near Zwartalen, 200 yards of German trenches. These they have retained, in spite of several counter attacks.

'We have been successful on both banks of the River Fecht, in Alsace, and our advance is being pressed forward on the north bank. We have gained possession of the summit of Burgkorpfeld, to the southwest of Schilleckerwassen, which directly commands the valley. On the south bank, in the region of Schneefanrieth, we have made notable progress, our troops marching from the south to the north in the direction of the Fecht and Metzerol, which is southwest of Colmar. In this district we made an important gain with the occupation of a series of elevations, the northernmost height of which commands the course of the Fecht in front of Burkorpfeld.

"In the course of this action we captured a division of mountain artillery, two cannon of 74 milimetre calibre and two machine guns.

GERMAN

Berlin, Monday (by wireless).—German Headquarters this afternoon gave out a report on the progress of hostilities which reads as follows:

"To the south of Ypres the British were yesterday ejected from the minor German positions still occupied by them in this locality. British attacks along the railroad between Ypres and Comines broke down with very heavy losses to them.

"Near Gelmunster Lieutenant Garros, a French aviator, has been made prisoner.

"Between the Meuse and the Moselle there have been artillery duels.

"French attacks against our position at Combres and in the Vosges resulted in failure.

"On the eastern front the situation remains unchanged.

"French and British reports concerning victories on the western front are all inventions, as is sufficiently proved by the regular reports from German Headquarters."

BRITISH

"A successful action, commencing on the evening of April 17, culminated last night in the capture and complete occupation of an important point known as Hill 60, which lies about two miles south of Zillegeke, to the east of Ypres. This hill dominates the country to the north and northwest.

"The successful explosion of a mine under the hill commenced the operations, and many Germans were killed by this and fifteen prisoners were captured, including an officer.

'At daybreak on the 18th the enemy delivered a heavy counter attack against this hill, but were repulsed with a heavy loss. They advanced in close formation and our machine gun battery got well into them.

"Desperate efforts were made all day yesterday by the Germans to recover the hill, but they were everywhere repulsed with great loss. In front of the captured position, upon which we are now consolidated in strength, hundreds of dead are lying.

"Yesterday two more German aeroplanes were brought down in this area. Since April 15 the total loss to the enemy is five aeroplanes."

RUSSIAN

Petrograde, via London.—The Russian Army Headquarters today gave out the following official statement:

"On Sunday night the enemy suffered great losses in a further attack Telepotch (in the Carpathian Mountains). By a counter attack we forced the eney to evacuate the approaches to our positions, and we captured an Austrian battalion, which surrendered en bloc.

"It is confirmed that on April 16, when we captured a height to the Sentiment Indicates Taxpayers Will Fight Senator Brown's Bill

Merchants, Who Are as Well, Taxpayers, See No Reason For Paying Mayor and Council

When the Brown bill, which proposes the setting of a salary for the Mayor and Aldermen, comes to this city for a public hearing before the final action of the Legislature, it is pretty certain to meet some strong opposition. In order to ascertain the feeling of some of the larger taxpayers in regard to the bill, several down-town merchants were interview this morning. Their views follow:—

Merchant No. 1 (pays taxes on more than $50,000 real estate.)

"There is no necessity for such a bill. Who proposed it? We are in debt enough now without adding any more. I certainly will oppose the bill."

No. 2 (represents large corporation which pays high taxes.)

"I never heard of the bill. Surely it cannot be passed without an election. It can? Well, personally, I would not be Mayor unless there was a salary attached to the office, but that question should come before the people. Who proposed the bill?"

No. 3. "Yes, I have heard of the bill—and I have no opinion to express. Let them hang themselves. Commission government is what we need here."

No. 4. "That bill is just like the one that was gum-shoed through five years ago. The salaries all went up then, and they will now. Why doesn't the Chamber of Commerce act on this bill? At that, I don't think the bill can be beaten."

SEAPLANES FAILED TO SAVE BRITISH SUBMARINE

London, Tuesday.—Three British seaplanes made a hard fight to prevent the British submarine E-15 falling into the hands of the Turks when it went ashore near Kephez Point, in the Dardanelles, on Sunday. A Turkish official statement received through Berlin and Amsterdam last night says of the loss of the E-15, which had attempted to reconnoitre the Kephez mine field:

"The submarine started from Tenedos at midnight, entered the Dardanelles at twenty minutes after two o'clock in the morning and dived at half-past two o'clock in order to avoid the searchlights. Carried forward by the strong current, it grounded four hours later, with conning tower showing out of the water.

"The Turkish batteries opened fire. The first shell struck the bridge and killed the captain. The second shell hit the chamber containing the electrical machines, and the crew were obliged to leave the craft. The Turkish batteries, however, continued to fire. Three of the crew were killed and seven were wounded.

"Three hostile air machines, learning of the fate of the submarine, flew over the straits and threw bombs at the periscope and conning tower in an attempt to keep the submarine from falling into Turkish hands. About the same time Turkish troops set out in boats to save the craft and crew.

"The wounded British sailors were taken to a hospital, where they received attention."

Underwood Tariff Doomed

When from influential Democratic quorters comes an indorsement of the Republican demand for a revision of the Underwood Tariff law, it begins to look as if the measure were doomed to be short-lived. The Republican attack upon it is due primarily to the fact that it "plays favorites" among industries and does not treat American workingmen fairly. The Democratic attack upon it lays more emphasis upon its woeful and increasing impotence as a revenue raiser. The current balance in thhe Federal Treasury is $55,939,704 less thon at this time last year, in spite of "war" taxes and in spite of the postponement of payments due in various directions. Moreover, the deficit will continue to grow, for under the law sugars and sugar cane will be admitted free on May 1, 1916, at great loss of revenue. There have been demands from Norman E.Mack and the Cincinnati Enquirer and from ivers other Democratic individuals and publications for a general revision of the Underwood act, in the interest primarily of greater revenue, and secondarily for the Protection of American industries. It is hardly likely that the Wilson administration will consent to a new Tariff law, but the evident need of it will favor Republican success in 1916.—Pittsburgh Press.

Basic Factors of Prosperity

The American farmer is metaphorically in clover. Last week's rise in wheat brings it close to the highest prices touched at the crest of the wave of war speculation.

In the Chicago market the price of wheat for delivery in May rose seven cents a bushel and, what is remarkable, contracts for delivery in months after the new crop will become available had an even sharper advance, the price for delivery in July rising thirteen cents a bushel.

Assuming that speculation plays a considerable part in this movement, the fact remains that the export demand continues heavy and that the farmers who raised the record breaking crop of last year are enjoying unexampled prosperity and are still in possession of very considerable quantity of the cereal.

The cotton planters of the South after all the depression that followed the outbreak of the war, checking exports of the staple, are also coming out in comfortable form. At the closing prices of Saturday last cotton was at the top notch of the season—nearly 10½ cents a pound for the spot commodity in this market and futures showing an advance of more than a dollar a bale for the week. This is a great change from the "seven cents a pound" days of last autumn, and the demand for export and from domestic spinners is active.

When the agricultural population is prosperous and the great transportation interests, which employ such a vast proportion of the workers, are given a chance to live the whole country must be prosperous—and these are the conditions today.—New York Herald.

THE PEOPLE OUGHT TO BE ABLE TO BUY SECURITIES

Adolph Lewisohn believes that the City of New York should borrow what money it needs directly from its citizens. Mr. Lewisohn has worked out a plan for this and submitted it to the present muncipal administration.

Briefly, the plan is one by means of which the people of New York, or for that matter of any city with the amount of enterprise necessary, may purchase the cit's securities "over the counter," thus investing their savings in the City's Credit, with the right to transform the scrip given in return into city bonds issued directly to them when their deposits amount to $100 or more.

It is evident that the Lewisohn plan would place at the disposal of a city an unlimited amount of capital. In the second place, it would give depositors a direct, personal interest in the city's good government, and thereby increase the care and intelligence with which they exercise the voter's franchise; and, moreover, it would prevent the realization of any such preposterous piece of humbuggery as is contained in the amendment to the Fulton charter which provides for the payment of salaries to a mayor and the common councilmen. Then the people might feel a real personal interest in their city government.

Another feature of the Lewisohn plan would offer to the people of small means a perfectly safe medium in which to invest their savings. Stimulus to saving is needed in New York as elsewhere, hence who can devise a better and safer plan than to give a stimulus to the man who already has the impulse toward saving, but who may not agree with the methods of certain depositories, or who may fear for the safety of earnings placed in private banks whose liability to fail is all too common.

The practical side of the Lewisohn plan in respect to saving is explained by the author in this way:

"It is unquestionably true that some who otherwise might save are spending now because they fear that if they take their money to the banks they may lose it, without getting any benefit from it whatever. Of course that impression is wholly false, but there are many savers in the city whose ideas of finance and banks must, of necessity, be crude and ill-informed. The impulse toward saving is phsychological. In many minds it takes little to upset and destroy it."

Continuing Mr. Lewisohn shows the advantages that may accrue by the adoption of his plan to the city of New York:

"It would have the right to use the funds upon deposit for all the purposes for which, under the exisiting law, it may use the proceeds of the sale of corporate stock or other city securities; it would pay only from 2½ per cent. to 3½ per cent. interest (the rate varying to suit conditions in he money market and elsewhere,) and while it would be the plan to redeem the scrip or repay the deposits upon demand, the city would retain the right to require, when necessary, from thirty to sixty days' notice of withdrawal."

"Such a plan not only would widen the market for the city's bonds and lessen the cost of borrowed money, but, by offering the citizen, through his City Government, a safe means of deposit at a fair interest rate, would very greatly increase his respect for and knowledge of that City Government. It would give him a new sense of responsibility for it and would give him a fresh and powerful motive for doing what might lay in his power toward safeguarding it from corruption and increasing its efficiency.'

It is a safe bet to make that were the people of Fulton investing their savings in City securities they would see to it that a mayor and board of aldermen were not placed upon a salary basis—that is, under the present form of government. The would, very likely, make sure that when salaries are paid to those officials they would get in return a fair proportion of efficiency. The city, too, would profit, as it would get the use of money at a lower rate of interest than is paid to the agencies whose privilege it is to gobble un municipal bonds at a high precentage.

CLEAN-UP WEEK

There was a time when the duties of the sanitary officer were confined in the main to the control of a few infectious diseases, and even in dealing with these his power was limited and the scope of his activity extremely restricted. But of late years his opportunities as well as his responsibilities have multiplied at an amazing rate, with a growing recognition of the nature of many ills and of the conditions that enable them to spread; a growing recognition, too, of the great truth that within certain obvious limits public health is a purchasable commodity.

The Commssioner of the State Department of Health has invited the presidents of all the local health boards to co-operate with him in promoting a general house-cleaning this week throughout the state. Thursday is to be celebrated as Clean-up Day, and certain general directions for its observance have been laid down for the instruction of all householders. In the first place, they are to clear their abodes from cellar to garret of all rubbish and dirt, to sweep them thorough with the windows wide open, to scrub the floors and woodwork and to clean and air all bedding, rugs, upholstery, etc. This work is described as the householder's duty toward himself, and next comes his duty toward his neighbor, which is but an extension of what has gone before, consisting in the removal of all rubbish and garbage, with proper care "that his premises are cleaned and placed in as sanitary and attractive a condition as possible." Finally, all are asked to join together in supporting the local health officers in their endeavors and lending a hand when necessary in cleaning up the districts in which they dwell.

When general action of this sort was first proposed it was regarded by many with derision. It was thought to be an idle and officious enterprise, an enterprise not properly within the sphere of sanitary administration and of very doubtful utility at best. Every one will remember, however, that the same doubts were common a few years before, when the Board of Health bgan to break the public of the habit of spitting. The relative success of that undertaking makes it plain that cleanliness can be taught in this way; that it is very largely a question of creating a new habit. Such comparatively futile exercises as swatting the fly can become a popular habit in a season; nor is there any reason why the far more effectual plan of rendering the haunts of the fly more or less uninhabitable should not be carried out in two or three seasons. This is a question of cleanliness, and until cleanliness comes to a popular habit the health officer must still labor in vain. One of his duties today is to create wholesome habits in the communities under his charge, and to this end the value of a clean-up week is sufficiently apparent.—New York Tribune.

A Subject Dwelt Upon Recently in a Sermon by the Rev. M. J. Peters of Zion Episcopal Church of This City

We who are members of His Body, the Church, are the channels of His Grace. The efficiency of a river depends largely upon its channel; if the river is to effectively cleanse and feed, its channel must be n kept open.

The Church in the past has not fully realized this fact. By its very nature the Grace of God cannot be confined or narrowed into a limited space. Grace is a very live, active and positive power. It is the active manifestation of God's love, and His love fills the universe. The river of God must constantly move on through the world until its waters have cleansed and revived the uttermost abodes of man; it refuses to be blocked or hindered. Its channel must be kept deep and broad, free from obstructions.

Human selfishness has often been a great barrier to its progress. Very early in the dawn of this era of Grace, very soon after the life-giving river sprang from the wounds of the Savior, and started its course from Calvary, an effort was made to block the stream and monopolize its blessings; but God thwarted it. When Peter would have confined the course of the River to the narrow limits of Palastine, God called Paul to remove the barrier, and the sacred stream was turned into Europe, and made glad the uttermost regions of the West.

And so the stream must move; it cannot be stopped. Grace ceases to be Grace the minute it becomes stagnant. It is not only Grace received that blesses us; its greatest blessing is in passing through us into the world around. Like the unstrained quality of mercy "it is twice blessed; it blesses him that gives and him that takes."

There is, sunk down among the hills of Palastine a lake that is filled with brackish, lifeless water. The streams from the surrounding hills pour themselves into its basin, but no streams drains its waters out. No fisherman sinks hian ets into the bosom of this lake, for it sustains no life. Nothing can live there. IIt is well-named the Dead Sea—dead, because it has no outlet; it gives out nothing to the world. The streams that flow into it are all bearers of refreshment and life, but alas, as soon as they reach the basin they stagnate, and there is no life in them.

Ah, my Christian friends, it is what we give out, not what we receive, that blesses us most. You Churchmen whom God has made channels of His River of Grace, see that the blessed stream does not stagnate in your hearts; it must move in order to impart its life.

The stream has been pouring into its channel for nearly two thousand years, and yet about one-half of the world that Christ died to redeem is still in heathen darkness, thirsting and panting for the Water of Life which God has placed in your hands to dispense and distribute. Sometimes in this enlightened age, we hear men say that they do not believe in foreign missions—that there is too much to be done at home. It is not the short and norrow rivers in nature that best serve the land. The greater their depth, and the more far reaching their lengths, the more they contribute to health and prosperity. It is especially so with the river of God. Look at the world of industry and commerce. The greatest and most thriving cities upon our map are those that give out most to the world. It is not what a community receives that makes it prosper, it is what it gives out to others. This is true in the world of commerce, and it is also true in Grace. One of the very strongest and most practical reasons for foreign missionary effort is for the sake of ourselves at home. The river of Grace must be kept moving onward, for the Grace of God ceases to be grace when it becomes self-centered or inactive. If not for the sake of Christ Who died to impart life, or for the sake of the heathen who are thirsting for the Water of Life, then for our very own sake, let us send the blessed river onward through the world.

But let us come nearer home. It is not only the remote places that are unwashed and unfed by God's river. Look to those at our very doors. There are thousands of souls right under the shadow of the tree of life, on the very banks of the River of God who are hungering and thirsting after righteousness. If we are worthy channels of Divine Grace, we must pour its waters into the byways of life; we must broaden the stream until it flows into the lanes and alleys of our community, to uplife those who, like the impotent man beside the Pool of Bethesda, are crying oht for the hand of sympathy ann pity to lead them down to the healing waters.

Wohld that we cohld recover entirely from that-selfish idea of religion that has hindered the progress of the river of Grace for so long. Both the Church and the world have suffered much from that time-worn idea that Grace is a thing entirely between the individual and his God. That we have but to throw ourselves into the river and drift serenly on to heafen has been a popular, but a very erroneous idea of Christianity. The Church of God is not as some evangelical preachers have pictured it, a human organization with a divine mission. It is the reverse—the church is a divine institution with a human mission. The very substance of our faith is that the Son of God became the son of Man in order that the sons of men might become the sons of God. The Church's mission is a human mission; the Master's parting charge is, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

We are to reach God ourselves through the path of service to the world. Let us throw ourselves then into the River of Grace, not with the selffish hope of drifting to heaven, but be borne on by the stream through the world of men gathering others are we go. It is he that loses hi life in service that shall find it in blessing.

God's Grace flows downward from its divine source, not upward, and we, its medium must convey it over the path of service to its uttermost goal. When God begon His work of reconcilliation, what was His first step? Love left heaven and descended to earth, became incarnate, lived and died to import life to others. All this accomplished, He ascended again to the throne of the Father. So God's Grace flowa downward from heaven to men on earth through the divinely oppointed medium—the channe of His church.

The cry of the world today is for a more effective channel for the healing waters of the River of Life. May it be our effort as churchman to improve, broaden, and extend the channel through which God pours His blessings. Let it be our constant effort and prayer that God's church may diligently prepare the way for His River of Grace—that every mountain of pride may be brought low, every valley of indolence and selfishness failed, that the crooked places may be made straight and the rough places smooth, that through the desert places of life, a highway may be made for the celansing and life-giving River of God.

Churmen, members of Xts. mystical body.

You Daughters of the King who are assembled here this morning have a glorious mission before you. As an organization in God's church, you are the channel of one of the streams of that River that is making glad the City of God. Let your lives abound in prayer and service for those sound the keynote of success in the Master's work. His ministry in the flesh abounded in these. His soul all went up to heaven in prayer ond out into the world in loving service. Divine Grace moves surely upon the wings of prayer and in the path of service. Let your movtive and aim be that of bearing others onward down the stream into the river of God's Holy Church—to show to others the soul-cleansing and refreshing power of the Sacraments; to enlarge the City of God and extend the influence of God's River of Groce. May God bless and prosper you in your work. May you grow in grace and strengthen many others in exercising your efforts in His name and for His sake.

It is the highest privilege and the greatest responsibility of this life that God has made us the medium for conveying His richest blessings to men in the world that he died to redeem. I pray that all churchmen may rise to a sense of that obligation and privilege. We hear much today about the partual paralysis of the Church, that it is losing its power in the world. I do not believe it. I believe that the Christian Church is more effective today than it has been for years past, and yet it is true that She is not making the fullest use of Her power. The reason is that men and women have not appreciated the grave responsibility and blessed privilege that comes with being follow-workers with Christ in the work of saving the world which He has redeemed. The program of our religion is impeded with too much of self. Tink of yourselves not as recepticles made to be filled with God's blessings. Life is not a mere process of receiving, it is mainly a process of giving. It is receiving in order that we may give or giving in order that we might receive more. We are not mere recepticles but channels of God's grace. It blesses us only when it blesses the world through us.

Each vital member of God's Church is the channel of end of the streams of that River of Grace that is making glad the City of God. Let our lives abound in prayer and service for these sound the keynote of success in the Master's work. His ministry here in the flesh abounded in these, and He is our pattern. His Soul always went up to Heaven in prayer and out into the world in service. Let your chief motive in this life be that of leading others down to the stream into the River of God's Holy Church—to show to others the soul-cleansing and refreshing power of the sacraments—to enlarge the City of God and extend the influence of His River of Grace.

How a Market Helps a Town

Oklahoma City Is Solving the High Cost of Living Problem and "Boosting" the Community at the Same Time

By W. B. MOORE

Secretary-Manager, Oklahoma City Chamber of Commerce.

Oklahoma City is the most marvellous example of city building in the history of the civilized world. Twenty-three years ago its site was a rolling prairie roamed by wild Indian tribes and herds of buffalo and cattle. Today its many skscrapers, public buildings and hotels rear their tops in the cloudless skies. Parks and playgrounds, miles of paved srreets, metropolitan street and interurban railway systems, beautiful homes and thrifty commercial houses are some of the many factors making this city one of the most prosperous and progressive in the nation. From a population of 10,000 in 1900 its increase has been so remarkable, that at the present writing it is estimated that not less than 72,000 people are housed within its borders.

In the haste and mad rush of its own growth very little, if any, thought was given to the development of the surrounding territory with a view of making it provide the food supply required by the people of Oklahoma City. The people were absolutely dependent on supplies from other states—the price of food products was exceptionally high—and money so spent, instead of being retained in the city and expended with our own people, was going out to the support of people in other sections. While much of the surrounding country was under cultivation, no incentive existed for the production of garden truck or table supplies. This condition has, however, now been changed.

A city, to make the most of its many advantages, must develop its surrounding country and not be dependent upon othe sections or states. It was necessary for Oklahoma City to work out its own salvation. While progressing along other lines it had given no thought to the need of a local market to supply the demands of its many people. Garden truck was being raised for which there was no sale. The growers were not organized. The local merchants and commission men bought and sold products shipped in, and in most instances the demand exceeded the supply. Many five and ten acre tracts adjacent to the city were lying uncultivated, merely waiting for the institution of some plan whereby the producers could find a ready market for their products.

The Retailers' Association and the Chamber of Commerce were the first to recognize the benefits that would accrue from the establishment of a city market. Committees were appointed, signatures secured to petitions and the City Commissioners, operating under the commission form of government, immediately enacted the necessary ordinances.

On Saturday, May 21, 1912, the market was opened. California Avenue, one of the widest thoroughfares in the business district, for two squares, was set aside as the market place. The first day 80 stalls were occupied and buyers came in crowds. The market rapidly increased, both in the number of stalls and of buyers, until on August 10th, 318 stalls were in use, the market had been extended one square farther and was crowded with people.

The success of the street market clearly indicated the need of a market house, wherein could be displayed meats, fish, butter, eggs, chickens, milk and other products of like nature. The truck gardeners and producers formed themselves into an association and leased a suitable building, which is now being made ready for this purpose, to contain about 200 stalls. The advent of the market has decreased living expenses 50 per cent. as indicated by a comparison of current prices with those of a year ago. In every instance present prices are from 25 to 75 per cent. lower.

The amount of garden truck raised in 1912 was ten times greater than in 1911. This created an excess supply, which it was necessary to dispose of elsewhere. Prior to the advent of the city market, with the exception of a few carloads of watermelons, cantaloupes and peaches, not a single article produced in or about Oklahoma City had been shipped outside. The market has made Oklahoma City a concentrating and distributing point for markets in other cities in other states. Several cars of sweet corn, tomatoes, beets and cabbage have been shipped out to northern and eastern cities. This feature is just in its infancy. It is believed that next year and succeeding years will see hundreds of cars of products from the territory surrounding Oklahoma City shipped to many of the consuming points in the nation.

The retail stores are receiving many benefits. Business on market mornings has increased greatly—the money spent by the people on the city market is in turn spent by the truck growers with the local merchants. It is a co-operative proposition that is bringing the greatest good to the community.

The establishment and success of the market has attracted the attention of other cities in the state and surrounding country. Delegates from Tulsa, Enid, Muskogee, Okla., and Ft. Smith, Ark., have visited the market and on returning to their respective communities begun agitating similar action. Even the most skeptical are now convinced that it is the greatest movement that Oklahoma City has ever undertaken toward its upbuilding and development.

The market has drawn attention to opportunities afforded settlers to locate on five and ten acre tracts adjacent to the city, where conditions for truck growing are unlike those in the northern and eastern states. Around Oklahoma City a truck grower can produce big crops ten months in the year without the need of a hothouse, and during the other two months it is only necessary to afford slight protection for the crops.

POPULAR MECHANICS

Mounting Largest Telescope.

The last annual report of the Mount Wilson observatory states that all the larger parts of the mounting for the 100 inch reflector, which will be much the largest telescope in the world, will probably be assembled at the Fore River shops, where they have been constructed, in time to permit shipment to Pasadena via the Panama canal early this year, says the Scientific American. Meanwhile the smaller parts and accessories have been under construction at the observatory. The driving clock, which is nearly completed, required more than half a ton of bronze castings and nearly a ton and a half of iron castings, in addition to the two ton driving weight. The circular steel building for this instrument is complete up to the rails which are to carry the dome. The latter has been built in Chicago and is about finished. The building and dome will probably be completed next summer so that the mounting may be set on the pier in the autumn. Meanwhile good progress has been made with the capital task of grinding and figuring the great mirror.

The Pigment Lithopone.

Lithopone is produced by mixing solutions of zinc sulphate and barium sulphide. The resulting precipitate consists of zinc sulphide and barium sulphate. It is filtered off, heated to a high temperature and dropped into water, whereby it is thoroughly disintegrated. It is washed and filtered again, dried and ground. All of these operations require a good deal of care and attention to produce a satisfactory pigment. Lithopone is very stable and is probably the whitest pigment known, being very widely used in high grade enamels. Exposed to light and dampness it darkens, but will often regain its whiteness again. It is therefore not suited to outside use by itself, but needs to have a large amount of some stable pigment combined with it.—Engineering Magazine.

Improved Automobile Sod Pan.

The usual type of sod pan used in automobile construction is fastened to the frame side members of the car and passes under the engine crank case, as shown by the full line in the sketch, says Popular Mechanics. This is not only a very heavy and expensive construction, but the pan often jars loose and must be removed from the chassis when being cleaned. The sod pan substituted is shown by the dotted lines and simply consists of metal sheets, fastened on one side to the flange of the lower crank case and on the other to the frame side members of the chassis. This construction is cheap, very light and can easily be cleaned. The lower part of the crank case is exposed, but the dirt collected on it can be easily removed without disturbing the sod pan.

New Telltale Spark Plug.

A novel type of spark plug for internal combustion engines has been invented by a British company, says the Scientific American. The plug has a tubular central electrode, which carries a block of quartz serving the purpose of a window through which one can observe the "color" of the explosion in the combustion chamber. A dark purple spark shows the mixture to be correct; a light blue or white explosion signifies that it is too weak, while a red color indicates too rich a mixture. By simply detaching the quartz "window" and substituting a milled nut the plug is transformed into a "priming" plug, through which gasoline can be injected directly into the combustion chamber.

Fish Oil in Paints.

Menhaden, or fish oil, is used in special paints which are required to stand heat and light, as on smokestacks. Such a paint is considerably more expensive than a linseed oil paint, so it can be seen that menhaden oil is a valuable aid and not an adulterant, as often claimed. Proper treatment of the oil is very expensive, as the loss by evaporation is large and certain volatile products are formed which are very offensive to the workmen. Mixed with linseed oil it is used to some extent for making waterproof paints for various purposes and seems to give good satisfaction.—Engineering Magazine.

Inflation of Automobile Tires.

It is no doubt a fact that more tires are ruined through under inflation than from all other causes combined, says Automobile Dealer. If one would keep his tires inflated to a pressure of eighteen or twenty pounds to every inch of cross section of the tire he would be quite free from blowouts. Even during the hot weather this pressure should be maintained, as it has been conclusively proved that the extra pressure caused by friction is so small it need not be considered. But care must be taken to see that the tubes are of the best quality, for in reality the tube is the "heart" of the tire.

The Fulton Evening Times

"The Paper of Results"

Despite the unsettled local business conditions, the period between the dates of April 1 to 17, there were handled in the columns of Fulton's daily medium of exchange, a grand total of 2046.5 inches of display advertising. These figures do not include Readers, Miscellaneous Wants, Agency, Legal, and other Special Advertising. But does include exclusively, the Advertising of Local or Fulton Merchants.

FROM APRIL 12 TO 17

there were handled in the columns of The Fulton Evening Times, 748.5 inches of Display Advertising, all of which means this: That for the period of April 1 to 12 the daily average was 133.19 inches; That for the second period or between April 12 to 17 the daily average was 124.66 inches.

These figures are conclusive evidence that The Fulton Evening Times holds a front place as an Advertising Medium that cannot be displaced by any out-of-town publication.

SUMMING UP

ANNUAL MEETING HELD

Co-operative Industrial Education Chief Topic of Discussion.

The annual meeting of the Current Events Club was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Marvin, E. Broadway, last night. Rev. Charles Olmstead was elected president; E. J. Penfield, vice-president, and Prof. MacClure, secretary-treasurer.

A letter was read from Dr. C. C. Teall, a member of the club, who since he left Fulton has crossed the Pacific ocean three times.

He related many interesting experiences from Samoa, Hawaii, and New Zealand. The attitude of New Zealand toward the United States is highly amusing as described by Dr. Teall.

Prof. Lawton of the manual training department led a discussion on industrial education taken from the co-operative standpoint.

A general plan for next year's program was outlined. The year's work as reviewed by the club was both of pleasure and profit to the members.

Catching The Very Spirit of Spring

IT'S fresh blown sweetness, it's airy lightness---all its grace and charm and expressing it in wool and silk and buttons is no easy task. But it was no task for the artist designers who create PRINTZESS styles. They had the spirit that makes such things easy and the ability to carry out their ideas---that's why this suit brings to you the very thought of fresh and clear Spring days---that why PRINTZESS suits this season have captivated us. Be sure to come in and see them---you'll be delighted, too.

Correct Clothes for Women

ON THE RIALTO

The Cannery bill is coming in for a warm reception from the newspapers, to say the least. The possibility of women working 72 hours a week, whether they want to or not (for the backers of the bill claim that the women want to work 72 hours) has aroused some of the best columnists in the country to action. Franklin P. Adams, in the New York Tribune, hands out some very good advice to Milady of the Cannery. Just a few of them are recounted here, as follows:—

"Walk to the factory if possible, if not, avoid crowded street cars. Automobiles are cheaper than they once were; and most factories have parking space. Work not too fast; hurry kills. A light luncheon is advisable; plenty of fresh vegetables will sustain you. Lie down for an hour before dinner, relaxing utterly. Dinner may be more elaborate, if desired, than luncheon and breakfast. Lamb, chicken and beefsteak are all good. The evening may be given over to reading or dancing, but you should be in bed by eight, in order to get eight hours of sound, refreshing sleep. Have a sleeping porch; or, if that be impossible, do not sleep more than one in a room. Outdoor exercise is important, too; so, for Sundays and slack times, join some good country club and play golf."

There is much speculation in political circles as to the extent Mr. Barnes will be enriched by his libel suit against Colonel Roosevelt, which is now holding the boards in Syracuse. "Teddy" came off with six cents in cash and a million dollars worth of advertising, in his Michigan libel suit when he was on the offensive. He should have recommended his attorney in the Michigan affair to Mr. Barnes, in the hope that the results would be about the same. At any rate, Syracuse is on the qui vive at present, and the hotels are doing a rattling business.

ROUND ABOUT

Administration officials are worried over the receipt of what is understood to be confirmation of the defeat of General Villa by General Obregon. Villa's defeat was not expected, and reports received in Washington indicated that he and his army are in a precarious condition. Unless he is able to retrieve his losses within the next fortnight it is believed Carranza will gain the upper hand in Mexico and take hold of the reins of government, which is not to the liking of the administration.

More than one case has come to light in England of large sums made by contractors at the expense of the Government, and it is predicted that many scandals will be disclosed after the war, for with the number and size of the contracts, the Government has found it impossible to guar against fraud.

Here is another illustration of civilization as interpreted down in Georgia. Near Valdosta in that State a negro, who was in jail on charge of stealing a piece of meat from the smokeroom of a clergyman, was taken out by a mob, tied to a tree and riddled with bullets. He denied that he stole the meat. There were no police or officials on duty at the jail.

The Appellate Division in New York upheld the decision of Justice Page of the Supreme Court, recommitting Harry K. Thaw to Matteawan under the original commitment issued by Justice Dowling. The decision of Justice Page was given after Thaw had been freed of the charge of conspiracy in escaping from the Matteawan institution, for trail of which he was brought back to New Yorw from New Hampshire. Only one strand now remains of the legal web wozen about Thaw to keep him out of the asylum, this being the writ of habeas corpus, the purpose of which is to obtain a jury trial as to his sanity. This writ is returnable for argument before Justice Hendrick, in the Supreme Court, on Monday next.

After posing as his own brother for 27 years, Orville E. Collins, supposed to have been dead for that length of time, in Milwaukee yesterday was ordered to appear before Jude Eschweiler and show cause why he should not pay back alimony to Mrs. Bertha Collins. Mrs. Collins secured a divorce in 1888 and was granted alimony at the rate of $20 a month, which for the period of Collin's absence amounts to $6,460. Recently Mrs. Collins met a man who claimed to be her late husband's brother. Investigation proved him to be her husband and Collins confessed.

CLAIMS HEARING

Court Will Sit in Syracuse Monday to Discuss Barge Canal Damages

Oswego, Tuesday—Nine Oswego and Fulton claims aggregating $2,389,546.48 are scheduled to be heard by the Court of Claims to sit in Syracuse on Monday next. The claims on the calendar number 300 and the amount asked from the State for alleged confiscation of property and destruction of water rights runs into many millions. The Oswego county cases noted for trial are as follows:

Mohawk Manufacturing Co., $1,000 asked. L. C. Rowe attorney.

Frederick A. Gage, Fulton, $203,034.35 asked. Gannon, Spencer and Michell, attorneys.

Mohawk Manufacturing Co., $64,119.96 asked. L. C. Rowe attorney.

People's Gas and Electric Co., $176,691.10 asked. George N. Burt, attorney.

People's Gas and Electric Light Co. $40,000 asked. George N. Burt attorney.

Most of the claims are for destruction of water power. Thhe People's Gas and Electric Light Company's claim of $176,691.01 is for the destruction of the old Citizens' Lighting Company plant, and their claim for $40,000 is made in case a total destruction claim is not allowed, as recurring claim made each year as the estimated loss.

Mr. Sherburne alleges that while he operated the Mohawk plant the water was removed from the canal, depriving him of water power.

The claim of Charles R. Lee, Fulton, for $3,500 is for the property in Fulton known as Yelberton Island, which was appropriated by the State. The Mohawk Manufacturing Company's claims and the others are for land and water rights.

County Clerk's Office Experiences Heavy Increase of Tronsactions

Yesterday's Oswego Times says: The volume of business at the County Clerk's office has shown a gradual increase since March 1, and is now at its height. No one day's business has been excessively large but each day there is considerably more than the average of business. The deeds and transfers of property are quite numerous, but the mortgages, satisfaction of mortgages and discharges of mortgages exceed the deeds in number. Among the deeds filed today were the following:

W. D. Maxam to Grover Cleman, property in New Haven $2,000.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

By Frederic T. Cardoze

Albany, April 20.—State Commissioner of Education John H. Finley is greatly concerned over the conditions of the rural schools of the State. He says that a serious problem is presented by them in that the trend of population and wealth to the cities, the appeal of city life even to those who remain in the country and the consequent inadequacy of financial support and lack of community spirit in many districts have caused him to call the attention of the legislature to the necessity for legislation which will better conditions.

Dr. Finley calls attention to the fact that in half of the elementary schools of the State the average attendance is less than ten pupils. There are over eleven thousand elementary schools in the State, many of which consist of but one room.

"The State contributes from $125 to $200 each to these schools," says Dr. Finley, 'whatever the average attendance, and it has therefore a concern in the economic aspect of the problem; but this is of far less importance than the educational and social significance of the statistics in our possession concerning the lack of pupils, which give intimation of a condition more needful of attention than that of overcrowding in other parts of the State."

Dr. Finley lays stress upon the fact that the task of raising the money for school purposes which falls upon the rural school districts in part, is a sacrifice in many instances. He says that the State has attempted to reduce the tax by its annual apportionments, making the allotments somewhat larger for the districts of low valuation than for those of high valuation. The effort has bnot been sufficient, he maintains to bring about anythin like adequate school provisions in some of the districts, or to equalize the disparities of the burden. He says in addition that it is not anticipated that the State is ready to make any immediate increase of its appropriation for such equalization purposes.

According to Dr. Finley two courses are open, the consolidation of districts and transportation of pupils where necessary; the other is the creation of a larger local unit of taxation and consequently of administration.

"As the first," continues Dr. Finley, "voluntary consolidation has proceeded slowly. In recent years the legislature has sought to encourage the movement and has authorized consolidation by district superintendents; but, while the educational results promise to be wholesome, even under this plan progress is made only in spots and with difficulty. If there could be a redistricting of the entire State for school purposes, taking natural and social centeres as the school centers, the problem, I believe, would be solved."

It is suggested by Dr. Finley that the local area of taxation and administration be widened, so that the burden may be more equitably distributed and a better school provision more generally maintained without diminishing local initiative or responsibility or increasing State provision or control.

Even though the legislature should fail to act upon the plan as outlined this year—a thing which appears most improbable at this stage of the session. Dr. Finley believes that it should be given serious thought and transmitted to the residents of the various school districts.

"Just as the schools of our cities are now managed as a whole by the several cities," adds Dr. Finley, "it should be possible for each township as a whole to make each school a more vital force in the large area ond bring it closer to the daily life of the community it serves."

SURROGATE'S COURT

Large Amount of Business Transacted Yesterday Before Surrogate Miller

Letters of administration were issued yesterday by Surrogate Miller to two persons on the estate of Andrew Stamm, late of Williamstown. Mr. Stamm died a short time ago and last week a petition for letters was filed by his son, Andrew J. Stamm of Ellisburg, Jefferson county. A petition was filed today by Theodore M. Stamm of Syracuse, through Attorney Horace A. Stone of thot city. Judge Miller decided that as both the sons were entitled to letters he would issue them to both and permit the administration of the estate in this manner. Two sisters will also share in the estate but under the law sons are entitled to first privilege in estates where there is no will. Value of estate $2,100.

A report of the transfer tax appraisal of the estate of Melissa Serviss, late of Oswego, was filed and shows the value of personal estate to have been $22(325.72 and real estate -2,-625, making a total of $24,950.72. The expenses and debts amounted to $4,-256.05 and the net estate; $21,704.67. There was much litigation over the estate, the nearest relatives being nephews and neices. One niece claimed to have been given a large Mrs. Serviss just prior to her death. The matters have however, been amicably adjusted. The estate has been distributed as follows:

Washington Elmer, Elvina Johnston, Edaline Reed, Alice Lloyd, each $2,170.46; William Elmer, Hattie Petris, Nellie E. Joslyn, Nettie E. Slight, each $1,085.23; Ada L. Pullen, Frank Glass, F. J. Glassford, $743.49; W. H. H. Elmer, $1,085.23; Alice Graham, $2,170.46; Joseph Ackerman, Minnie Phillips and William Phillips, $723.49.

A petition for letters of administration on the estate of George A. Taylor, late of Volney, was filed by Mary A. Howard, a daughter, and letters issued to her husband, Bernard L. Howard. The estate is valued at $8,000.

A petition for letters of administration on the estate of Helen M. Wimple, late of Sandy Creek, was filed by a stepson and cousin, Calvin J. Wimple of New York. The next of kin are cousins and the value of the estate is $2,000 real and $3,000 personal.

A petition for letters of probate on the estate of Lois Alma Van Buren, late of Fulton, was filed by her son and sole legatee, David E. The estate is valued at $3,000, ond, except for a bequest of $50 to Mt. Adnah cemetery and a direction for placing a marker on the grave, is left to the son.

Miss Eva Schermerhorn is the petitioner for the probate of the will of her father, Almond Schermerhorn, who died here in March, 1914. Mrs. Thedicoa Schermerhorn, widow of testatrix, is made the legatee but she has since died and the estate goes to Miss Schermerhorn as alternative legatee. The estate is valued at $2,-600 real and $200 personal.

Letters of administration were issued to Henry Griesmyer of Constantia on the estate of his father, John Griesmyer. The value is $200.

A hearing was held in the objections to the accounting of George L. Pratt, as executor of the estate of John W. Pratt. Guy Pratt is making the objections.

A certificate was received from the County Clerk's office, made by Louis A. Coulter, showing that the transfer of the McCriskin case from Surrogate's Court to Supreme Court had never been officially filed in the County Clerk's office.

Letters of administration in the estate of John W. Hutchinson, late of Oswego Town, were filed by Cora B. Hutchinson. The estate is valued at $6,000.

GLYNN ECONOMY FILLS ASYLUMS

State Must Now Provide $1,000,000 for Care of Insane, Says Expert

At least $1,000,000 must be provided by the Legislature this year properly to care for the insane, because the Glynn administration failed to do its duty in this respect, according to a statement issued in behalf of the State Charities Aid Association by George R. Canfield, chairman of the Committee on the Insane, and by Homer Folks, secretary. Much as many people would like to see a direct tox avoided, says the statement, the association feels impelled to put the needs of the insane clearly before the public.

"The annual net increase of insane persons averages 800," reads the document. "The cost of suitable care for these patients is about $1,000 a bed. Therefore it is necessary for the state to appropriate about $800,000 each year for new buildings, until the increase in numbers can be brought under control, unless it is steadily to fall behind in meeting the need.

"This plain and obvious duty, which for several years had been met, was shirked by the Glynn administration.

"Not one cent was appropriated in 1914 fornew buildings for the insane. An insufficient sum was given for repoirs on buildings erected fifty years ago which accommodate 35,000 persons and all their caretakers.

"Overcrowding in state hospitals for the insane amounted to 5,584 on October1, 1913; it increased to 6,2553 by September 1, 1914, and this overcrowding cannot be equally distributed throughout the state hospital system because a mojority of the patients come from New York City and the majority of hospital beds are in up-state institutions.

"To cover up their neglect of duty the Department of Efficiency and Economy stated last summer that increased accommodations could be had at slight expense—that two story non-fireproof buildings could be converted into three story partly fireproof buildings at slight expense and their capacity doubled. This failed to produce any new beds for the insane."

The statement continues that friends and relatives of the patients rightly and strenuously object to their being sent away where they cannot be visited; that, as a result, the state hospital on Ward's Island is overcrowded to the extent of 33 per cent.

"Pending bills authorize appropriations for new buildings and repairs amounting to about $1,400,000. This would measurobly provide for the actual increase last year and this year. Every cent of it is urgently should be charged back to the deficit of last year.

"Letchworth Village, the one big state institution for dealing with the feeble-minded, now under construction, received no new appropriation under Governor Glynn, and he vetoed a re-appropriation of several hundred thousand dollars which the institution could not spend because of delays in the state architect's office, and which could have been expended during the current year."

200 LEAD BALLS IN EACH SHRAPNEL

Watertown, Tuesday — From now on the work of fitting up the island plant of the New York Air Brake Company for the manufacture of the shrapnel used in loading the shrapnel shells used by the Russians, will be rushed. A little of the machinery has already been received, but more is expected during the week, and today work in cleaning out the old offices in the main building of the island plant preparatory to getting them in shape for use, was started.

A large amount of the shrapnel to be made will be of the 10-pound type, which fits a gun with o 3.3 inch bore. There will also be much of the 15-pound shrapnel for three inches guns. The shrapnel consists of a steel case containing a number of lead balls imbeded in rosin. The powder charge that impels the shrapnel from the gun is contained in the brass carrtridge case. Neither the bursting charge nor the fuse which regulates the explosion of the shrapnel after it leaves the gun will be added until they have been received on the other side of the Atlantic.

Special lathes and tooling machinery are needed in the manufacture of shrapnel, and these have been ordered. It is said that there will be about 200 lead balls in the steel shrapnel case which must be accurately made in order to fit the cartridge case, and the bore of the gun properly to give the best rsults.

True to His Pledges

Gov. Whitman in taking office pledged himself to ten specific projects. They were reform of the civil service; establishment of a state department of taxation; transfer of the control of the conservation department from a three-headed commission to a single headed commission; the same thanfor of control of the highway department; reorganization of the board of claims; reduction from three to one in the number of state superintendents of elelctions; the abolition of county election commissioners except in urban communities; abolition of the office of state fire marshal; abolition of the department of efficiency and economy; revision of the state pay roll; repassage of the woman suffrage constitutional amendment. Of these pledges seven have already been redeemed, two, are still pending and one has been abandoned. The abanoned one is the transfer of the control of the highway department from a single-headed to a three-headed commission, which was found unnecessary for good administration. The two which are pending refer to the election law and will probably be passed upon by the legislature this week. The revision of the state pay roll is in charge of a senate committee, but that is not a matter which con be concluded in a week or a month, and the civil service committee of the senate proposes to make a thorough investigation of this subject this summer to serve as a basis for revision downward. Governor Whitman is redeeming his pledges notwithstanding the criticism heaped upon him for carrying out his announced policy, which when he announced it was pronounced by these same critics to be a most excellent policy.—Watertown Times.

FOREST NOTES

From State College of Forestry at Syracuse

In 1850 New York led in the production of lumber among the states of the Union. In 1915 she stands 26th among the states in the production of lumber. At the same time, New York is today the greatest user of the products of the forest among the states of the Union. By careful estimate The State College of Forestry at Syracuse finds that the State is using 2,000,000,000 feet of lumber annually. This is equal to a board walk 1000 feet wide, one inch thick, extending along the New York Central tracks from Syracuse to New York City and half way back. Nearly three-quarters of the wood and timber used in the State is brought in from outside the State at an expense of nearly $70,000,000. With the forest lands of the State properly used this large amount could not only be retained in the State but New York would eventually be an export State.

The wood-using industries of the State of New York employ over 134,000 men. This means that over 600,000 people in the State of New York are dependent upon the business of logging, lumbering and wood utilization in the State . It has been estimated by The College of Forestry that the capital involved in the wood-using industries of the State is approximately $500,000,000. This showss that the business of using the forest and the products of the forest in the State of New York is one of our greatest industries.

The industries dependent upon the utilization of the forests of the State are among the oldest in the State. The first sawmill in the State was built at New York by the Dutch West India Company in 1623. The first steam sawmill in the State was built at Newark Valley, Tioga County, in 1830. The first gang sawmill in the State was built at Fort Edward about 1840. In 1865 there were 3,963 sawmills in the State of New York and three-quarters of them cut less than 100,000 board feet annually. Today a modern band mill will cut about 35,000,000 bd. ft. annually.

The earliest lumbermen of the State of New York did not utilize the excellent river facilities of the State for the transportation of logs. They located their mills in the heart of the timber and then cut circles about them. When the timber became exhausted close to the mill they moved the mill to more timber. The rirver courses were first used to get the product of the mill to the market rather than getting the logs to the mill. Not until after 1810 was log driving practiced on any of the rivers of the State. The Fox Brothers, who were the pioneer loggers of New York State, floated the first logs on the upper Hudson in 1813. Their example was followed quickly and for 75 years the great sawmills at Glens Falls, Fort Edward and elsewhere obtained their stock in this way.

The Fox Brothers were the first loggers on any commercial scale in New York State. They had a mill in Warren County and originated the idea of floating the logs to the mill instead of moving the mill to the logs. Before the time of railroads and when there were few canals the product of the mills was rafted to market. This system of rafting lumber to the market began about 1785. Jesse Dickman ran the first raft down the west branch of the Delaware River. This raft was floated clear down to Philadelphia.

HARD EARNED DOLLARS

A Negro Chore Woman Saves and Gives $1,000 Toward Higher Education

In the Interesting People department of the May American Magazine appears an account of Mrs. Dismukes a negro laundress in Fisk University at Nashville, Tennessee, who, out of her small means, has given a thousand dollars toward a music building for Fisk University. Forty-nine other thousands are necessary if the building is to be realized, but Mrs. Dismukes has infinite faith that they will be forth-coming. Following is an extract from thhe account of what this wamon has done. The article was written by the late Dr. George A. Gates, the late president of Fisk University:

"Her story is almost too sacred to put into print. She felt and feels that all of life that is worth while she owes to Fisk Uunversity and what it has revealed to her of the spirit of highminded and generous men and women. She has felt that all she could do was too little in return for what she has received. So this hard-working, faithful and efficient negro woman has kept her home, her husband maintaining it with a man's self-respect. She meantime has done her full work and borne her full responsibility in her place in the institution. For the past four years she has turned back her monthly salary check into the institution, until just now she has completed her longlcherished plan to give one thousand dollars as the beginning of a fund for a music building on our campus.

"On the day that the last twenty-five dollars was turned into the school treasury, completing the thousand, Mrs. Dismukes declared that she wouldn't exchange places with anyone, that she was the happiest womon in the world.

There Is a Reason

Why you should use Cream Dove Shortening: First, because it is made of high grade Oils, Vegetable and Beef. Second, because it is free from unpleasant odor and smoke that is found in cooking fats. Third, because it is better than butter for cooking. Fourth, because is more wholesome than hog fat or compounds that have hog sterine in them. Fifth, because it is more economical, as two pounds go as far as three pounds of any other. Sixth, because it has been analyzed by Prof. L. B. Allen of the Westfield Labratories of Westfield, Mass. Seventh, because it is manufactured in sanitary factory under government inspection.

HUERTA DENIES HE SLEW MADERO

Defends Himself in Statement to American People.

LEAVES VERDICT TO HISTORY

Blames Obstacles Raised in This Country Against Him, but Says He Foresees Coming of Strong, Honest Man Who Will Make Mexico the Paradise It Deserves to Be.

In his statement to the American people, given out in New York city, General Huerta, the ex-dictator of Mexico, denies on his honor as a soldier that he killed President Madero and makes his first public essay to justify his government which was broken up by the stand taken against it by President Wilson.

After describing the Maderist revolution, he said:

"With the help of the national treasury and the bayonets of the bandits Mr. Madero was elected president by an astonishing majority of votes. Mr. Madero was the only candidate.

"With anxiety the people expected the fulfillment of all the promises made by Mr. Madero. Everybody knows, especially Mexicans, that not a single one of his promises was kept.

"The Madero administration annihilated our national union, destroyed the credit of our republic, prostituted the discipline of our army and sowed seeds of anarchy.

"After fifteen months of Mr. Madero's ill administration a portion of the patriotic Mexican army revolted. For ten days the streets of the city of Mexico ran with blood. Then some heads of the army, incited by our senators to put an end to that anguished situation, placed Mr. Madero under arrest. Mr. Madero, while being conducted to the penitentiary, died an unnatural death.

"Time Will Acquit Me."

"In the opinion of some of the public in this country I am blamed as having taken part in executing him. I never have tried to shirk any responsibilities, and anything I ever did was done openly. I am man enough to stand by what I do. I know I am not to blame for the death of Mr. Madero. Time and history will do me justice.

"Far be it from my mind to make a eulogy of my own administration. In the future history will do it, telling all the bad and also the good. But I must say that during my administration all the law abiding citizens of my republic, as well as all foreigners resident there until the very last moment of my command, were fully protected.

"When I took charge of the administration our treasury was empty. In order not to ruin the country I struggled along the best I could, but I did not adopt any drastic measures. I did not print any bogus money. I never called on anybody for forcible loans. Not a single banking institution went to the wall during my administration. They all paid dividends. Not a single business house shut its doors. You see, I tried to build up; I did not want to destroy.

"Our army was demoralized. In a brief time I organized an army of 150,000 men, but poorly armed on account of the embargo on arms from this country. I had my plans laid out for an army of 350,000 men, but I lacked the time to accomplish my work. Besides, circumstances and facts that are known to the American people and to the whole world hindered me from pacifying my country.

"I have always had and have proved my great admiration and respect for the American people. I have always tried to be fair in my judgment.

America Not Fair to Him.

"The heads of your administration were not fair to Mexico, but I believe they were misled by false statements. Besides, there is quite a difference between theory and facts. If your administrators had only been in Mexico for thirty days they would have changed their theoretical erroneous ideas.

"But I would rather not discuss this subject too deeply. It is a discourtesy, you know, for a foreigner to criticise heads of a nation whose hospitality he enjoys.

"It was then said that my humble person was the cause of the reigning conditions in my country. I resigned because I thought by so doing to benefit my country. I left the presidency voluntarily. Nobody took it away from me.

"My Indian honest blood boils when I think of the unfortunate conditions existing in my poor country and when I think that a good, clean press like the American is led by false and artificial tricks to defend a cause which is nothing more than one of vandalism.

"But never mind. I have hopes. My Mexico is young. My Mexico has plenty of life in it. My country cannot be conquered. Mexico will be saved by a Mexican—by a strong Mexican, not by a bandit, not by a man that will kill for the sake of money or dastardly passion, but by a Mexican who will act as a surgeon, and then Mexico in a short time will revive and be the paradise on earth it deserves to be.

"Where is the man? Who is the man? When will the man appear? I do not know."

WOUNDED IN WAR SAVED BY SCIENCE

Only 3 Per Cent Now Die of Their Injuries.

ONE-FIFTH OF FORMER RATE

Modern Surgery, Leaving Much to Nature and Antiseptic Treatment, and the Wonderful Military Medical Organization Amazingly Lessen Mortality in European Conflict.

In the midst of the awful slaughter which has taken place, probably some 5,000,000 men killed and wounded during the past eight months, and the still more awful slaughter that every one in the world now recognizes is ahead there is one ray of light in all the darkness, says James J. Walsh, M. D., Ph. D. The death rate among the wounded is probably less than one-half of what it has ever been before.

French statistics indicate that a little less than 3½ per cent of the wounds go on to fatal termination. This figure, so low in comparison with the death rate of other wars as to be almost incredible, shows what magnificent strides conservative surgery and the antiseptic treatment of wounds have made during the last generation.

In the Crimean war 15.21 per cent of the French wounded died from their injuries. In the French-Italian-Austrian war of 1859-60 the percentage of death among the French wounded was nearly 17.5 per cent.

At the beginning of our civil war the death rate among the wounded here in America was nearly as great as that among the French a year previous, but before the end of the war medical organization had accomplished much, and it was the army medical department here in America that taught the world just what would have to be done if the wounded were to be properly cared for and the death rate lowered.

Virchow, the great German pathologist, who did so much to organize the military medical department of Germany, has the highest praise for what we did during the civil war. He wrote:

Gives Praise to America.

"Whoever studies the copious publications of the medical staff of the American army must again and again be astonished at the vast experience collected in them."

Taking advantage of that new knowledge so faithfully preserved for the benefit of others, the Germans during the Franco-German war brought the death rate down to scarcely more than 10 per cent, and this was looked upon as a great triumph.

Instead of the tendency to amputate and otherwise intervene, which was so noticeable before, surgeons had become willing to wait and let nature accomplish her beneficent purpose of healing, and this letting well enough alone saved many lives.

During the Spanish-American and Anglo-Boer wars, as a consequence of these advances in surgery, the percentage of death among the wounded was only between 5 and 6 per cent. This cut in two the previous records.

Now the French have again cut this record nearly in half despite the fact that the trench warfare which had been imposed upon the armies by the conditions of this war so many of the wounds, even of slight importance, as in the fingers and toes, become seriously infected from earth dirt.

While we have official French figures, we know that German conditions have been at least as favorable and that their statistics are not very different. Now even fewer than one in thirty-five die and probably not much more than one in forty.

Soon Back on Firing Line.

Actually 55 per cent of those wounded in the early part of the war are back on the firing line, and it is said that about one-fourth of these have actually been wounded a second time and have recovered and returned to soldier duty. Twenty-four per cent are on convalescent leave, 17 per cent are under treatment and doing well, and only 1½ per cent have become permanently disabled.

Some of the factors that led up to the reduction in this mortality are the development of preventive and curative inoculation, the organization of magnificent hospital service on the railroads and of hospital ships, as well as the aid that the automobile has proved. The Red Cross organization, now so widely extended, has been of immense help.

The wounded now are hurried away to the base hospitals with a rapidity undreamed of even twenty-five years ago. The German army is said to have no fewer than fifty hospital trains fully equipped, and at certain hours to these are given the right of way with practically clear tracks, so that uninterrupted passage from the front to a base hospital is assured.

The German Red Cross has equipped some twenty-five hospital trains, each with a dining car and kitchen, four surgeons, some forty attendants, a registrar, porters and other train officers, and each of these trains can accommodate over 300 wounded.

Sentenced to Water Wagon.

"Two years on the water wagon," was the sentence meted out to former Justice of the Peace William Garrity of Franklin, N. J., by Judge Shay at Newton. Garrity was charged with embezzling $90 bail.

Clean Up Campaign

People of Fulton, do we need a "clean-up" campaign this spring? All in favor say "Aye," then write it down along with your ideas of what such a campaign should accomplish and sent it to the The Evening Times. All suggestions will be published in next Saturday's issue. Do it now. Don't think your opinion won't help. Write it down for a City Beautiful.

Senator Brown's Statement

heavily upon it. All of them reduce the taxpaying capacity of the state, and some of them materially increase the taxes.

GROWTH OF INDIRECT REVENUE

In 1880 the corporation tax was levied, the first of a series of statutes to raise indirect revenue. The collateral inheritance tax came in 1885, and the excise law in 1895. Under present conditions, largely increased revenue from these sources of taxation is not available. The national government collects $26,000,000 annually from the liquor traffic in New York as against $18,000,000 collected by the state, which is divided equally between the state treasury and local treasuries.

Our means of revenue from indirect taxes are, however, by no means exhausted. Although Pennsylvania raises proportionately less taxes from excise than New York, and collects only $2,600,000 annually from the inheritance taxes against $11,000,000 to $12,000,000 in New York she raised $35,000,000 by indirect taxes last year, and levies no direct tax. Massachusetts levies an annual indirect tax of three mills on secured debts, and Connecticut four mills. The average life of corporate mortgage bonds is 40 years. New York collects annually from this source less than $1,000,000, and exempts from all taxes for all time the holders of the secured debts who voluntarily pay the present inadequate tax.

While the indirect revenue of the state now amounts to $40,000,000, it is likely to fall below that amount during the current year from business depression. Is it wise to wait until there is a huge deficit before laying out a policy which will provide revenue for the activities and functions to which the state is now committed? We must have better prisons, increased facilities in charitable institutions, an office building to house state departments. These departments have been multiplying and officered until they have overflowed the capitol, and the state is renting buildings upon every side and housing departments in other cities.

To hold down the direct tax and to meet the state's interests, it is essential that indirect taxes be levied. The taxes from a secured debts law can be multiplied at least four times without resort to offensive inquisition. Massachusetts is doing it now. An additional levy of two mills annually upon mortgages hereafter presented for record would soon produce a considerable revenue.

CONSTRUCTIVE LEGISLATION.

The charge has been repeated that this Legislature is offering no constructive legislation. It is suggested that we enact a state constabulary law at an initial cost of $750,000 annually, and other tentative schemes, plausible on their face, are pressed with the best of motives, involving largely increased state expenditure. Every alleged piece of constructive legislation during the last four years has added a heavy burden to the state treasury. We are not now in a position to enact such legislation. The great need of this hour is retrenchment and economy. Laws and appropriations in defiance of this necessity are not constructive, but destructive. Those who speak with so much confidence of the progress of the state from the assumption of new functions, must not forget that this commonwealth is now 140 years old, and each year of its life must be credited on an average with three-fourth of one per cent of its enduring constructive legislation. That body of legislation is the work of six generations, and the structure can be now more imperiled than served by doubtful extensions. The principal service and not seldom the only great service government can render is administration—honest, economical, unspectacular administration. That service was not rendered during the past four years, and we are now engaged in the painful process of correcting the condition in which we found the state on Jan. 1, 1915.

HUERTA'S RETURN UPSETS MEXICANS

DECLARE HE IS POWERLESS

But Firmly Believe That "Personal and Family Business," the Reason He Gives For Coming Back to America From Spain, Foreshadows Attempt to Regain Authority in Mexico.

When General Victoriano Huerta, the expelled dictator of Mexico, landed at New York he denied that he had come from his refuge at Spain to seek to regain his former power. He had come merely on personal and family business, he said.

All the same, many of his friends seem firmly to believe that he is back for the purpose of re-entering the imbroglio in Mexico to try to re-establish himself now that he is sure Carranza has lost the backing of the United States and has failed. But if that is his intention Huerta had not been long in New York city before he found himself completely cut off from affiliation with any of the four most important political organizations in Mexico—the Villistas, Carranzistas, Felicistas and the Clericals.

"There is no chance for him to re-establish himself in Mexico," say Carlo de Fornaro, Carranza adviser and chief publicity agent, and Colonel Alfredo Breceda, General Carranza's private secretary, who is in Washington on a diplomatic mission.

"If he goes into Mexico and Villa catches him the same thing will happen to him that happened to Licenciado Bonales Sandoval—Villa will shoot him," declared a prominent Villista.

Has Alienated Strong Men.

"He has alienatel himself from every 'strong man' in Mexico," said the most important member of the Felicista party now in New York city.

While all Mexican political factions agreed that General Huerta could not start a revolutionary movement in Mexico that would assume any importance, they were all, with the exception of the partisans of General Feli Diaz, uneasy about his presence in America. Detectives were set to watch the one time dictator in the interest of the Carranzistas, the Villistas and the Felicistas.

Only the Clericals seemed to take little interest in General Huerta's presence.

Carlo de Fornaro said no one knew positively what General Huerta's "personal and family business" here might prove to be, and there were many who thought such a term might very well cover an attempt to regain the presidency of Mexico, since that was a very "personal and family" affair for Huerta.

Agents for the department of justice were also sent to the Hotel Ansonia, where General Huerta is staying in New York with his companions, Abraham Z. Hatner and Colonel Jose Delgado, the deposed dictator's secretary. The general paid little heed to these attendants. Whenever he passed the desk on his way to go for an automobile drive about the city he smiled at them genially.

Diaz "Not Interested."

General Felix Diaz happens also to be in New York, but did not appear to be worried by Huerta's arrival.

"He is not at all interested in General Huerta or what General Huerta can do," said one of General Diaz's important men. "He knows that the one time dictator can do nothing. He has alienated himself from every man who could help him. Nobody will have anything to do with Huerta now. There is no man of importance in Mexico who would affiliate with any Huerta movement."

"General Huerta came here in answer to an appeal from a certain henequin grower of Yucatan," Carlo de Fornaro asserts. "He was asked to head the Anguemedo revolt and was on his way to Yucatan. When he arrived in New York city he found that the revolt had been quelled.

"The scheme was to buy munitions in the United States, purchase a yacht or a small schooner and make a landing at Belize or somewhere along the coast of Guatemala. They hoped to gather an army sufficiently strong to break the Carranza power in Yucatan, Campeche and Quintana Roo and to form a small republic of those three states with Huerta at its head."

Friends of Villa admit that they regard the Huerta trip to the United States as menacing, so far as Mexico was concerned, but say they hoped that he would go into Mexico, for they wanted to see "Villa catch him."

Enrique C. Florente, Villa's confidential agent at Washington, states that the Villa government will take formal steps seeking to have the United States deport Huerta on the ground of being the murderer of President Francisco Madero.

WORDS IN THE MAKING.

Language can be made in the library, no doubt, and in the laboratory also, but it is most often and most effectively created in the workshop and in the market place, where the imaginative energy of our race expresses itself spontaneously in swift creating the lacking term in response to the unexpected demand. Nothing could be better, each in its own day, than picturesque vocables like scare head and loan shark, windjammer and hen minded, all of them American contributions to the English language and all of them examples of the purest English. Hen minded is an adjective devised by Mr. Howells to describe those women who are so common in all walks of life and who are made up of only one aim at a time and of manifold anxieties at all times. Scare head and loan shark are the products of the newspaper office, while windjammer was put together by some down east sailor man, inheritor of the word forming gift of his island ancestors who helped to harry the Armada. "Windjammer," remarked Professor Gildersleeve, trained by his intimate knowledge of Greek to appreciate verbal vigor as well as verbal delicacy—"windjammer is a fine word, I grant, and so is every Anglo-Saxon compound that grows and is not made."

But all new words are not of necessity good words. Ben Jonson, who was himself a frequent maker of new words, displayed his shrewdness when he declared that "custom is the most certain mistress of language as the publicke stampe makes the current money," adding as a caution, "But wee must not be too frequent with the mint, every day coyning."—Brander Matthews in Harper's Magazine.

RUSSIA'S MIGHTY RIVER.

The Sluggish Volga Is Three Times as Long as the Rhine.

In Russia the rivers are large and sluggish, owing to their great length and slight fall. The Volga is the longest river in Europe. It is 2,300 miles in length—that is, three times as long as the Rhine—yet its total fall is only a little over 800 feet.

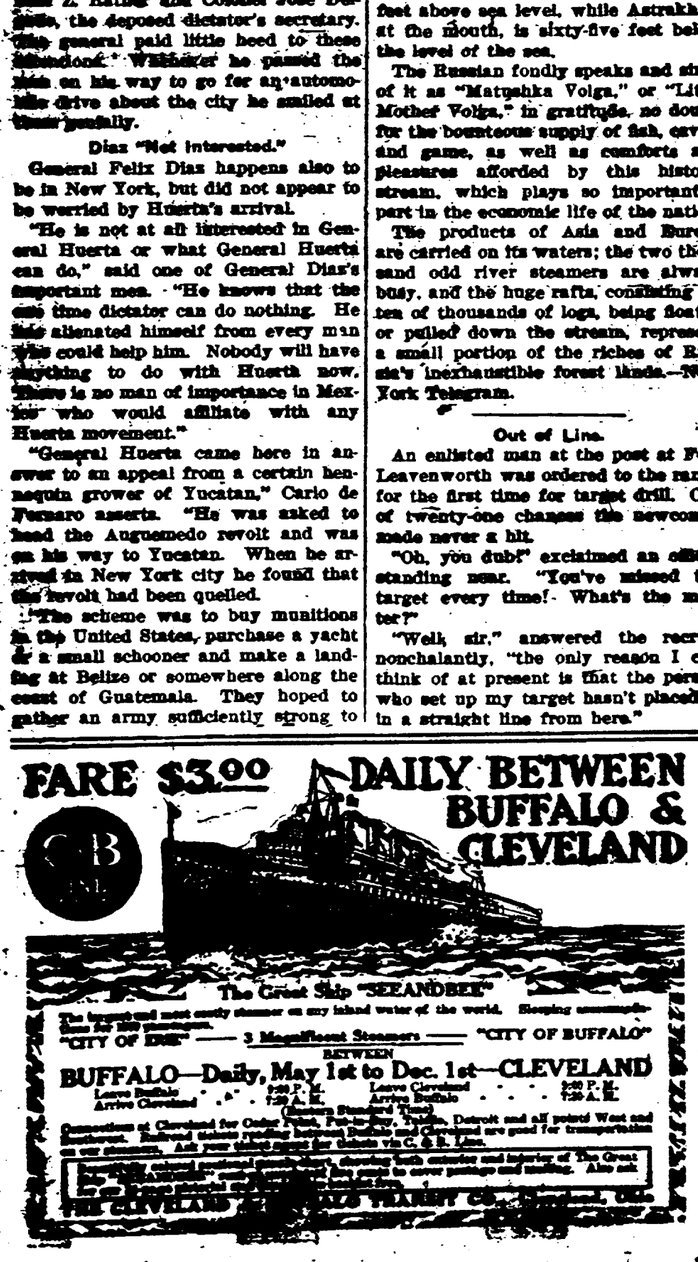
The Russian fondly speaks and sings of it as "Matyushka Volga," or "Little Mother Volga," in gratitude, no doubt, for the bounteous supply of fish, caviar and game, as well as comforts and pleasures afforded by this historic stream, which plays so important a part in the economic life of the nation.



The products of Asia and Europe are carried on its waters; the two thousand odd river steamers are always busy, and the huge rafts, consisting often of thousands of logs, being floated or pulled down the stream, represent a small portion of the riches of Russia's inexhaustible forest lands.—New York Telegram.

Out of Line.

An enlisted man at the post at Fort Leavenworth was ordered to the range for the first time for target drill. Out of twenty-one changes the newcomer made never a hit.

"Oh, you dub!" exclaimed an officer, standing near. "You've missed the target every time! What's the matter?"

"Well, sir," answered the recruit nonchalantly, "the only reason I can think of at present is that the person who set up my target hasn't placed it in a straight line from here."

TELLS HOW SHE TURNED OVER GREAT CONCERN TO EMPLOYEES

Mrs. Warbasse Says Marriage and Six Babies Taught Her Need to Study Social Problems.

Looks on Absentee Ownership as Curse, So Gave Workers Complete Control of $6,000,000 Plant.

"It was just a step in the direction of the inevitable, a step in the way I see things going."

That is how Mrs. James P. Warbasse, the woman responsible for putting into effect the most radical profit sharing plan known to industrial history, described the turning over of the $6,000,000 Dennison Manufacturing company to the full control of its employees.

Mrs. Warbasse lives at 386 Washington avenue, Brooklyn. She was the largest stockholder of the old Dennison company, of which her father, H. K. Dyer, was president for many years. She inherited his holdings and was in position to control the company itself.

H. K. Dyer started in as a $1 a week clerk (and clerking meant wielding the broom on occasion in his day). There are still friends of his left, Brooklynites of the old regime, who shake their heads sadly over the "doings" of his daughter Agnes. Mrs. Warbasse admits that she never gave more than a passing thought to sociological problems until marriage "educated her."

"The one man power in the industrial world is already doomed," she said in an interview. "The time will eventually come when employees of all corporations will control the corporations for which they now labor.

Evolution or Revolution?

"It will come either through employers stepping aside, as we have done in the case of the Dennison company, or through their being forced to step aside in submission to the demands of competently organized labor. Whether it will be evolution through the first or revolution through the latter no one can say.

"While it is true that this plan could not have become operative without my support, the credit for it does not belong to me. It belongs to E. W. Dennison primarily, the founder of the company, who in 1875 advocated it and sketched the rough outlines which Charles S. Dennison, treasurer of the company, and myself have since filled in.

"When I was a girl I went to Packer Institute, just as hundreds of other Brooklyn girls are doing, and when I was through with school I went out into society and had a good time and thought hardly any and wanted a lot of them.

"Then I married Dr. James P. Warbasse. Marriage is the greatest education any woman can have. Then my children came, and they taught me a lot too.

"So gradually in this way I became interested in old Mr. Dennison's original idea.

She Explains Scheme.

"I began to see that the greatest industrial wrong was absentee ownership. Charles S. Dennison, whom I have known since doll baby days, is a graduate of Harvard, a brilliant man and tremendously interested in all these problems. Together we gradually worked out the plan which has been put into effect, only it is not as radical as I would have liked it even yet.

"The plan provided for a reorganization. The present company sold out its entire property and assets, including good will, name and business subject to its liabilities, to a new corporation, which was organized under the same name under the laws of Massachusetts.

"It was authorized to issue preferred stock at the par value of $100 per share, and this was to have a preferential cumulative dividend at the rate of 8 per cent per annum. Four and one-half millions of this stock was issued and given to the old stockholders to replace the $2,500,000 of stock of the old company.

"Common or industrial partnership stock was to be issued to the principal employees, who were defined as employees earning from $1,200 a year up. We decided that it would be for the best interest of every one that the first issue of this common stock should be paid for at the rate of $10 a share in cash by the employees themselves until they had bought an aggregate of $1,000,000 of the stock. As soon as they had bought that amount the entire control of the corporation was to be turned over to them.

Owners Must Be Employees.

"Until they had it was provided that the voting power should be vested in the preferred and industrial partnership stock together; holders of the preferred to have one vote for each share, par value $100, and of the industrial one for every ten shares, par value $10 each.

"You see, this reorganization was made three years ago. Now the employees have bought the necessary $1,000,000 of industrial stock and so just as soon as they had the corporation was turned over to them.

"Now the employees have entire control, as the charter provides.

"You see, we want to make this company the employees' entirely, so we hit upon this plan. And, furthermore, we have thought it wise to provide that when an employee leaves the company, no matter what the reason, or dies he must sell back his shares to the company at their par value, or his assignees must turn them back.

"All salaries of $1,200 or more must be approved by a two-thirds vote of the full board of directors, of whom there are to be not less than five nor more than nine, as a majority vote of the stockholders will have to determine.

No Charity In Plan.

"The principal employees are subject, like every other employee, to the same rules and discipline, and they can be dismissed for incompetency, misconduct or any other cause. But if they are discharged or forced to resign they have the right to appeal to their own board of directors, and the decision of this board will be final.

"There is no charity involved in this scheme. We are not giving the employees anything. We are simply getting away from the curse of absentee ownership. The employees live right by the factory, and the directors will be of their number.

"After all," she continued, "I do not expect to ever see the world reformed. I am interested in labor questions, in equal suffrage, in a number of outside things, but the greatest interest I have is my children.

"I don't think that women, even if they had the vote, would make this old world radically better. They aren't any better than men. Some of the suffragettes make a mistake by pretending they can get along without men. They can't. Men are not inferior to women.

"We should all try to learn, and the best thing for us to study is humanity. That's the great essential. Learn each other and each other's viewpoints, and then we will be more willing and better able to give each other justice."

FINDS STRANGE NEW METAL.

Russian Savant Stupefied by Cold Produced in Experiments.

A marvelous new metal, likely to have as farreaching effects on science as radium had, has been discovered by a Russian savant, working on specimens of minerals from Ferghana, in Turkistan.

In the presence of an acid this metal, which as yet is nameless, generated such an excessive degree of cold that the glass vessel containing the acid was immediately reduced to powder. An iron vessel met with the same result. A large piece of granite was decomposed suddenly without explosion or emanation of gas, but with a stupefying lowering of the temperature.

Treated with an alkaline reagent, the substance, which stubbornly resisted every analytic process, lost 20 per cent of its weight.

DIGS HIS GRAVE TOO SMALL.

Eccentric Farmer Forgets to Allow For Size of Coffin.

Dwight E. Hewitt, an eccentric farmer of Weston, Conn., having a premonition of death, dug his own grave and ordered his tombstone a month ago.

When interment was attempted it was found that Mr. Hewitt had not counted on the size of the casket and the grave was eight inches too short. The only way the coffin could be lowered was endwise. Burial was delayed two hours until the grave could be made long enough.

BANKER WON'T HAVE PHONE.

Takes Up New Job at Eighty-five, but Does Without Typewriter.

Henry Parish, who has just retired at the age of eighty-five years after being forty-four years president of the New York Life Insurance and Trust company, would never allow a telephone in the institution, and permitted typewriters only on condition that they were placed where he could not hear them.

Though he has quit the presidency, Mr. Parish, who is probably the oldest active banker in New York city, is staying right along in business as chairman of the board of trustees of the company. He will still continue his resistance to all the inventions of modern progress and will have the correspondence with many of the old time customers of the institution still written with a pen, for he can't stand the typewriter's click.

Charles G. Dawes, a Chicago banker, has promised to build a $100,000 hotel in Boston for unemployed men, similar to the Rufus F. Dawes Memorial hotel, which he has given to Chicago in memory of his son.

"The site has been purchased and plans have been completed," Mr. Dawes says, "and it will be finished before the 1st of next January."

EAGLE ROUTS TWO MEN AFTER FIERCE BATTLE.

Swoops on Them in Swamp and Drives Them Off Wounded.

An eagle with a tremendous spread of wings viciously attacked William and John Simpson, brothers, of Parsippany, N. J., while they were seeking muskrats in the Great Peace meadows, near Fairfield. Both young men were severely cut and bruised about their heads, faces and hands.

The brothers had caught seven muskrats when they saw a large eagle circling above them. Suddenly the eagle shot straight down through the fifty feet of space and tried to sink her talons into William Simpson's head. The blow knocked him down.

Swooping off a quarter of a mile, the eagle rose to a height of a hundred feet and circled back, again shooting down upon the young men. This time John Simpson's head was torn by her talons. As she circled again for another attack the brothers threw their muskrats high into the air, believing it was these she wanted. But they were mistaken. Apparently the bird wished to drive them away from the locality of her nest, concealed in the swamp.

Again and again she struck at the young men, each time trying to use her beak, her talons and her wings. They struck at her with the sticks with which they had been killing muskrats, but only loosened a few feathers. They were knocked down several times and their clothes torn.

Realizing that they could not drive off the bird, the two brothers ran from the swamp, but the eagle continued the attack until they reached the main road from Morristown. When they were far from the swamp the eagle ceased her attack and flew away.

REINDEER TO RIVAL BEEF.

Government Now Aiding Alaskans to Introduce Meat Here.

Reindeer meat may soon make its appearance on the American table as the result of efforts by the department of the interior. It is said to possess a flavor as fine almost as that of venison.

Heretofore virtually the entire supply of reindeer meat from the Alaskan herds has been needed for home consumption, but recently there has been such a surplus that government officials have decided to open up this industry for the Eskimo natives.

The meat already has appeared on the menu in dining cars of trains on continental railroads and is said to have met with favor.

At present there are sixty-five herds of reindeer in Alaska, aggregating 57,872, an increase of 22 per cent in the past year.

FIGHT IN FRENCH ARMY.

No Fewer Than 28,266 Foreigners Are Aiding France.

From the first day of the general mobilization to Jan. 1, 1915, 28,266 foreigners volunteered for service in the ranks of the French army. They are subdivided into nationalities of origin as follows:

Belgians	1,483	Swiss	2,497
British	729	Austrians and
Russians	2,322	Hungarians	1,339
Italians	4,923	Germans	1,667
Greeks	200	Turks	682
Luxembourgers	641	Various nationalities	11,254
Spaniards	159

Under the head of various nationalities figure natives of Alsace and Lorraine and Americans.

CONDITIONAL PACT TO WED.

Miner Bargains That His Gold Must Match Girl's Fortune.

Fearing he would see some one he liked better while he was in Alaska, a young woman at Butte, Mont., forced Charles Hyland to enter a contract to marry March 1, 1915, provided he matches her $5,000 with an equal sum.

The latter provision was Hyland's, who did not want to accept any money from his bride to be and was going to "make his pile" in Alaska. He gave her a plain gold wedding ring to be worn for the first time March 1, 1915, if he is successful in his chase for gold.

JOFFRE'S DREAM REVEALED.

French Commander Hopes to Devote Time After War to Fishing.

General Joffre's secret ambition and how he means to pass the future when the war is over have just been revealed.

The French generalissimo has bought a barge, on which he and his wife will live. The barge will be towed from canal to canal, and General Joffre will spend his time fishing and observing the landscape with Mme. Joffre. The whereabouts of the barge will be kept a profound secret.

The Law of the Land.

The prisoner's lawyer was making an impassioned appeal to the jury.

"It were better," he thundered, "that ninety-nine innocent men escape than that one guilty be punished."

"I cannot allow that statement to go to the jury unchallenged," said the learned judge.

"Exception," thundered the lawyer, and the jury promptly voted to acquit the one guilty.—Philadelphia Ledger.

STATE CHECKS ANIMAL DISEASE

Commissioner Wilson Believes Continued Strict Enforcement of Regulations Will Be Effective

While expressing confidence that foot and mouth disease, which has been epidemic in New York state since November 1st, virtually has been wiped out, Commissioner Chas. S. Wilson of the State Department of Agriculture declared to-day that there would be no let-up in the fight against the disease. All infected and exposed animals have been killed and buried, but it is not sure that all possible means of conveying infection has been destroyed. For this reason and because warm weather is conducive to the rapid spread of the disease, unusual precautions are being taken by the Department to prevent a recurrence of the scourge.

One of the first problems taken up by Commissioner Wilson when he assumed office April 5th was that of foot and mouth disease. His predecessor in office, Calvin J. Huson, had succeeded in eradicating all external evidence of foot and mouth disease in the state before he left office. Com. Wilson's task is to keep the disease under control and this he is attempting through insisting upon the rigid enforcement of all regulations promulgated by the Department in respect to the disease.

"It must be thoroughly understood," said Commissioner Wilson to-day, "that there will be no cessation in the campaign against foot and mouth disease until all possible danger is passed. I do not consider that the danger will have passed for some months and I will insist upon the full and absolute enforcement of every regulation issued.

"I expect we will have a few cases of disease. It is an impossibility to guard against every contingency; sporadic cases are sure to crop out here and there. If preventative measures are thoroughly enforced, however, there need be no further serious spread of the disease.

"Two problems now confront us—how to handle shipments coming into the state for immediate slaughter and for restocking purposes. It is clear to me that we must continue to exercise every precaution against the possible re-importation of disease. There is no doubt that disease has entered the state and has been spread through the state by the railroads. That will not happen again if I can help it. In regard to the importation of cattle to restock dairy farms, it will be impossible for farmers upon whose premises foot and mouth disease has actually existed to restock for some months and then only under strict inspection.

"The other remaining question—remuneration of cattle owners whose stock has been slaughtered upon the order of this Department—I expect will be taken care of by the Legislature. I have supplied all information regarding the amount required to pay all indemnities and am assured that appropriation will be made to pay the state's share of the losses occasioned by the epidemic.

"The big thing now, as I see it, is to guard so effectually against any recurrence of the disease that there will be no more disease. This Department cannot do all, however. I wish every farmer would make the protection of his property his own business. Thus, and with the hearty co-operation of veterinarians and others who want the dairy industry in this state to advance, can we hope to keep the disease under control."

DR. ANNA SHAW TO BE HEARD

Oswego To Hear Noted Suffrage Speaker, April 26

Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, President of the National American Woman Suffrage Association, has included Oswego among the few places in New York State in which she will speak this month, and will be there April 26th. Dr. Shaw threatens to break all records for suffrage campaigning during the next six months. She has offered, on behalf of the National Association, to give thirty speeches apiece to the four campaign States of New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania. This makes a total of one hundred and twenty speeches which compares favorably with the number made by Presidential candidates.

Dr. Shaw is an Englishwoman by birth, although since her early childhood her life has been spent in America. In the days when few women received little more instruction than in the three R's, Miss Shaw studied in Albion College, Michigan; then in spite of the objections and pleadings of her family and friends she determined to be a minister. She received a theological degree from the University of Boston.

To study to be a minister was one thing; to be a minister was another. The Methodist Episcopal church would not ordain her. There again she experienced the force of prejudice which limits a woman's activity. Finally she found a Protestant Methodist church willing to allow her to preach the gospel. Her first parish was in Cape Cod. Being exceedingly human and practical, Miss Shaw appreciated early that to heal physical ailments was a necessary part of her work as a minister. Therefore, she studied and received a medical degree at Boston University.

Becoming deeply interested in practical reform she finally resigned her pastorate to lecture for the National Woman Suffrage Association. In 1892 she was elected as its Vice-President, and in 1904 became its President.

During the course of a long period she has spoken in nearly every State in the Union, before many State Legislatures and before committees of both Houses of Congress. She is the only woman who ever preached in the Gustav Vasa Cathedral, the State church of Sweden.

STEAM ROLLER LEGISLATION

Party Expedience the Only Consideration in the Passage of Bills

The legislative history of two years of Democratic rule was completed March 4. Those two years have been marked by one of the most active periods of law making this country has ever seen. With a house ready and able to execute his decrees down to the last word and with a working majority in the Senate, President Wilson took the oath of office March 4, 1913. With prophetic eagerness he summoned Congress in extra session a month later. With the exception of six weeks of respite last fall the party machinery has been in operation ever since, grinding out experimental laws that affect every phase of our social and commercial life.

What Does a Study of that Record Show?

It discloses the fact that during that time the Democratic Congress has enacted and the Democratic President has signed more crude, imperfect and nugatory laws than ever were written during the same length of time by any American Congress. It furnishes an indictment of haste and lack of legislative intelligence that is bound to be humiliating to the party desponsible.

That there has been a tremendous quantity of legislation cannot be denied. More than four hundred public laws have been placed upon the statute books by the Democrats since they came into power. These are designated "public" because they appropriate money for general purposes or affect general law. In addition to these, hundreds of private bills have been passed.

Those who have closely observed the methods of legislation used by the Democratic majority are not surprised at the faulty results. The present administration has been admittedly notable, even notorious, for its steam roller short cuts in enacting laws. Every important bill passed has been put through with small consideration beyond that of party experience. As soon as the President proposed a law, then a caucus approved it, the majority rushed it thru committees and back to the President for his signature—all with as little debate as possible, and under iron clad special rules that permitted no chance for intelligent consideration or amendment.

It is conceivable that a few bills might be put through a legislative body in this way and emerge in perfect form. But to use such methods indiscriminately, as the Democratic Congress has done, is practically to insure the enactment of laws which future Congresses must either repeal or spend many weeks to amend. This is the task which Democratic haste and lustful use of a powerful majority has created for future Congresses.

Specific examples of blundering will not be enumerated in this article. It is enough at present to make the general statement that the Democratic party has "sown a wind of legislation and is reaping a whirlwind of mistakes." Future articles will appear that will show in detail the various instances of blundering, careless drafting of bills that finally went on the statute books without correction.

THE QUIRK

Today the funny comedians, Jacobs & Bertrand, present the roaring musical comedy, "Memories of Childhood Days," with special scenery, pretty singers and dancing girls and beautiful costumes. A feature attraction for men, women and children. There are also nine reels of licensed photo plays, the feature of which is a three-reel Selig circus drama entitled, "Thor Lord of the Jungle." A special feature of this performance is the prices—Main floor, 10c; balcony 5c. Tomorrow the comedy will be "Vacation Days at Atlantic City," a big bill of pictures and the same price, balcony 5c.

JUDGE WILSON GAVE ROBINSON NEW CHANCE

In City Court this morning, Theodore Robinson was arraigned on a charge of chicken stealing. Robinson promised to mend his ways, and Judge Wilson was inclined to be lenient. The complainant, Thomas McGovern, also stated that he did not want to be hard on the man.

The Judge sentenced Robinson to six months in the Oswego jail, and fined him $10 to pay the cost of the trial. Then he released Robinson on parole, and Robinson has agreed to find work and pay the owners of the chickens for their birds as well as the costs of the trial. If he gets to work and keeps straight the sentence will be suspended.

Ben Ingamells, George Grandjean and Thomas McGovern were the owners of the birds stolen. The arrest of Robinson was effected Saturday after some clever work on the part of Chief Dyer. After his arrest he admitted that he had stolen fowls from the Ingamells and Grandjean yards.

Contractor Carver started work today in the Shipman store, removing the wall that separates the store from the former store of the McKinstry company. The Shipman store will occupy both stores as soon as the partition is removed an alterations made. It is expected that the work will cover about two weeks.

Some Forms of Rheumatism Curable

Rheumatism is a disease characterized by pains in the joints and in the muscles. The most common forms are: Acute and Chronic Rheumatism, Rheumatic Headaches, Sciatic Rheumatism and Lumbago. All of these types can be helped absolutely by applying some good liniment that penetrates. An application of Sloan's liniment two or three times a day to the affected part will give instant relief. Sloan's Liniment is good for pain, and especially Rheumatic Pain, because it penetrates to the seat of the trouble, soothes the afflicted part and draws the pain. "Sloan's Liniment is all medicine." HOW TO BEAUTIFY YOUR PREMISES

Department of Agriculture Tells the Kind of Trees and Shrubs to Plant

The Department of Agriculture, in a recent bulletin, tells owners of private grounds what kind of trees and premises.

This advice was given by the specialists of the department after careful study of the various sections of the country. Soil and climatic conditions in the different sections were taken into consideration, as these factors enter largely into the success of the planting.

For this purpose, the experts divided the country into five grand divisions as follows:

2—Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas.

3—Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, Wyoming, Montana and Idaho.

4—New Mexico, Arizona, Utah and Nevada.

5—California, Oregon and Washington.

After districting the country in this ists made up their list of trees and shrubs which they believe are well adapted to the particular locality. This list, it is stated, "is merely suggestive" to those who are interested in the beautification of towns and cities.

The suggestions as to what to plant in the several sections follow:

District No. 1: Decidious Trees — Sugar maple, Norway maple, silver maple, green ash, white ash, American white elm, red oak, white oak, pin oak, American linden. ROOSEVELT DESCRIBES BARNES; EXCITEMENT ALREADY RUNS HIGH

Startling Evidence Expected in Addition to Colonel Testifying Barnes Defended Bossism While He Was Platt's Albany Lieutenant

In Supreme Court Theodore Roosevelt stated yesterday on the witness stand before Justice William S. Andrews and a jury that while he was Governor and William Barnes was the Albany lieutenant of Thomas C. Platt, both Barnes and Platt tried to influence him against favoring legislation that would hurt big business interests and how it was all right for the Democrats to contribute funds to the Republican party in the hope of gettin favors.

"Barnes," Mr. Roosevelt said, "said to me that certain business men of great prominence in New York would be unfavorably affected by the bill on State franchise tax legislation, and that they had been heavy contributors to the Republican campaign fund. This was a surprise to me, for I knew them to be Democrats. Barnes said that of course Senator Platt was entirely right about the matter, that in Albany two big business men—he said they were Robert Pruyn and Anthony Brady, who were connected with an electric power company—had been heavy contributors to the Republican campaign fund."

Colonel Roosevelt, while on the stand, talked to the counsel for both sides, offered suggestions, and entered into a discussion of more than one point with Justice Andrews, whom he addressed as "Judge." He was entirely at his ease in the witness chair. He stretched his arms over the back of his chair, crossed first one leg and then the other, and adjusted and readjusted his glasses from time to time.

He cut all his words off short except when he mentioned the name of Mr. Barnes. He drew out the name of his opponent and put a peculiar pronunciation upon it. Spectators said every time he mentioned the name of Mr. Barnes they were reminded of the noise made by a pebble dropping into a pool of still water.

Barnes's Theory of Government

"Barnes," he said, "stated on one occasion that it was essential to protect big business interests, because unless protected they would not give contributions, and without such contributions it was impossible to carry on the organization, and without an organization, leaders, bosses—he used the term bosses—Government was impossible. He used this phrase: 'The people are not fit to govern themselves. They have got to be governed by a party organization, and you can't have leaders unless you have money.'"

William C. Ivins, counsel for Mr. Barnes, in opening the case paid many compliments to Mr. Roosevelt's ability, but pressed home the fact that because he was an ex-president gave him not one whit more than the humblest citizen the right to libel a

By Ray I. Hoppman

SHIMMERING LINGERIE.

WHEN the weather is hot it's as likely as not you'll loll in the surf all the day; you will act like a fool just to try to keep cool—you'll hide from the sun's scorching ray. But the women don't care, and the sun, in despair, will give up the fight in dismay; for the heat she will beat and the sun she will cheat in her shimmering lingerie. Now, a man in distress will endeavor to dress as cool as he can on his pay; and he'll go where the breeze gently sways the tall trees—where white crested waves gently play. But the sun cannot stop "her" desire to shop, though he burns a big hole in the clay; she's as happy and cool as a frog in a pool—in her shimmering lingerie. Now, a man will be rude and he'll go almost nude, to cool in the summer,—but, say! the hot sunshine will scorch his old hide like a torch—and there is the devil to pay. But the women don't mind, and much pleasure they'll find on a ninety degree above day; they're as cool as can be, they are happy and free—in their shimmering lingerie.

BORROWED TIME

By F. A. Arnold

My friends, ye men of Borrowed Time,
Let me now speak a word in rhyme;
Tho I've not very much to say,
Hear me most patiently I pray.

What's been the purpose of your life,
These many years of toil and strife,
To gather dust and daily food
And dress in garments warm and good?

What has this life appeared to you,
A chance for good, or to pursue
The glit'ring baubles, wealth and fame?
To gain earth's pelf or get a name?

If both you gained were you content,
Or more to gain were you not bent?
Missing either, have you complained
That naught by you could e're be gained?

Or did you early learn the fact
That life must rest on how you act,
And shaped your course by this sure rule
Like scholar apt in life's great school.

Have you not striven hard to find the origin of human kind,
And of all things manifest to men
How came they all, and where and when?

Who made them all by His own will?
Who keeps them in their places still?
Who crowned the day with brilliant light?
And made the moon to rule by night?

A mystery all, to you may seem,
You wonder if you do but dream,
And gaze at earth, and vaulted sky
With all the wond'rous orbs on high.

Came they by chance as some men say?
If so chance must still hold his sway.
Then give to chance the praise his due,
For to his own he's e'er been true.

Did he make man and give him mind?
Then he must be amazing kind.
But wait, some say man is evolved
Thus the mystery of life is solved.

Ah! now I see, chance made no man,
But left him out of his great plan
But evolution took the waste
And made a man to suit his taste.

He took protoplasm or an ape
And formed it into human shape—
O wond'rous tho't, how high the source
Whence man began to run his course.

Far better tho'ts, than these are yours
Which hope for future life assures;
Where knowledge shall fore'er increase
And all these baser tho'ts shall cease.

Then let us do the best we can
To cultivate the better man.
Let's "hitch our wagon to a star,"
And hope for life that's higher far.

THE "SOFT, SOFT PEDAL."

Mayor Fox and City Attorney Fanning, have through the silence maintained by them indicated that they believe in the use of the "soft, soft pedal." This silence is maintained in spite of the fact that nearly every taxpayer in the City of Fulton has raised an inquiry regarding the veracity of the statements contained in a letter printed in The Evening Times and signed by one who, for very good reasons, preferred that his correct name should not appear in print.

Silence may be golden, but there are periods in the lives of men when it ceases to become a virtue. Silence is not of a golden hue when it comes to keeping quiet under such a severe arraignment as has been administered to the Mayor and his legal adviser by the writer of the "Inquirer" letters. Different constructions and various motives may be placed upon the officials' silence, but in view of what has been said pro and con and of the general belief in the truth of the statements made by "Inquirer," the question arises, Who has issued an injunction against what the accused officials must believe to be extraordinary and futile noises.

In many cities there is popular revolution against noise. Tolerance has ceased to be a virtue. Can it be true that the Mayor and the City Attorney have proceeded to honor the observance of all protestants against racket?

A week ago it was hoped that the official tolerance of the noises produced by "Inquirer" would ere this cease to be of the color of some of our glorious sunsets, but in this the interested taxpayers have again been disappointed, and unless the magnetic influence of the will of a few is soon made manifest by an easing up of the official foot that apparently rests upon a large soft pedal, it might be well for some of us to form a society for the propagation of noises.

NO FAVORS TO THE CANNERS

The latest attempt to scuttle the labor law of the canneries, which Governor Whitman is said to have consented to approve, is no better than the Bewley bill, which he refused to sign. It would accomplish exactly the same thing in permitting the forced labor of women and minors. It would give to the canners exactly what they want exactly as they want it, and the burden of proof that they were violating the law or evading it would be laid on the Labor Department under such circumstances that proof would be almost impossible to obtain.

"Emergencies" such as the canners who ask this legislation tell of are properly provided for in the existing law. These emergencies, of late-delivered produce, of early ripened vegetables, causing a glut of canning material, of unexpectedly large crops and the like, are common to all canners. Labor Commissioner Lynch declares that a majority of the canners obey the present law, which is proof that it is not unreasonable. Where it is disobeyed it is because "of the individual canner's attitude toward it and not of the necessary exigencies of his business."

To change this law, therefore, would be to repeal a reasonable, enlightened statute drawn to protect women and children against brutal and inhuman exploitation, for the benefit of a few canners who now are lawbreakers because of greed. Common sense and humanity revolt at the thought. The present law should not be changed. It should be preserved and enforced rigidly.—New York Tribune.

DISTASTEFUL LITERATURE

Recently George B. Saunders of this city distributed upon the streets literature setting forth in an unwholesome manner the supposed misdoings of his daughter. The nature of the communication aroused the indignation of scores of people into whose hands the pamphlets fell. It was in this way the old man, who if years bring wisdom, should have displayed better sence in seeking sympathy.

Not alone was an attempt made to filch his daughter's name, but the memory of the girl's dead mother was shamefully abused. Highly qualified persons have testified to the falsity of the entire statements contained in the pamphlet.

The absurdity of the manner in which the old man seeks to secure his "honor" would not bear mention except for the fact the girl feels keenly the bitter humiliation administered by one who should have been her best friend.

It would be but right were the classmates and teachers of the girl to urge her return to the desk she so hastily left the day she with the other pupils of the school had the distasteful literature distributed among them.

However, tho the unhappy incident is regarded by responsible persons as but the effect of a distorted imagintion, the girls needs the assurance of the trust her friends, teachers and relatives repose in her.

Let the People Know

Senator Root is charged with the suggestion that the proceedings, debates, etc., of the New York legislature should be reported and published after the manner of the Congressional Record. That is going rather too far and would entail a large unnecessary expense, but some sort of official journal, omitting all except the most important speeches, would be of value so that the people might know something of the detail of legislation and the arguments which lead the legislature to take action. The idea is opposed on the ground that the Albany newspaper correspondents keep the people informed on the details of legislation. These correspondents are almost entirely from the metropolitan press and they pay no attention whatever to any legislation or legislators except those of interest in the metropolis. Upstate papers in the expense of keeping a special correspondent in Albany and so the constituents of upstate members do not know what they are doing or their reason for their action. It would be very illuminating if they could keep tab on them in some degree and also upon such legislation as affected them locally.—Watertown Times.

The Disappearance of William

It is stated that since the war broke out the name William has been astracised by patriotic English parents. In 40 recent baptisms of male infants it does not appear. Is not this form of rebuking the Kaiser illogical as well as ineffective? "Why should the devil have all the good tunes?" asked Rowland Hill. Why should the Germans be allowed to monopolize a good English name? The memory of such great Englishmen as Shakespeare and Wordsworth should suffice to stay William from ablivion. American parents never gave vent to their resentment against George III by boycotting the name which Washington also bore.

There are fashions in names, it is true, as in other things. The lives of great men remind us that they serve unconsciously as godfathers for hundreds of obsucre offspring. Presidents of the United States have always been honored in this way. There are many Williams who date back to the time of McKinley and others to the time of Taft. The Theodores are beginning to grow up, but the Woodrows are still infants in arms. Even in the names that own on distinguished bearer, tastes vary with the cycle of the years. The Nettie and Hattie period ended long ago. Earl and Harold, Dorothy and Gladys, have lost their popularity. The plainer names have come into their heritage again.

But a name is so much a matter of parental caprice that it may be dangerous to dogmatize upon the subject. There are reversions to type; even the painful Biblical nomenclature occasionally reappears undisguised by an initial. "What reason is there," asks a recent authority, "for the comparative isappearance of Elizabeth?" But is this disappearance a fact? Until within a very short time, at least, Elizabeth had shared with Mary, Anne and Jane a phenomenal popularity. The discussion calls for far more definite data than we possess. Cannot Mr. Herkimer Johnson go into the whole matter exhaustively in his forth coming monumental work? —Bedford Times.

Dishonoring the Liberty Bell

Three motives have been principally responsible for the removal in recent years of the Liberty Bell from Independence Hall. One was a milk and water type of patriotism, which insisted that carrying this old relic around the country would encourage a spirit of national loyalty. The second was a desire on the part of world's fairs and expositions to obtain a popular attraction that would add interest to the show. The third was an unblushing effort to make an official junket at public expense.

The greatest and most powerful of the three was the free junket. That was what took the Liberty Bell on its first trip to Chicago. It was merely to cover a flimsy political trick that so much was said about the patriotic spirit that would be awakened by beholding this venerable relic. On each successive occasion when the Bell has been removed from the place where it should remain undistrubed forever this blatant cry of carrying some sort of vague message has been raised to conceal the two far more powerful motives behind it.

California wants the Liberty Bell for the very same reasons that Chicago and St. Louis and New Orleans and Seattle and other places have wanted it, namely, to furnish one more national attraction to its exposition. But why is the Liberty Bell the only historic object which has thus been successfully torn from its home in order to become a hippodrome? President Wilson urges Philadelphia to send the Bell to San Francisco. Why does he not have sent the rigimal Declaration of Independence, which is in Washington? There would be no greater danger in shipping the one than in sending the other. As mementoes they are indissolubly linked together. Yet we never hear a suggestion that the Declaration itself shall be commercialized by being made a box office attraction. Some there be who have the effrontery to say that the Liberty Bell on its journey is a good advertisement for Philadelphia. For those who know the facts it is a splendid advertisement for the spirit of political junketing.

There is but one right place for the Bell, and that place is within the walls of the old State House, where Independence was born and from which its now silent tongue proclaimed the news throughout the land and to all the inhabitants thereof. To remove it is akin to the desecration of a grave in behalf of a commercial enterprise. In voting to send the Bell on a 7000-mile journey, City Councils have betrayed a trust placed within their keeping. Their action is an offense against the best sentiment not only of this community, but of the entire country.—Phila. Ledger.

HOME ECONOMICS

By I. E. Hyde

The cry is on to save your dimes,
For use in coming harder times;
That's right we know.
But, men will buy a brand new shirt,
And say, "Now, Jane; wear your blue skirt,
It's old, but, make it go.
Your hat, trim over, that is right;
Just help your hubby win the fight
To make his wages reach
Around the altar called a home;
And, stay indoors, don't dare to roam,
Or, you will hear me preach.
And, Jane, dear; make the kiddies' pants
From my old cast offs; hush, no can'ts;
You'll have to make them go.
My mother used to cut my trousers
From what was left of old man Bowser's,
And never voiced a—no.
And, once when I needed a coat,
She made one from her petticoat.
My slippers, too, she mended.
And, Jane, now darling, do the same,
There's nothing to a woman's name
That's easily offended."

* * *

"That's all right, Dave; but, I will say,
Your mother does not live today,
And, your wife is a woman
Who means to live in modern times,
As modern woman, and, Mr. Grimes,
I'm sure you're not a yeoman.
I'll saye your pennies where I can,
But, I won't be bossed by a man,
Nor, make your breeches over.
My petticoats, I guess, I'll wear;
'Twill do no good for you to swear,
And kick at poor old Rover.
I'll save; but, I won't pinch myself.
So, Dave, just stay on your own shelf;
You're far from being busted.
I read you like an open book;
This proverb looms in every nook:
A man cannot be trusted.

Cities and Towns Joining Hands In a Country-wide Get-together Movement

By John A. Scheuerle
Secretary, Hampden County Improvement League, Springfield, Mass.

About two years ago the President of the Springfield Board of Trade appointed Horace A. Moses, President of the Strathmore Paper Company, as chairman of the Suburban Committee, and gave him a group of very efficient men as his associates. Mr. Moses is a large employer of labor and has also purchased a number of farms in the town of Russell which he is now developing into one large and profitable farm. Mr. Moses, realizing the seriousness of the increasing high cost of living, and also the deterioration of rural communities, felt that something must be done if New England's prosperity is to be increased or even to be maintained at its present degree.

The Suburban Committee of the Springfield Board of Trade called together representatives from the U. S. Department of Agriculture, the Massachusetts Agricultural College and the County League that had been formed in Vermont, to go over the situation and see what could be done. It was decided to invite every board of trade in Hampden County and every grange and rural community to send at least three representatives to a large mass meeting. At this meeting it was determined to organize the Hampden County Improvement League, to raise funds to employ efficiency men in agriculture and country life and to devise means for overcoming the disheartening conditions in these rural communities.

THE BIG PROBLEM OF RURAL AND INDUSTRIAL NEW ENGLAND

It is difficult to over-emphasize the seriousness of the situation. In the last fifty years the population of 37 strictly rural towns in the four western counties of Massachusetts, which largely look to Springfield as their commercial center, dropped from 41,826 to 19,859, which means a decrease of 51 per cent. in the producing population. During this same period the industrial centers in these communities increased in population 330 per cent. With this decline in rural population there has been a corrsponding decline in the economic resources of the same territory. In 1860 there were 957,336 acres of improved farm land under cultivation in Hampden, Hampshire, Franklin and Berkshire counties. In 1910 there were only 456,496 acres of improved farm land under cultivation.

To make the situation even more serious, the land under cultivation has been deteriorating so that it is not producing one-half of what it should produce. The average hay production in 1910 in Hampden county was 1.4 tonsp er acre; this land should produce 2 tons or more. Other crops tell a similar story of the depletion of the soil. The herds are not producing what they should. In Hampden county there were 11,771 cows in 1910 producing on an average but 3,800 pounds of milk, though they should average at least 6,000 pounds per year. The cows have been decreasing in numbers also, and at an alarming rate. In one year this decrease has amounted to a thousand.

INDUSTRIAL NEW ENGLAND WEAKENING

The result is that milk and other farm products have been going up in price. The cost of living is soaring higher and higher; in fact, the situation has almost become intolerable. The following quotation is typical of many letters received at the League headquarters:

> "I work ten hours a day and often overtime. I get 20 cents an hour. I have myself and wife to support. I scrimp myself in every way, go to the theatre about once a year and yet am unable to save a cent of my wages for a rainy day."

One cannot but ask, What about the laboring man with three or four or more children to support? Massachusetts today is producing only 25 per cent. of what it consumes. Seventy-five per cent. of its food supply must be imported from the West and South—meaning additional commissions, freight rates and deterioration in food. This is handicapping New England industrially in the growing competition of the West.

Along with the decline in population and the economic resources of rural communities, there has gone on a perhaps even more serious decline in the sanitation, education, social, civic and religious life of the open country. The problem, therefore, that these men had to face was most serious.

The constitution and by-laws of the Hampden County Improvement League have as their underlying principle the bringing together of the agricultural and industrial leaders in a joint effort to promote better farming, better business and better living conditions in the county as a whole, and especially in the rural communities.

The league at once employed a secretary and general manager, agricultural adviser, a horticultural adviser and an office manager, and secured the necessary equipment, including an automobile. The first thing to be undertaken was naturally the improvement of the soils, herds, poultry, and the whole economic status of the farm. The League has been in active operation for a little over a year and eight months. The cost of the work has been $19,096, with an estimated net return of farm values and farm crops of $546,767, which would not have come had it not been for this organization with its staff of efficiency men and the work that the farmers have done under their direction and inspiration.

BETTER FARMING

These efficiency men have gone around from farm to farm and have met farmers in groups, inducing them to put into operation modern methods. To build up the soil these men have found it necessary to urge the use of lime and recommend chemicals and fertilizers. One man who had a hundred acres of hay put in 70 acres of top dressing according to the recommendations of the adviser. Thirty acres he did not treat in this way. This man raised 2 2-7 tons of hay more per acre off the 70 than he did off the 30 acres. It cost the farmer $700 extra to put in the top dressing and to carry on the extra work but he got $3,200 more for his hay than he would have had without this treatment. Thus this farm land, with the use of 16 1-4 tons of chemicals properly applied, netted an additional $2,500. Farmers in Hampden county have been induced to use over 500 tons of chemicals in a similar way. Potatoes and other crops have multiplied from 100 to 200 per cent. in response to the treatment recommended by the advisers. Over 70 carloads of lime have been brought to the county as a result of the efforts of the League.

Orchards are being renovated and new orchards are being planted. One young man netted $150 from a cluster of trees as a result of carrying out the instructions of the Horticultural Adviser, from which he had never been able to net more than $50 before. Thousands of trees in every part of the county are now being sprayed, pruned and fertilized that were neglected before. The dairy has received the same kind of attention. The poor stock is being eliminated and high bred cows and bulls are being introduced. The League is just about to employ a poultryman to do for the poultry industry what the men thus far have done for the soils, herds, orchards and crops.

Farmers are becoming tremendously enthusiastic in this work. They are coming to the office in Springfield at the rate of 300 a month for conferences. They are making such tremendous demands upon the men that they cannot begin to comply with their requests. When neighborhood meetings are held they come from all directions. Even during the spring mud, farmers are known to have driven 25 miles to get to one of these demonstrations. Many farms that were for sale are no longer on the market, the people are taking on new hope. A number of farmers have been brought to the county and have purchased farms through the efforts of the League.

If this work continues as it has begun, in the course of a few years the agricultural output of the county will be more than doubled. If all the land formerly cultivated can be again brought under cultivation, and the land now under cultivation restored to its maximum fertility, the value of the annual output of the principal crops in Hampden County will be increased from $2,970,252 to $9,580,753.

Last winter a farmer wrote to the League, saying:

> "I am a member of the League. I brought 3½ cases of eggs to town, went from one end of the city to another and managed to sell them from 33 to 44 cents a dozen, while they were retailing in the stores at 60 cents per dozen. I spent the whole day and traveled 25 miles and this is the result. What can a man do about it?"

The League made investigations and found that the commission men, restaurant men, and others are willing to pay a market price plus a small premium if farmers will bring in their eggs in regular quantities, stamping them and guaranteeing them. The League brought a large number of these farmers together and suggested the forming of an egg-selling circle, where one man would collect all the eggs and have them sent direct to the city, every farmer guaranteeing his eggs and stamping them. One farmer said: "I have 100 hens; if this proposition goes through I will put in 1,000." Another farmer who had 150 said he would put in 1,500. Another having 300 said he would put in over 3,000.

BETTER BUSINESS

The trouble with farming is that its business is carried on as it used to be a hundred years ago. All other industry has been organized and has introduced business efficiency. Farming can never be made prosperous until this is accomplished among the farmers. The League, through its efforts, has already gotten together farmers who have purchased 100 carloads of material co-operatively, saving thousands of dollars. It has encouraged the organizing of Farmers' Co-operative Exchanges and has helped them introduce better business methods in their own farming operations. The League has also organized a Farm Finance Committee, that farmers may have available the necessary finances to carry on their work and develop their business just as other business institutions have.

The League has also been instrumental in getting an act through the Legislature which enables counties to tax themselves for county improvement work a sum equal to that raised from all other sources. It has also secured the passage of an act which enables the farmer to protect his orchard from the ravages of the deer. It has been instrumental in many other lines of legislation of great importance to the farming industry, and is now promoting a dog law which will enable the farmer to protect his sheep and poultry. The League has organized a Transportation and Good Roads Committee that is putting forth strenuous efforts to get large appropriations for the improvement of country roads, and is working for the extension of trolleys.

Large numbers of boys and girls have been drifting from the country to the city because country life did not offer sufficient opportunity in a business way nor adequate recreation, pleasure and social life. The League has therefore organized the Hampden County Volunteers. Over 1,400 country boys and girls have already joined this organization. At a field day and picnic 17 special trolleys brought them together for a day's outing and an interesting program. The work of the Volunteers includes agricultural, horticultural, poultry, home-making, club work, play and recreation, courses in reading and community activities. All this is being linked with the gardening work and the recreation work of the cities, so that this coming year there will be county-wide activity and competition along these lines.

The League is already employing a man to give his time and attention entirely to this club work, and the local communities everywhere are co-operating in it. Boys and girls have been able to get much larger results than their parents, and are beginning to secure better opportunities along the line of play and recreation. All the country boys and girls in this county-wide movement can rise just as high as their ability and enterprise can carry them. Many of these boys and girls are now writing essays as to why they had rather be in the country than in the city.

Seventy-five women's organizations have recently banded together to bring to the county an expert woman worker who will spend her time with the girls and their mothers in improving home conditions, introducing modern conveniences and appliances, home beautification, home sanitation, and in every way possible promoting conditions that will make the county homes as comfortable, beautiful and inspiring as the homes in the larger centers.

GREAT AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION

The country and city women coming together in this large organization work may do much to bring about a more satisfying social condition in the open country, such as is already taking place among the men. One farmer said at a meeting where there were 200 business men present:

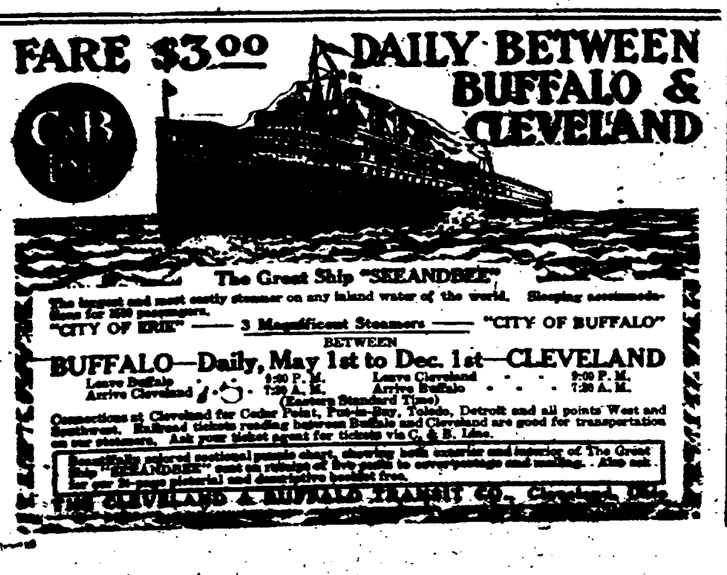
> "It means much to me to be able to make $2 or $3 where I have made $1 before. It means much to my wife and to my children, but it means more to me to have you men come out into the country as you did, and to invite me to come here as you did. It is obliterating the line of demarkation between the farmer and the business man and is bringing us together shoulder to shoulder."

In a number of communities the League has organized committees on agriculture, on good roads and transportation, on education, recreation and civic ffairs. And it will be the aim ultimately to bind together all these interests, so that city planning and town planning will all join hands, and that there may be a county-wide movement for civic improvement. One farmer said:

> "Before the League was organized, people thought that our town had no future. Most of them were trying to sell out and to get away. Now we see great possibilities for ourselves and also for our community, and we are all enthusiastic, believing that our town is a good place to live in and that our farms and our homes have a future."

It is the bringing together of the business men and the farmers in a country-wide organization, creating a new spirit and enterprise, that will rebuild the countryside and strengthen the industrial life.

As a result of the accomplishments of the Hampden County Improvement League, many other counties in Massachusetts and Connecticut have formed similar organizations, and the League has received inquiries regarding the organization from as far west as Washington, as far south as Texas and as far north as Canada. It is now publishing a weekly paper known as the County League Adviser. This paper portrays the work that is being done and the results that are obtained, and aims to help along the kind of work undertaken by the League. It is a highly specialized paper that is rapidly becoming a great power in the promotion of the League work.



As a result of the interest created among the big business men of Springfield in this kind of work, there has been organized what is known as the Eastern States Agricultural and Industrial Exposition. This, too, was started by the Springfield Board of Trade. This exposition has purchased 122 acres of land within twenty minutes' walk of the Springfield Post Office. The transportation facilities are of the very best. The exposition will be far more than a first class fair. It will be an exposition that will give expression and inspiration to the best industrial and agricultural lines that the East can produce. Through demonstrations, exhibits and educational work there will be shown in a concrete and lifelike manner the best processes of manufacture and the best ways of growing, breeding, handling, marketing and consuming.

Special emphasis will be placed on the boys' and girls' department, with their agricultural, home-making, manual training, vocational and recreational activities. It will develop Eastern States champions along all these lines.

The exposition will conduct a sales market, where the blue ribbon stock from the eastern and many of the western states will find an excellent market. Already the National Dairy Show and the International Live Stock Exposition are considering Springfield as an eastern branch of their great institutions.

The grounds, race track, athletic field and buildings will form a great and adequate arena for the assembling of large crowds, making an ideal place for big football games, baseball games, conventions and many other activities—especially affording a place where it will bring together county-wide organizations with their competitions and activities. These leagues are developing very rapidly throughout New England, and will furnish an excellent reinforcement to the exposition.

The physical development of the fair will be on a permanent basis and will be developed from year to year under the direction of the best architects. Concrete and steel will be used in the more important buildings, permanence and beauty being combined.

K. OF C. MEMBERS HAD GOOD TIME

Objects of the Order Explained by Different Speakers---A Musical Program

Two hundred Catholic men of the city and several of other religious denominations were royally entertained last night by St. Joseph's Council, K. of C., at its lodge rooms in Oneida st. The affairs was in the nature of a reception, and at the entertainment a campaign for new members was successfully launched.

Rev. John Lindsman, pastor of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, occupied the rostrum with Grand Knight Branche and Deputy Grand Knight Carroll. Addresses were made by Professor Lanigan of the Phillips st. school, Harvey Van Buren, former past grand knight; D. M. Sullivan, Father Lindsman and Deputy Carroll.

Professor Lanigan's address was on the subject, "The Training of the Young men," and in the course of his remarks, he showed the necessity of inculcating the spirit of patriotism and loyalty, as well as good citizenship in the minds of the younger generation.

Harvey Van Buren spoke on "The Life of a Marine," and drew a graphic picture of the work, education, drill and daily life of one of Uncle Sam's tars. He told of the work allotted to each man and of the perfect discipline that prevails aboard ship.

Past Grand Knight Sullivan's subject was "Our Order. His talk reverted to the year 1882 when the Knights of Columbus was founded in New Haven, Conn., by Rev. Thomas McGibney and seventy-five other Catholic men, and stated that the order now numbered 332,000 men. He scouted the idea that the Knights of Columbus sprang into being in a night, as some of the opponents of the order state. And he also said that the purpose of the order was a purely patriotic and American one, without any object other than to teach the men of the Catholic church the building of character and the furthering and fathering of patriotism and good citizenship. He stated that the work of the order has not been confined to Catholic fields alone, but that charitable work had been done by the Knights of Columbus in every large city in the United States and in many smaller cities. A chair of American history has been founded in the Catholic University at Washington, D. C., by the order, and beds in all the larger hospitals have been endowed. Tuberculosis sanitariums have been erected in almost every state in the Union and homes for the aged, orphans and other charitable institutions have been given liberal donations. Mr. Sullivan said that St. Joseph's Council had done good work right in this city, of which the big majority of the people knew nothing.

Father Lindsman's address covered a variety of topics. He told of the lack of real religion in the world today and spoke of the great war in Europe as one of the most terrible blessings that has ever come upon France. He told of the anti-clerical and irreligious feelings in that country a few years ago, and contrasted that with the state of mind of the people today, when all are looking to the one Creator for help and guidance.

Father Lindsman urged the men of the audience to become members of the Knights of Columbus, not only because of the social and financial benefits derived from membership, but because of the religious spirit inculcated by the Knights in the members of the order. He touched briefly on the wave of bigotry that is sweeping the country at present and said that united action and organization of the Catholics were the only means of defeating the movement which would deprive the Catholic men not only of their religious liberty but also of their civil rights.

Edward Walsh entertained with two solos, "Come Back To Me," and "The Shores of Italy." David Carroll accompanied on the piano. Buell's orchestra furnished musicd uring the evening and A. D. Krause rendered two solos, "Dreams of Long Ago" and "Machusla." The Argentine Quartet, comprising Senors Bureno, Talmani, Merrefela and Macula dispensed some "close harmony" to the huge appreciation of the audience.

The evening closed with a buffet luncheon, served by Mr. Krausse and informal entertaining was enjoyed until a late hour.

CITIZENS' CLUB HAD A SOCIAL EVENING

Attorney Giles S. Piper Advanced Ideas That May Prove of Great Benefit to the Club.

The Citizens' Club held a social evening last night at its home in 1st st. About fifty members of the club and as many more guests were present.

Giles S. Piper was the speaker of the evening, and H. L. Paddock acted as chairman. Mr. Piper presented in detail the plan of the members to raise the debt which is now on the club, and which will place the club on firm financial basis if carried out.

At the present time, there are numerous bonds which were issued by the club at the time of its organization still in the hands of the members. Some of those have been redeemed by the club, but it was proposed last night that those holding bonds should donate them to the club or a portion of them and those who have no bonds should subscribe some suitable amount toward removing all debt from the club. The idea was very favorably received by the members and several donations were made at last night's meeting.

N. L. Whitaker, H. L. Paddock, G. C. Chauncey, and T. H. Webb made short addresses and, after listening to some very good music by the Empire Four, the members and their guests dispersed throughout the club and enjoyed an informal evening. The buffet luncheon was served by Steward Sneden.

It was stated last evening that the club will increase its scope of activities this year in various ways. The new caretakers of the club, Mr. and Mrs. Riddle, of Cold Springs, N. Y., will come here to take charge of the club about May, at which time the present care-takers, Mr. and Mrs. Sneden, will leave for Weesport, N. Y., where Mr. Sneden has purchased a summer hotel.

Mr. Riddle is an experienced steward and chef and it is expected that he will give particular attention to the serving of dinners, light lunches, etc., at the club. It is hoped that this feature properly handled will make the club more of a rendevous for the members and also add materially to the earnings of the institution.

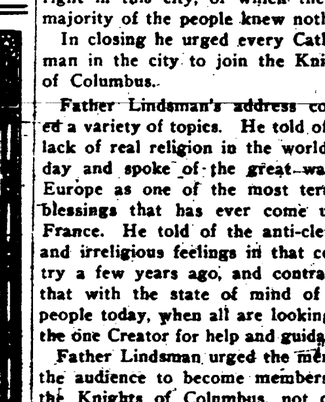
Let the Bosses Rage



It is difficult to follow those who argue that a verdict in favor of Colonel Roosevelt would end Mr. Barnes's political activity and make Mr. Roosevelt the Republican leader. There isn't a doubt that were the colonel to win his return to Republicanism would appear to be due to making the party whiter than snow. The colonel is coming back because there is nowhere else to go. It is a mistake to believe that all of the prodigals who wandered with him are anxious to have him do any leading in his new role. The Progressive party as such isn't so crazy about the colonel. There is an element in the Republican party which thought in 1914 that all the brethren were ready to bow down and worship. That notion prevailed but a few days. If Roosevelt were to win he wouldn't be better than an even terms with Barnes who went not astray. Barnes's popularity has never yet been tested; he has never been the under dog, he has always appeared to be self-sufficient. Once make sympathy for Barnes and he would be pretty formidable for a political corpse. The Republican party ought to be big enough for both Roosevelt and Barnes, even after they have gone the limit in throwing mud. It is too big for either to make any headway in the bossing game. Last summer the colonel tried to come in through the boss door and Hinman was awfully pinched when the people jammed it back. Barnes saw the signs and steered clear of danger. With no boss the old party made good. It will give Barnes and Roosevelt fair play but no boss credentials. The result of the quarrel of two bosses will not in the least harm the old party.—Watertown Standard.

TEARING AWAY BRIDGE

Temporary Bridge to be Built to Take Care of Traffic.

Contractor Rosoff is progressing rapidly on the work on filling in the old canal bed at Oneida st. and he had a gang of men at work yesterday and this morning tearing up the paving on the walks of the bridge.

The walks will be taken up on both sides but some of the main roadway will be left intact until the canal bed is filled. It is expected that the work will occupy some months, and when the canal filling nears completion, arrangements will have to be made to take care of the bridge traffic by an improvised structure.

BLUNDERING REPORTERS.

Mistakes That Mangled the Speakers' Words and Feelings.

"Drunkenness is folly!" earnestly exclaimed Bishop Magee in the house of lords on a celebrated occasion. How horrified was the prelate to read in the papers next morning that he had given utterance to the very bacchanalian sentiment, "Drunkenness is jolly!"

Lord Salisbury was a master phrasemaker, but one of his best points was spoiled when a careless reporter turned his reference to "manacles and Manitoba" into the meaningless "manacles and men at the bar."

Sir William Harcourt was badly misquoted once. "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" he exclaimed upon the platform, but one paper had it: "Great Dinah! What a farce is this!"

Lack of knowledge of familiar quotations is a prolific source of misreporting. For instance, a speaker once made use of the well known lines from Milton's "L'Allegro:"

But come, thou goddess, fair and free,
In heaven yclept Euphrosyne.

The brilliant reporter deputed to "take him down" was in despair. He could not make head or tail of this mysterious utterance. But, following the sound as far as possible, he seized his pen and produced the following gem:

But come, thou goddess, fair and free,
In heaven she crept and froze her knee.

The speaker was taken down in more senses than one.—London Answers.

BOY INHERITS BRAVERY.

Grandson of War Governor Andrew Captures Two Robbers.

Twelve-year-old John Andrew, son of Colonel H. H. Andrew, a New York lawyer, and grandson of John Alden Andrew, the war governor of Massachusetts, has arrested two robbers in a week.

The latest of them was a big fellow, six feet tall, who was robbing a trunk store man, whom he had beaten unconscious when the lad entered with a suit case needing repair. The boy, shouting, went for the holdup man with his suit case, chased him on to a trolley car and finally arrested him. But before he succeeded he had been knocked off the car and badly kicked, and the robber had been fired at by a policeman.

He held on to the coattails of the other and couldn't be shaken off.

OLD GOOSE LAYS BIG EGGS.

But Outdoes Record to Celebrate Thirteenth Birthday.

George Motter of Nova, O., wants to exhibit Weyler, his thirteen-year-old goose. Weyler, he declares, lays an egg weighing three-quarters of a pound every Thursday afternoon and has been doing so for years.

Weyler, as sensible a goose as one would wish to associate with, invariably lays eggs of unusual size and weight, but last Thursday eclipsed all of her previous performances. She laid an egg three inches in diameter and weighing seven-eighths of a pound. In considering the matter and trying to account for this gala performance Mr. Motter suddenly recollected that it was the thirteenth anniversary of Weyler's birthday.

"COURTESY FIRST" WORD NOW

Railroads Adopt New Slogan After Men Get Jail Term.

"Courtesy First" is now being added to the slogans of the railroad companies. The Pennsylvania has already placed it next after its "Safety First." Courtesy meetings are to be held and will form a sort of school of good manners.

The Interborough, which runs the subway in New York city, is also showing anxiety since two railroad men were sent to jail for a year for abusing passengers. True, one of the pair used a coupling pin to enforce his side of the argument. But now the shoving of passengers to pack them into already overcrowded cars, has to be done—with smiles, apologies and gentle words!

Kansas Now Wealthiest State.

Kansas is now the wealthiest state in the Union, according to an abstract of special bulletins of wealth, debt and taxation for 1913, just issued by the federal census bureau. The per capita wealth as indicated by the asset valuation is nearly $300 greater than in the next wealthiest state. The Kansas figures are $1,629.61, whereas Massachusetts, the next state, has $1,368.47.

In many parts of England and especially in the villages of the Black country it is quite a common thing for a man to be known so exclusively by a nickname that his real name is forgotten. A gentleman had occasion once to ask a potter for the whereabouts of a certain John Williams.

"John Williams?" repeated the man thoughtfully, knitting his brows. "I have heard tell of it. John Williams—is it familiar. I say, sir," he explained, as if seized by a sudden inspiration, "do he be married?"

"That's so."

"And has three or four children?"

"I believe so."

"Well, sir, I'm John Williams."

PUBLIC NOTICE

Pursuant to Sections 30 and 31 of the General City Law, I hereby fix Friday, April 23, 1915, at eight o'clock P.M., at the City Hall in the City of Fulton, N. man. In finishing he faced Mr. Roosevelt and fairly shouted:

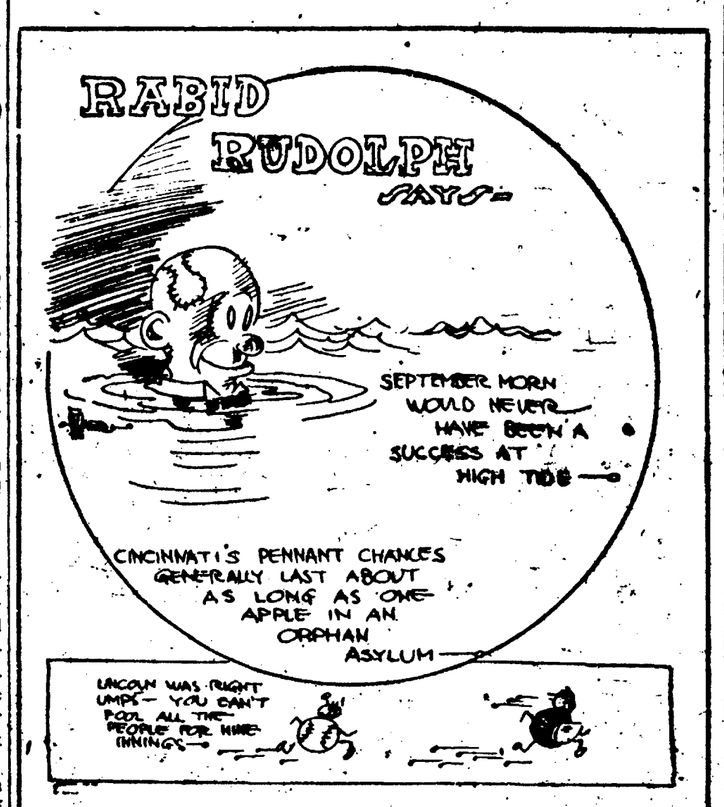
"We now call upon this man, who has set himself up as an arbiter of morals, to prove what he said in his statement. Using the immensity of his power, he has seen fit to tear down the plaintiff's character. It is for him to substantiate his statement."

The Colonel's eyes snapped and his teeth clicked at the challenge. He nodded his head vigorously and seemed to be anxious for an opportunity to meet the challenge.

Mr. Van Benschoten, on the other side, review Colonel Roosevelt's political activities and said that he had always fought for the people's interests and for good government. Taking up the fight the Colonel made to nominate Harvey D. Hinman for Governor, Mr. Van Benschoten went on:

"Investigation after investigation had shown the absolute rottenness of the condition of many of the departments of the State. Public officials had been indicted and convicted for neglect of duty and for conspiring to defraud the State. Other officials had been removed from office. The newspapers and periodicals were filled with the details of the conditions which had for some time been existing.

The lawyer tried again and again to get before the jury the report of the Bayne Committee which investigated the affairs of Albany county and city by reading parts of it, but was always stopped by Justice Andrews upon objection of Mr. Ivins, who said it had not yet been admitted as evidence.



Mr. Van Benschoten said the State had been mulcted of hundreds of thousands of dollars through the methods of the Albany printing ring in holding up the printing of one large law volume. He said the ring had been able to have the Legislative reports printed in separate volumes, with only a change in the title from Assembly to Senate on the cover, and to charge the State for the double cost of printing.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Rube Marquard of the New York Giants.

Rube Marquard, one time sensational pitcher for the New York Giants, must better his last season's performances if he hopes to twirl for John McGraw. During the spring training the southpaw was slow getting into shape, and unless he comes back strong as the season advances McGraw will probably can him. Marquard's best season was in 1912, when he won nineteen straight games for the Giants. He also had another good year in 1913, but failed to win a game in the world series. Last winter Marquard jumped to the Federal league, but jumped back to the Giants before the season opened. Rube is a native of Cleveland and is twenty-six years old. He first played professional ball with the Canton club of the Central league, going thence to the Indianapolis club of the American association. McGraw bought him from the latter club for $11,000 in 1908. He was with the New Yorks for three years before he began to pitch winning ball. Then he came out and was one of the chief factors in winning the pennant for the New Yorks in 1912.

Tris Speaker Hard to Pitch To.

According to Bill Steen of the Cleveland Naps, Tris Speaker of the Boston Red Sox is the hardest batter in the league to pitch to regardless of the fact that Donie Bush of Detroit draws more passes than any player in the world and on the strength of his bases on balls record is regarded as the toughest bird in the business for an American league pitcher to work on.

"Speaker won't strike at a ball on the inside, and he slams balls on the outside down the foul line at a mile a minute. He hits 'em when they are over. I'd sooner pitch to Crawford, Collins, Cobb or Baker any day than to Speaker," says Steen.

"Crawford and Cobb are hard to fool. They show their greatest weakness in going after slow balls."

Avoid Conflicting Dates.

Conflicts between the American league and American association in Cleveland will be avoided this year by transferring several of the games which the association ordinarily would play in Cleveland to some other city. A whole series in May was transferred from Cleveland to Columbus and another from Cleveland to Milwaukee in September. The Memorial day double header, which under usual conditions would be played in Cleveland, was transferred to Indianapolis.

"Ready?" politely queried the bus driver, as the athletes were embarking for the depot. Christy Mathewson says he does not think that the Boston Braves will repeat this year because most of them bought automobiles last fall with their world's series money, and he predicts that these folks will be thinking more about the price of gasoline next summer than they will about winning ball games for Boston and Stallings.

Red Sox Fear Only Detroit.

Mike Finn, last year manager of the Memphis club and now attached to the Detroit payroll as a scout, has come out with the declaration that the Boston club already has it figured that the pennant is all but in its grasp and that it believes it has only Detroit to beat to insure this result.

LIVELY TIME AT PRATT HEARING

Attorneys Hillick and Piper Engage In Spirited Argument In Oswego

A wordy battle developed in the Surrogate's court in Oswego Monday afternoon between Attorneys W. S. Hillick and Giles S. Piper of this city. The case was the hearing of objections to the account of George L. Pratt as executor of the estate of John W. Pratt, a deceased resident of this city, and Surrogate Miller presided.

Mr. Hillick represented James G. Pratt, a grandson of the deceased, and Mr. Piper appeared for George L. Pratt. Two other heirs were represented by Attorney George N. Burt of Oswego.

John W. Pratt was a highly esteemed and wealthy resident of this city, and when he died in 1903 he left a valuable estate, principally notes, mortgages and realty in this city and in the town of Granby. His widow and his son George were made executors and they managed the estate together until Mrs. Pratt died a few years ago. Since that time George Pratt has handled the estate. The estate has among other assets a claim for $100,000 against the State of New York for damages to real property incurred by the construction of the Barge Canal. Guy Pratt demanded a hearing in the estate in order that he may get an accounting from his uncle of the disposition of the various funds of the estate.

Mr. Hillick stated that a great deal of money had been invested in a gold mine which has not paid any dividends in years and this was one of the investments objected to. Mr. Pratt justified the action by stating that the investment was made with the consent of his mother and on the advice of several responsible men, and he also said that the property was gradually assuming a more favorable aspect and that dividends were expected within a short time.

Guy Pratt objected to paying more than his share of the expenses of litigation against the State of New York and this subject also brought on some discussion.

Mr. Burt suggested a compromise and Surrogate Miller advised an adjournment as he wished to hear arguments of Attorney F. G. Spencer who is also representing Guy Pratt. Mr. Spencer was not present at the hearing and an adjournment of two weeks was ordered.

AUTO CLUB MEETING

Directors Will Arrange for Dinner Next Week.

President R. L. McCully of the Fulton Automobile Club has called a meeting of the directors of the club for tomorrow night. At that time the final plans for the minner of the club on April 28 will be made and a committee of arrangements will be named. T. M. Ripley will be the speaker of the evening.

Although cards have been sent out to every automobile owner in the city known to the club, there may be some who have received no notice. Those are invited to send in their names exactly as though they had received a card and they will be heartily welcomed. The affair is for every automobile owner in the city, and no written invitation is necessary. All names of those who expect to attend should be in the hands of Mr. McCully by Monday in order that enough reservations can be made. The club anticipates a gathering in excess of its facilities. The affair will be held in the City Hall. It is expected that there will be a large number of ladies in attendance and the club is making extensive preparations for the entertainment of everyone.

The affair will be strictly informal and a nominal sum to cover the cost of the dinner will be charged.

Milady's Mirror

How to Massage the Face.

After cleansing the face cover with cold cream and compress the lips. Massage the sagging lines about the mouth first with the first finger of each hand. Place the thumbs under the chin and with an upward circular stroke smooth out each line. If the mouth has a tendency to turn down at the corners lift with the finger tips at ending of each stroke. Use all the fingers on the throat; raise the elbows well and give long, steady strokes upward to the ears. Remember the throat should never be rubbed downward, but always upward, with gentle pressure. On the fat face the main object of stimulative rotation should be to stimulate relaxed skin and also to dissolve the fat folds.

If the face is very fat it will be found beneficial to lift or pinch up the fat folds between the thumb and finger and give them a rolling, kneading motion. The object of this is to reduce the fat by stimulating absorption. In all these movements care should be taken not to continue them too long if a feeling of irritation is felt.

In applying the powder do not rub it downward and thus force it into the pores. As already explained, it is quite essential to skin health that the pores can be open and pure at all times. Fluff the powder on and smooth gently, and at the same time dust off all that does not cling to the skin.

For Puffiness Under the Eyes.

Puffiness under the eyes is often due to inflammation of the lower lid. Pull the lid down, and if it is red and inflamed you will know it needs attention. Purchase a glass eye cup, fill it half full of salt water, about as salty as tears. Lean the head forward, fit the cup to the eye socket, hold it firmly, throw back the head and open and close the eye ten times. Lean the head forward and remove the cup. This will wash the eyes, rest them and reduce the inflammation. Boracic acid, ten grains to the ounce of distilled water, is very good and can be used the same way.

To retain a fresh, youthful color the tiny blood vessels or capillaries which carry the blood to the skin must be kept in a healthy, active condition. The colorless parchment-like skin of the aged is due to the fact that these little capillaries wither away and the skin is not properly nourished. Therefore it is important that the blood should be brought to these tiny blood vessels. This can be accomplished by steaming, facial massage and electricity or the vibrator. When properly given they will strengthen the muscles, clear the skin and stimulate the action of the tiny blood vessels.

Tight Shoes a Menace to Beauty.

Recently long, narrow feet have been the rage, and girls with short fat feet, size 3D, all try to wear 5A, which is just as bad as trying to wear shoes too short for the feet.

No woman who tries to pinch her feet into shoes too short or too narrow for her realizes what infinite harm she is doing to her health and consequently to her appearance. Tight shoes affect the body in two places—the eyes and the digestion.

The girl who habitually squeezes her feet can usually be distinguished by her red lids, red nose and sallow, unhealthy skin. Pinching the feet affects first the digestion, which in turn discolors the nose and spoils the complexion. No girl who suffers from indigestion ever has a clear, rosy complexion. It is generally a muddy color, marred by blotches and specks.

Every one can tell a pinched foot by a single glance, and its owner at once becomes an object for ridicule. So the girl who distorts her feet spoils her complexion, and for what? A vain delusion that she is appearing more beautiful by doing so.

To Keep Hands White.

The home worker can keep her hands in nice condition if she will exercise a little care. When they have been stained by vegetables or fruit the stains should be removed with an acid, lemon, vinegar or sour milk, and then rinsed in contact with soap or soapy water. Always rinse off all soap before wiping the hands, and be sure they are wiped perfectly dry.

At night rub in some good cream, powder the hands and keep them in loose gloves all night. The hands will be as white and soft as though they had never done a bit of housework.

For Callouses.

When the outline of the foot is affected by callouses the process of removal is simple, but requires time. First soak the feet well in hot water; then after they are dried rub the callouses until the skin peels. If any of this dead skin can be removed by cutting with the scissors do so, but be extremely careful that you do not injure the tender flesh beneath.

Don't Make Faces.

Don't narrow your eyes when you wish to be impressive. If you draw your mouth into a button and allow your lines to pucker between your eyes you will acquire a habitual cross expression. Is anything more unbecoming than an angry face with its features tied in veritable knots?

FOR EVENING WEAR.

This Gown of White and Silver Brocade Shows Grecian Tendency.

HANDSOME PARISIAN GOWN.

This is a year when milady pretty much pleases herself in the style of her evening gown. For a certain type—the tall, stately, classic type—nothing is more becoming than the loose flowing draperies reminiscent of the Greek costumes. Such an evening creation is shown in the picture. It is developed in white and silver brocaded satin and is girdled with a pearl embroidered girdle. A gracefully draped scarf of silver net bound with silver cloth falls from the shoulders.

How to Launder Neckwear.

The majority of women who indulge in the ubiquitous neck decorations of the moment find it necessary to launder the dainty finery themselves in order to have it done as it should be.

It should in any case, however, be done separately from the regular wash. White crepe de chine sets should be washed in cold water and a good white soap, rinsed in cold water and ironed while wet between the folds of a Turkish towel.

Some women clear starch white neckwear, but others find a substitute in powdered borax, allowing two teaspoonfuls to a quart of water, which is said to leave the material more sheer than does starch.

Heavy lace, which will pull out of shape if regularly washed, can be cleaned by scrubbing it with a new but not too stiff nailbrush wet with soap and water, laying the lace on something flat like a plate or stone of the washbowl during the process. When finished iron it over folds of Turkish toweling or flannel to bring out the patterns of the lace.

Smoky Windows Cleaned.

To clean smoky windows and also use up old stockings take an old cotton stocking that is clean and soft, put a few drops of kerosene oil on the stocking and wipe window so every part will receive some of the oil. Then take a soft piece of clean tissue paper and polish. If properly done the windows will shine and look better than when washed with soap and water.

THE "SCORCH" UNDER BAN

Many housekeepers ask how to clean a scorched pan or how to keep food from having a burned taste once the pan is scorched. Scorching food is absolute and downright carelessness. That too many women are careless is shown by the amount of washing soda used.

Washing soda is a strong alkali, which "eats" the grease and scorch, but which also eats the metals of which the pots are made. When a woman carelessly throws a "handful of soda" into a pot and "lets it soak" she is soaking the scorch and the metal too. That is the reason so many pans chip or "wear out" so easily. Washing soda should be used only to clean the sink and waste pipes. How thinking women will use this strong caustic in their pots, especially enamel ones, and then expect their pots to wear is a mystery.

There should be no scorched pots. The newer fuels and methods are changing things for the better. The steam cooker and fireless cooker and aluminum are putting the "scorch" out of the home.

Cookery Points

Eat Seasonable Foods.

No matter how carefully we may have lived throughout the winter, every one feels more or less the lassitude of the early spring days, and, although the inclination may be toward sulphur and molasses or some patent medicine, there is no doubt that the common sense thing to do is to change our customary food habits and introduce more seasonable foods.

Unfortunately in many sections there is a between times month, when the winter vegetables and fruits are jaded and the spring products are forced and consequently prohibitive in price. But grapefruit can be obtained almost anywhere at small cost, oranges are always inexpensive at this time, cranberries, with their wonderful acid, are still in season, and lemons, which are invaluable, can be used ad libitum. Apples, too, can be obtained, and fortunate the housewife who has been so provident as to buy her spring apples in the midwinter.

There is an old proverb which runs like this, "Eat onions in May, no doctor to pay." This applies not only to onions, but to lettuce, spinach and, in fact, all the green foods that begin to appear about March 1. If choice is to be made between a porterhouse steak for dinner and no green salad and beef stew with salad choose the latter every time. It will be argued that the nutriment is the same, and as far as the meat is concerned it is. But the porterhouse steak does not have the minerals that the salad contains, and after it is eaten the whole body will not feel as light, buoyant and as generally satisfied as when the salad accompanies the meat.

As to the salad dressing, let it be very simple, preferably of olive oil cut by lemon juice, or if olive oil is too expensive, with corn or peanut oil, which can be obtained at one-third the price. As to the desserts, it is very easy to use fruit foundation and go work in the necessary acids in a disguised manner, for the family will balk at medicinal foods if forced to eat them.

Some Odor Culprits.

Some kitchen odors are savory and appetizing. Others are not. The chief culprits are cabbages, onions, fish and "boiling over."

Cabbages will not smell if a crust of bread is laid on the top when they are boiling. Better still, for this improves the cabbages, is a piece of charcoal.

Onions, barred in so many homes on account of the odor—a great pity, for onions are blood purifiers, complexion beautifiers and disease preventers—must be met with a counter odor. Buy some powdered cedar wood and sprinkle a pinch on the range. That's all. And, by the way, if onions are peeled under water or held under a running tap they will not smell, nor will your eyes smart.

Fish are often blamed for the odor which really arises from the stale butter or bad butter. If those causes are absent, then sprinkle the top of the range within "spluttering" distance with a layer of salt. When frying is done, sweep the salt into the fire. The salt absorbs all "splutterings" of grease and there is no smell.

If you have had to clean fish, your hands naturally smell unpleasant. Rub them with a little dry mustard.

"Boiling over" might be stopped by not filling saucepans and dishes quite so full.

Dandelion Salad.

Fresh dandelion leaves make a delicious salad. Place the greens in a large pan of cold water as soon as they come from the market and wash them thoroughly. Then shake off all the moisture and set in a very cold place until ready to serve. To make the salad, place the leaves in a chilled salad bowl, cover with chopped hard boiled eggs, a few shavings of young white onion, and moisten with a good French dressing.

Watercress may be used as a salad and, unlike many other greens, it will serve as an attractive garnish for many dishes. It is delicious and appetizing for a sandwich filling in place of the usual lettuce leaves. To dress a watercress salad, mix together a teaspoonful of celery salt, a saltspoonful of white pepper, a pinch of cayenne, half a teaspoonful of salt and one tablespoonful of lime juice. Then stir in gradually three tablespoonfuls of olive oil and two more tablespoonfuls of lime juice. Blend thoroughly and season with a teaspoonful of chopped chives and an equal amount of fresh tarragon leaves.

Lettuce, Endive and Romaine.

Lettuce, endive and romaine are all good salad greens. The two latter may also be cooked in several attractive forms, and the lettuce may form the basis of a cream of lettuce soup or may be boiled and chopped like spinach and enriched with a highly seasoned sauce.

Every housekeeper should realize the tonic properties of these spring salads, and some variety of salad should appear at least once daily in every well planned menu in spring. This salad should be simple and composed mainly of the greens themselves, although a combination of two or three vegetables is permissible. Avoid all rich ingredients, as boiled dressings and potatoes, and a well made French dressing that is both refreshing and healthful.

THIS YEAR'S ARBOR DAY

It Will Be One for Everybody in New York State

While the schools of the state have undertaken the work of carrying out the provisions of arbor day, it is suggested by the state college of agriculture at Cornell that everyone in New York should be interested in the matter; and even on school grounds it is suggested the whole community might well take a part in the planting of trees and the teachers should not be expected to provide the trees and the initiative for setting them out.

Dr. E. G. Cheney of the university of Minnesota, comments as follows:

"These trees are just as much a part of the schools equipment as the ink or the stove wood and should be as readily provided. He points out further that it should be remembered that arbor day is not alone for the planting of trees nor should the celebration of the day be confined to the public schools. There is many a man who can well afford to celebrate on his own home grounds and many a town which could be greatly improved if its citizens would celebrate the day in its streets."

A Tree for a Child

One of the professors at Cornell who has four children has planted a tree for each one on the day that the child was born. In case such birthdays fall in midsummer the tree planting could be deferred until the following fall. Each child, he says, then feels a proprietary right in that tree and takes very good care to see that it is not injured. The object lesson in respect to the single tree makes the child interested in all trees and much less likely to injure them by any acts of wanton vandalism. He commends the plan as one which has an educational value to children and parents alike.

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, April 21.—Aiming to have the State Constitution amended so that a better system of administering the department of highways may result, the New York State Automobile Association has starte a compaign to this end and its officers have already laid their plan befor the delegates.

The political control of the State highway department is struck at by automobile association in so many words. It asks that even thqugh such control cannot be entirely eliminated that it be minimized at least.

In arguing for the taking out of politics of the highway department this argument is used:

"The department is at the present time carrying out the largest public in the world and therefore we should be able to attract ti it the very highest grade of engineering talent in the world to take of the work for us.

"The great difficulty, however, in accomplishing this, is the constant changes in the administration of this department. In fact, it has reached a point where the chief heads of our highway department, during the past few years have been changed on an average of almost every year."

It is the contention of the New York State Automobile Association membership that since no business can be carried on in an efficient and successful manner under such circumstances, unfavorable results must follow the juggling of officials who are put in charge of the highway department.

"We ask," is the plea of the members of the association," that this subject be given careful consideration by the delegates to the Constitutional Convention and see if some plan cannot be developed and carried to completion whereby we will be able to attract to our State highway work the very highest grade of engineers and also the very highest grade of contractors. In our estimation the only way this can be accomplished and carried on permanently is to place the highway department entirely outside of the control of the various political parties, if such a thing is possible, and to also make the position of highways one of permanency."

It is the opinion of the members of the New York State Automobile Association that a highway commissioner should have not less than a six year term and that the salary should be sufficiently large to make the office attractive to men high in the engineering world.

That the past history of the highway department should be an object lesson for the future, is also dwelt upon and the fact is brought out that the four highway commissioners who have held office in an equal number of years were denied the opportunity to familiarize themselves with the duties of their office.

Another point which is made is that the peopleo f the State have awakened to the economical value of good roads and the prediction is made that when the appropriations which have thus far been voted by the people for the construction of improved highways has been expende, that approval of the proposition to raise additional funds will be quick in being given.

SHAW ECONOMY

That's What Comptroller Calls Mitchel's Ideas Upon the Whitman Administration

Albany, April 21.—After devoting more than a month to the study of the state's financial condition, studying data gathered at first hand by a corps of expert accountants from his own office working on the books of the state comptroller, Comptroller Prendergast of New York city openly joins issue with Mayor Mitchel who has been criticizing the financial policy of the state administration.

"If Mayor Mitchel's accountants had carried their analysis beyond a simple comparsion of the various appropriation bills this year and last," says Mr. Prendergast, "They would have found that the present Legislature has had to supply again and again items which Gov. Glynn wantonly cut from last year's budget. These are items of current State expense, which no policy of economy short of absolute neglect would have eliminated. That the former Governor acted with an eye to the political wind is obvious. He is personally responsible for a very considerable part of the ifficulty in which the State now finds itself."

Comptroller Prendergast sums up his findings in the following forcible statement:

"The one real fact in the whole series of charges as I ascertain it to be from the exhaustive information I have before me is that the appropriation accounts are in the main reasonable and that their size is attributable to no one person or set of persons now in power at Albany. The one responsible is Martin H. Glynn, and the one responsible fact is Glynn's sham economy."

Ought to Paint

I ought to have painted last year, but I hated to pay $2 a gallon.

I've got to paint this year; it'll take a little more paint; I suppose 1 gallon in 10; and a little more work, I suppose 1 day in 10.

My job would have cost last year about $50; it is going to cost this year $55.

$5 gone. I suppose it'll be the same again, if I wait again.

What if paint goes down to $1.75 a gallon? $2.50 on the job!

I shan't wait; what a fool I was!

CUT IN TOBACCO DUE TO THE WAR

Those who enjoy imported Havana cigars will have to pay more for their favorite smokes. Manufacturers have increased prices from 5 to 10 per cent and many wholesalers and retailers have followed suit, while others are planning to make advances. The man who smokes will have to pay from 1 to 4 cents more for his cigars, according to the brand he smokes.

The necessity for the increase is attributed to the great shortage of the 1915 crop; that is, tobacco planted in 1914 and cut in 1915. IIn addition to this, it is said, the European war figures to a large degree, by reason of the great slackening of orders from the countries now embroiled in the big fuss. The falling off of European customers resulted in a reduction of manufacturers' forces and overhead charges by reason of the decreased demand. This produced a manufacturing situation, it is explaimed, that helped when the 1915 crop of tobacco failed to advance the cost: The fact that men in some cities with stocks of 1914 tobacco on their hands are holding it for higher prices is also a contributing element in forcing prices up.

Pipe smokers, however, have already been affecte by the war tax on tobacco. While the prices have not soared on this line, manufacturers are cutting down on the weight. One tobacco dealer said today that where the Bagley in American Tobacco companies, two large producers, had pound cans of certain brands at a certain price, these companies are now offering 14 and seven ounce cans respectively, for the same price as formerly asked for pound and half-pound tins.

In Wheeling Retail Grocers Experience Greater Profits by Selling Staples to Farmers for Cash Than They Would by the Sale of Vegetables to the Consumer

Do the Citizens and Taxpayers Realize the Full Meaning of Senator Brown's Bill to Amend City Charter? Public Sentiment Publicly Expressed May Secure Results Before Too Late.

The Brown bill is not to go through without the attention and approval of the Fulton taxpayers. There will probably be a meeting, open to the public, at the City Hall before the bill passes, at which time objections to the bill will be heard.

This will be the great opportunity for the taxpayers of the city to learn which councilmen have the interests of the people at heart. After all the arguments pro and con, are heard, the Council will vote on the bill and if it is passed another load will be added to the already over-burdened budget for next year.

Briefly, the bill proposes an amendment to the city charter which will empower the present council to set a salary for the next mayor and council.

If any taxpayer can see the slightest reason for this bill, his views should be given prominence in this paper. In the first place, the Mayor of this city has no regular office hours; has no office; must be hunted up if anyone wishes to confer with him. There are few cities the size of Fulton which have salaried mayors. In those few cities, the mayor is at his office for some prescribed hours in the day, during which time he attends to city business. The same is true of the aldermen.

And the taxpayer can soliloquize over these few points:—

1. Who originated the Brown bill? Surely not Senator Brown, who is not a resident of this city, nor a taxpayer.

2. Who has the right to originate such a bill and then try to rush it through? The bill is already through both houses at Albany and it was presented for the first time one week ago. Everything at Albany now is in the hands of the Rules Committee.

3. When was there ever a public demand for this bill?

If the city were not in debt now almost to the constitutional limit there might be some excuse for the bill, but with conditions as they are, it is certain that few taxpayers will see the slightest merit in it.

Therefore, Taxpayers, see your councilman. Tell him what you think about the bill. He is representing you. Tell him that the last time a charter amendment was "submarined" through the Legislature, its supporters in the council were shelved at the next election. History repeats itself. The people will remember these things at the polls next fall, and those who act directly in opposition to the wishes of their constituents will have cause to remember that fact, and perhaps regret it.

Germans to Drive At Ypres and Yser

London, Thursday.—The Germans are making terrific attacks on the British for the recapture of Hill No. 60, near Zillebeke, which is of great strategic value, and counter attacks are being made continuously. There is every indication that one of the greatest battles is developing in this district.

For several days the Germans have been hurrying reinforcements there, and all communications with Holland has been closed.

The intention of the General Staff has been to attempt an offensive before the Allies began their great forward movement, but the plan was disorganized by the unexpected reverse at Zillebeke, in which they lost heavily.

Since Monday there have been general transfers of troops holding the line from Dixmude to Menin, and fresh troops from Germany now occupy the greater part of the position facing the British. The troops who lost the hill at Zillebeke were sent to Roulers on Tuesday and are now on their way to East Prussia in disgrace. Austrian troops also have arrived in Flanders, but their dispositions are not known.

Messages from Eastern Belgium state that all the reserves quartered in the vicinity of Hasselt have left for the west. Brabant likewise has been denuded of infantry divisions, reserve artillery brigades and heavy howitzers. The German air wing likewise has been reinforced this week by many new aeroplanes to replace its recent losses.

Although brilliant and successful, the action southeast of Ypres, which ended in the capture of Hill No. 60, was a minor affair compared with the great battle of Neuve Chapelle, but its results promise

CITY'S PUBLIC MARKET MAY BE BUILT UPON THE WHEELING SCALE

A communication received by the Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce yesterday tells of the remarkable success of the combination market and auditorium in Wheeling, W. Va.

R. B. Naylor, Secretary of the Wheeling Board of Trade, Wheeling, writes: "Our public market is proving quite a success, practically every stall is filled and the auditorium is in constant use for all sorts of things, ranging from union labor conferences, wrestling matches and hardware displays to prohibition meetings, Melba concerts and G. A. R. re-unions. The stock is earning 6 per cent. right along and it is expected that this will increase."

In 1821 Wheeling built its first market house on a piece of ground donated to the city between 10th and 11th streets. The market was 40x599. The old market become rickety and the Board of Trade appointed a committee to see what could be done. As the city had no auditorium a proposition was made for one in the plans submitted. The committee reported to the city that if the latter leased the ground to a company for a rental of $12.00 per year, a building costing between $140 and $160,000 would be put up, with the agreement that the city could buy the shares of stock at par and that the stockholders should not get more than 6 per cent. per annum. The residue over and above 6 per cent. maintenances to revert tothe city. The shares were sold at $50,00 each. $160,000 was expended on the building, which includes an auditorium 180 feet long, 50 feet wide and 35 feet high. The auditorium has a platform in the center at one side. The balcony extends the full width of one side and both ends. The seating capacity is 2500—600 of the seats being in the balcony. Entrances to the auditorium and balcony are by runways, one at each end. There is an arcade through the center of the first floor, 19 feet wide. The city furnishes electricity and water free and the building is exempt from taxation. The stalls are occupied by gardeners, fruit dealers, butchers, bakers, produce dealers, etc. There is one restaurant occupying three stalls for the market people and the general public. The market is open every day, except Sunday.

The first floor of the building is 506 feet long with public street 36 feet wide cutting through the center. In the auditorium the first floor market space has 64 rentable stalls 12x12 feet and 7x12 feet, each independent of one another. The partitions are sectional and can be removed to accommodate those who want two or more stalls. At night the front of each stall can be closed and locked. Under the south wing there are cellars 12 feet square for such stall renters who want to store produce. In this wing there is the heating apparatus for the auditorium and offices on the second floor.

In the south wing on the second floor are the offices and assembly room of the board of trade, business men's association, municipal league, and retail grocers' association and toilet rooms for men and women.

The north wing has a skating rink and dance hall, 40x80 feet. The auditorium is free for county and city meetings when no admission is charged.

The annual income is between $15,000 and $16,000. The expense of maintenance is about $5,000. The interest on the investment at 6 per cent. amounts to $9,600.00. The surplus between $4,000 and $140,000 reverted to the city in the first year.

In speaking of it Secretary Heydecker stated Wheeling's slogan is "Wheeling means business," and this is an evidence of it, but Wheeling does not mean business any more than Fulton does, and what Wheeling has accomplished in this connection can be accomplished in Fulton on a corresponding scale.

The market and auditorium contemplated by the Chamber of Commerce resembles in many respects the one described above. It includes the store front on Oneida street, the stalls with sectional partitions in the inside of the market and the auditorium all on a scale sufficient to meet Fulton's needs. It is significant that in most of the cities where municipal markets have been in operation they have received the cordial co-operation of the retail produce merchants and grocers who have found that their cash sales of staple goods to the farmers in the market have netted them greater profit than they would have been able to get from the sale of vegetables. Not only have the markets been a benefit to the retailers but to the citizens in reducing the cost of living from 25 to 50 per cent., but they have in many cases shown a substantial profit to the city.

"Truth-Seeker" Would Have Facts and Figures Replace Questions and No Answers; Protests Against Further Use of Evening Times Columns as Medium of Bringing to Light, Questions of Vital Interest.

To the Fulton Evening Times:

Various communications have recently appeared in your columns asking information from certain city officials respecting increase of assessments and whether the pay of a certain stenographer comes from the city funds.

The Times is a public organ and instead of filling its columns with unanswered inquiries why not give the public the information which is sought to be elicited from city officials by furnishing your readers with full information regarding the questions that have been propounded in your columns?

If the city is paying $60 per month for a stenographer for any of the city officials why not ascertain the truth respecting the matter and publish the actual facts? They should be easily obtained from the public records of the city.

If there has been an increase of property assessments within certain restricted portions of the city why not let your readers know? [illegible] information respecting these matters which will prove of more than ordinary interest to your readers, I believe, and you should be able to give the public some specific information as to whether there is any real basis in fact for the many inquiries which have been given publicity through The Times. The inquiries which you have made are, as they now stand unanswered, in the nature of a serious reflection upon certain of our city officials, who for reasons unknown to the public have failed to make answer to them; and if there is no merit to the inquiries the public should know the truth and The Times in the future should not, in my opinion, open its columns to those who evidently seek to discredit through an imputation that may be produced by a cleverly worded inquiry.

On the contrary, if there is found to be solid basis for these inquiries, The Times should fearlessly give its readers the truth respecting the matters which have been made the subjct of such extended inquiry.

Germans Hurled Back In the Carpathians

By Frederick Bennett

London, Thursday.—The counter attack of Genera Litzinger's Bavarian army against the Russian left wing in the Carpathians position now has been definitely stopped. This attempted German advance northward has been the only serious threat the Russians have had to meet since they crossed the main ridge.

"Generally the situation in the southern campaign now is very favorable to the Russians. There are signs of discord between General Litzinger and Archduke Freidrich, who is the nominal commander of the entire Austro-German combination. The Germans are ready to sacrifice Hungary, at least economically, by fighting a series of rear guard actions and drawing the Russians down toward the middle Danube. This would relieve the Silesian flank, where great German forces now are being deployed from Cracow, chiefly along the Dunajetz.

"Field Marshal von Hindenburg retains in nearly its full strength this extreme northern army, which attempted to reach the Niemen in February along the borders of East Prussia, but he has sent great numbers from the winter positions on the Narew, Bzura and Ravka rivers southward to join the Austrians on the Pilitca and Nida, making a continuous and strongly held line from Piotorkow to Cracow and southward. This region also is threatened by the Russians and may be the scene of a great battle before it is possible to move further south from the lower slopes of the Carpathians.

"The Russians everywhere have suspended operations until the spring floods have subsided and conditions are favorable for manoeuvring.

"General Seliwanoff, the victor of he siege of Perzmyl, who has

INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION

"If boys and girls are trained merely in literary accomplishments, to the total exclusion of industrial, manual and technical training, the tendency is to unfit them for industrial work and to make them reluctant to go into it, or unfitted to do well if they do go into it."
—Theodore Roosevelt.

We are all agreed that some radical change is needed in our public school system. Business men, and employers especially, feel keenly the dearth of skilled workers. How shall we bring about the new school? What shall we eliminate from our present course of studies that is already overcrowded? How shall we make the country see that the thing we advocate is a vital need of every boy and girl and not a measure to furnish strike-breakers? How can we best focus the educational though quickly upon the needs of our times, how point out the solution? Shall it be the separate trade school in the larger cities, or do all children, everywhere—on the farm, in the small city as well as in the large centers—need vocational training? If separate trade schools are to be established, who will choose those that are to attend them in preference to the high schools leading to college? Cannot work be made organically a part of the course of studies, and every public school be broadened so as to take in all children, giving the manual training that will fit them for some manual work and the few such knowledge as will enable them to enter college? How can work and vocational training be made organically a part of our public school course of study?

A new theory of education is required. A century and a half of persistent effort and four generations of thought on the part of educational leaders have been spent in building up the methods by which reading, writing and arithmetic, our existing school subjects, can best be taught. Many hundreds of normal schools are preparing teachers to carry on their work in the existing type of school. These teachers, self-sacrificing as a body, have neither the training nor the broad experience needed by the new school men.

The foregoing phrases is the expression of the Interlaken Movement. The thought is directly applicable to each and every community interested in its educational facilities. Fulton may not be excepted; to grow sufficiently to handle our problems correctly, earnest discussion and exchange of opinion is most necessary.

GOOD HUMOR IN BUSINESS

Business is a matter of judgment. When enmity comes in at the door, judgment flies out at the window.

Any business which is worth doing, benefits both parties. Commerce is the greatest of all civilizing agencies because people must be friends if they are to do business together, and friendship makes for peace.

In many parts of the country the boards of trade of the cities and towns are inviting the farmers to become members. This is a good thing for both farmers and the business men who are not farmers.

But why should we wait for towns to give us the benefit of boards of trade activities? Why not organize farmers' boards of trade? Such boards would work on marketing problems, freight problems, and other rural business matters. These are quite as important as the business problems of the towns, and need as careful management. Incidentally, they could co-operate with the town organizations for the smoothing out of the friction which must occasionally occur between the producer and the consumer, and the middleman sandwiched in between the two.

There is a good deal of misunderstanding between rural and town business committees. There is ignorance on each side of the problems of the other.

The best thing which could happen for almost any neighborhood would be a careful study by the farmers of the business of retailers and commission merchants, and by city and town business men of the problems of the farmers. Such an exchange of views would finally show each side how better to serve the other. And any business which is not based on mutual service should be changed or abandoned.

As a matter of fact, there is mutual service in all business which has lasted long. That is why it has lasted.—Farm and Fireside.

LAWYER BACK IN ASYLUM

Justice De Angelis's Brother Again Loses Own Plea

Severin E. De Angelis, brother of Justice P. C. De Angelis, of the Supreme Court, in Utica, and who has been in court on more writs of habeas corpus than Harry K. Thaw, was again denied a jury trial as to his sanity by Judge Hendrick, of the Supreme Court. De Angelis was committed to Matteawan in 1907, after shooting a man during a quarrel over a woman. Since obtaining the latest writ he has been in the Tombs awaiting a hearing.

De Angelis, who is a lawyer, presented his case in person.

Justice Hendrick denied the application for the trial on the ground that the prisoner was not ready to go on with it. De Angelis became much excited over the decision of the court and delivered a long tirade. Superintendent Kieb of the Matteawan asylum took the prisoner back to the institution.

Accident Case Appealed

An appeal to the Appellate Division has been filed by the plaintiff in the action of Lucrezia Dragona, as administrator of the estate of Rafaelo Dragona vs. Francis T. Donovan of Oswego, from the judgment of Supreme Court at the March term. The action was brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's husband, who was struck and killed by an automobile, driven by the defendant in the East river road, near Minetto, October 30 last. The jury on the trial found no cause of action and the costs amounting to $64.11 were taxed against the plaintiff. A motion for a new trial was denied.

Opinions

Savings Decreased

The thrifty depositors in savings banks in this state did not increase their bank accounts during the year 1914. They earned $60,000,000 in interest and drew out half of that earned money, so that outside of interest earnings they really ran behind fi30,000,000. The report is not so bad considering the depression and lack of work. The rural banks patronized by farmers made substantial gains, but the banks in the interior cities dependent upon the deposits of factory workers show a falling off. In turn there was a reduced lending capacity which means fewer homes built or purchased. The city with a rich and fertile country surrounding it has felt the dull times least. The farmers are the best customers of the automobile factories. It is amusing in view of the relative prosperity of farmers and city folk to find federal and state governments concerned about affording credit to farmers. The tillers of the soil own a lot of them oney which is running the industrial enterprises of the country.—Watertown Standard.

Prophets "Unanointed."

In his Commoner Mr. Bryan takes Rear Admiral Peary to task for his prediction that one hundred years hence the United States will occupy the entire North American Continent, incidentally dubbing him an "unanointed" prophet. "One takes great risks when he sets aside the mental limitations which restrain ordinary mortals and claims to know things that are unknowable," Mr. Bryan sagely adds.

Mr. Bryan took exactly such great risks in 1896 when he confidently preright over the precipice if it ignored dicted that this country would go his warning against the "folly" of adopting the gold standard. Experience teaches.

The President spoke for the United States when he declared in his Mobile speech that this nation would never acquire another foot of territory by conquest," explains Mr. Bryan to confound Rear Admiral Peary's prophecy.

President McKinley said the same thing before, during and immediately after the war with Spain—then along came Colonel William ennings Bryan, of the Third Nebraska, infantry, and by his persuasive eloquence induced the United States Senate to ratify the then pending Treaty of Paris that gave us the Philippines.—New York Herald.

A Popular Misconception

It ought to be clearly understood that the Supreme Court in dismissing the appeal from a decision denying the application for a writ of habeas corpus in the case of Leo M. Frank of Atlanta did not in any way or manner pass upon the question of Frank's innocence or guilt. Nothing is more common than the erroneous impression that when the Supreme Court hands down an opinion in any case it must necessarily decide that one of the parties to the action was right and the other wrong. In respect to the action immediately before the court this is true, but it is very often not at all true of the merits of the original suit out of which the appeal to the Supreme Court arose. In its opinion in the Frank case, after discussing the question whether the jurisdiction of the trial court could be conclusively determined against the prisoner by a decision of the Supreme Court of Georgia, the court said:

> But this does not mean that that decision may be ignored or disregarded. To do this, as we have already pointed out, would be not merely to disregard comity, but to ignore the essential question before us, which is not the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, or the truth of any particular fact asserted by him, but whether the State, taking into view the enitre course of its procedure, has deprived him of due process of law.

The Supreme Court was not concerned with the guilt or innocence of Frank, but with the regularity of the procedure in the State courts. The question before it was whether he had been deprived of any of his rights under the Constitutional guarantee of due process of law. It decided that he had not. The question of guilt stands just where it did when the trial Judge declared that the evidence had not convinced him that Frank was guilty.—New York Times.

HOW DID YOU DIE?

By Edmond Vance Cooke

Did you tackle the trouble that came your way,
With a resolute heart and cheerful?
Or hide your face from the light of day,
With a craven soul and fearful?
Oh, a trouble's a ton, or a trouble's an ounce,
Or a trouble is what you make it;
And it isn't the fact that you're hurt that counts,
But only, how did you take it?

You are beaten to earth! Well, well, what's that?
Come up with a smiling face;
It's nothing against you to fall down flat,
But to lie there—that's disgrace.
The harder you're thrown, why the higher you bounce,
Be proud of your blackened eye!
It isn't the fact that you're licked that counts;
It's how did you fight and why?

And though you be done to the death, what then?
If you battled the best you could,
If you played your part in the world of men,
Why, the Critic will call it good.
Death comes with a crawl, or comes with a pounce,
But whether he's slow or spry,
It isn't the fact that you're dead that counts,
But only, how did you die?

PEACE DAY IS MAY 18

American School Peace League to Direct Exercises

For more than ten years the schools of the United States have been observing May 18 as Peace Day. The purpose is to instill into the minds of young people the great laws of brotherhood an to emphasize the American appeal of peace through justice.

To make the exercises profitable and uniform throughout the country the American School Peace League has prepared material for the use of schools and has sent literature dealing with the subject in answer to thousands of requests, says "The Boston Globe."

This year the celebration will emphasize the interdependence of nations and point to the time when citizens of every nation and members of every race shall live together in mutual helpfulness and when mutual destruction will be superseded by harmony an work for the common good.

The School Peace League hopes that every teacher in the country will read the literature on the subject, especially that prepared for Peace Day this year, which can be had in any amount.

In Massachusetts every school superintendent has received a communication urging him to favor the movement.

War: Pathos and Humor

Paris, April 22.—The invaders would not have been so charitably disposed to a French girl had they known that for three weeks by dint of all sorts of courageous ruses she had been feeding, concealing and keeping from their clutches 10 English soldiers.

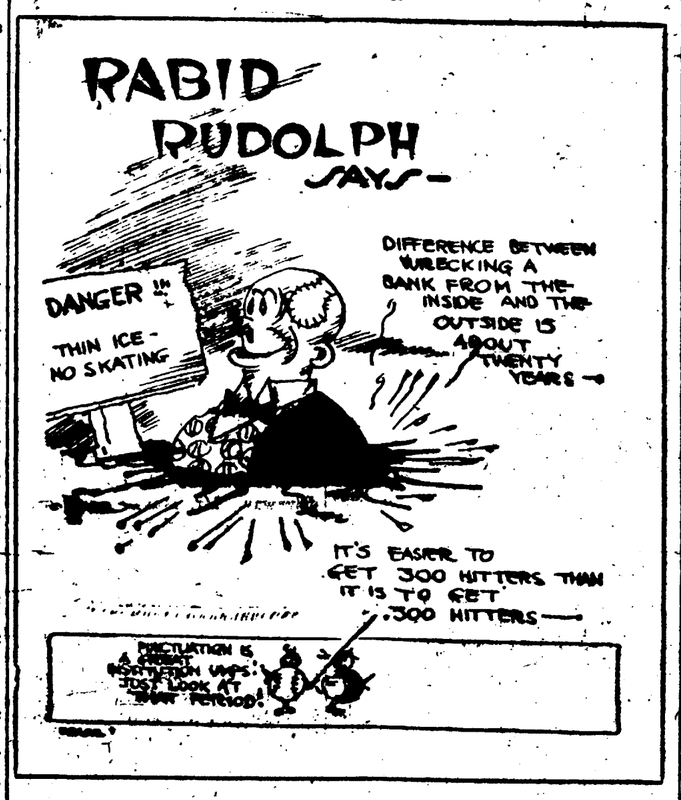
She was a servant in a girls' boarding school. When the war broke out the pupils all returned to their homes and she was left alone, for her only companion was an old deaf and partially paralyzed woman. When the Germans entered the town they went thru the girls' school from attic to basement, collecting all the linen beddings they could lay their hands on. For some reason or other they did not instal their wounded in the main building, but in the chapel annex.

These wounded the girl tended with the utmost devotion, in the first place, because she is tender-hearted, and in the second because she had every reason to desire to stand well with the invaders. For her conscience was not quite clear. She knew that down in the grotto at the end of the school gardens she had concealed 10 "Tommies," who had come hungry, footsore and worn out just one hour before the Germans.

"They will be here in a moment," the English officer had said, not willing to put the girl in danger.

"Never mind," she said, "I'll hide you somewhere and afterwards we shall see." So she took them to the grotto. But the quarters were narrow, damp and intensely uncomfortable. Her heart bled for her proteges. Then she had an idea, the very daring of which was to ensure it success. She installed her 10 "Tommies" in the unoccupied top floor of the school itself. Then came the question of the commissariat. At first she gave up her own ration to her 10 refugees—but that was not enough among so many. So she had to collect from her friends and relatives in the village here a piece of bread and there a vegetable.

When the Germans, seeing her suspiciously laden basket, asked her for whom were all these provisions, she would answer, "For your wounded in the chapel." Better still, she appointed herself cook for the German ambulance and in this capacity was able to pick up all sorts of broken victuals, so that her English were in no danger of starving.



But English soldiers do not live by food alone—they like their tobacco. Now, according to the regulations of the invaders each inhabitant of the place had the right to but two sous' worth of tobacco a day. She found a way to evade this regulation and to keep her 10 in smokables. She organized an army of boys who 10 or 20 times a day would purchase at different shops the meager pennyworth.

But there was always the danger that the hiding place of the 10 might be discovered by some German. Fortunately, their dormitory communicated by trap doors with the ground floor of the building and precisely with a room on that ground floor which gave out on the garden. So she procured a long rope with which she advised her prisoners to practice a sort of fire drill. She was enthusiastic over the results.

"Just imagine," she said to her interviewer, "that my Englishmen after a few attempts were able, the whole 10 of them, to strap up their haversacks, get ready for all eventualities and slide down the rope noiselessly in less than five minutes."

But these desperate measures were not necessary. On September 24 the Germans temporarily evacuated the place and the 10 English soldiers were able to regain the allied lines in safety. They have all given her their names and addresses and sworn that she must come to England when the war is over, where they promise her a royal welcome. One of the grateful 10 is a nobleman and a relative of King George—Lord Smith is the name given, but never mind. The girl left the town only when the Germans were about to re-enter it, and after the town had been subjected to a fierce bombardment for many days.

GARDEN IF YOU WOULD BE HAPPY

The calendar says spring, the birds sing a spring song, the foliage is waiting to bud and burst forth and the development of everything is lurking just for a day of warmth and growth." So says a writer in "The Bucyrus (Ohio) Journal." It's waking up, the spring season. It is full of promise, of abundant harvest. We are going to have sunshine and rain, we are going to have gentle winds and general conditions which insure a satisfactory growing season.

Garden spading or ploughing must be taken up before there can be any crop grown. The kitchen garden that is properly planted and cultivated will bring forth ample returns to justify the labor expended thereon. It is foolish to permit the small garden to grow into disuse. Grass is a desirable feature of the landscape, but we aren't the kind of animal that can live on grass. Beautiful surroundings are of advantage æsthetically, but physically they do not sustain the inner man.

How many of us remember the old-time family garden, where the necessities of life were grown without much labor and with a great deal of satisfaction? Going into some parts of the town we see great stretches of ground where once blossomed productive potato patches and tomato vines now given over to beautiful lawns. It all looks good to the eye and is very desirable as a feature of community attractiveness, but the absence of the vegetable garden is promoting a condition where the young men fail to get the "exercise" the require and are deprived of the pleasure of raising beets and cabbages.

This is going to be a year in which the kitchen garden would help many a family to greater economy in living, and the satisfaction of having the best vegetables for the family table will be sufficient justification for the effort of garden making, even if the frugality of it did not appeal.

The family that raises its own vegetables will have more satisfaction and greater abundance at its meals.

Take a pencil and figure how much value a garden crop, using intensively the waste places, would produce in a season. Take as a basis of the figuring the advantage of having the young men hoeing potatoes and hilling up the beans, and figure how much waste time could be profitably utilized. Take any part of the town, and you will see where waste places could be turned into fruitful gardens.

One season of experiment would prove the eadvantage of the garden plan. Many families would enjoy the experience, and even the drones in the hive would enjoy the products of the home place. Planting something and helping it to grow is creating value out of muscle and building manhood through experience. It's worth trying.

THE DARDANELLES.

A Strait Famed in Mythology as Well as in History.

The Dardanelles and the Hellespont are names for the same thing. At its narrowest place the strait is less than a mile wide. On one side is Asia, and on the other is Europe.

The strait is famous in mythology. The pre-Christian incursions of barbarians into Europe often were halted there.

Xerxes and Alexander ferried across. One determined to destroy the civilization of Greece and the other to diffuse Grecian culture over the whole world.

Crusaders went back and forth over this strait. The Roman empire of the east commanded it even after the Mohammedans had established themselves at Adrianople.

By treaty and by consent and by her situation Turkey was given control of this strait.

Strange to say, in modern times the first ship of war that ever passed through flew the flag of America. Rainbridge ran by the guns of the forts and unfurled the stars and stripes in front of Constantinople, and in that city he and the American crew were elaborately entertained.

For many centuries Russia has looked with eager eyes for the control of the shores along this strait.—Memphis Commercial Appeal.

Matty Says Boston Can't Repeat.

Christy Mathewson says he does not think that the Boston Braves will repeat this year because most of them bought automobiles last fall with their world's series money, and he predicts that these folks will be thinking more about the price of gasoline next summer than they will about winning ball games for Boston and Stallings.

Red Sox Fear Only Detroit.

Mike Finn, last year manager of the Memphis club and now attached to the Detroit payroll as a scout, has come out with the declaration that the Boston club already has it figured that the pennant is all but in its grasp and that it believes it has only Detroit to fear to assure this result.

Costs of Milk Production

That at least one-eighth of the dairy herds in the state may return an annual net loss to their owners, is indicated in a bulletin just published by the Cornell university agricultural experiment station.

The study upon which the figures are based was carried on in Jefferson county in response to a general demand for information on the cost of producing milk. Year-long records were obtained for 53 dairy herds in the county, which is considered to have more favorable conditions than the average of counties in which the dairy industry is important.

Facts were gathered about the quantity and value of milk and butter-fat produced, the costs of feed and equipment, the profit or losses, and various other items. While 7 of the 53 herds were kept at an aggregate loss of more than $1300 or an average loss of $190 apiece, the average profit on all herds was 31 cents on the hundred pounds of milk; and the average net profit on each cow in a year was $20.39. These figures indicate that the farmer may make, under favorable conditions, a little less than two-thirds of a cent on a quart of milk.

Cows Above Average.

The bulletin states, however, that most of the cows studied were above the average in production, which resulted in an economy of production; further that the food costs were not much more than half of what they would be in some less favored parts of the state, and that other costs were from twenty to forty per cent. less than they might be elsewhere.

Some "Lady Boarders."

The principal cause of loss in dairying is the keeping of cows which don't pay for the food they eat; they have come to be known as "lady boarders" and serve their most profitable use, according to the dairy experts, when converted into meat and hides.

The one way to insure their elimination from the herd, the bulletin says, is to determine the yield of each cow by weight of milk, and by the use of the Babcock test for the butter-fat content. The formation of cow-testing associations is urged upon dairy farmers, and details of their organization and purposes are given. It is announced that copies of this bulletin, number 357, in the Cornell experiment station series, entitled "The Cost of Milk Production," may be secured free on request by residents of New York.

Growing Vegetables for Home Canning

Modern processes have so simplified the canning of vegetables that it is now possible for any housewife to put up her own supply for winter. However, the best vegetables are necessary if the canning is to be successful, and if the canned foods are expected to be of the highest grade. These statements are made by the New York state college of agriculture in a recently published reading-course lesson for the farm home entitled "Raising Vegetables for Canning." This lesson tells how to grow beans, beets, sweet corn, peas, spinach, and tomatoes, and recommends the best varieties to plant in this state for canning. It gives also the methods of controlling the most injurious insect pests and diseases. It outlines the types of soil best suited to each of the crops, together with methods of preparation.

Any resident of New York State may obtain this reading-course lesson by applying to the state college of agriculture, at Cornell university, Ithaca, New York.

ARCTIC FROST BITES.

And the Popular Error That Rubbing With Snow Helps Them.

The idea that when your face or any other part of your body begins to freeze you must thaw it out with snow is declared to be a superstition by Vilhjalmur Stefansson. Few things could be more absurd, he says, and yet this is a superstition that has been carried with many an arctic explorer through long experience in the north. Tales are told of how even the application of snow failed to relieve the freezing, and these are taken as indications of the severity of the case instead of proof that, as a matter of fact, the snow only assists the freezing process. Any high school pupil, Stefansson says, could tell on offhand what would happen if liquid air were applied to a man's cheek or nose. Of course the part would freeze instantly. Snow has the same though less rapid effect.

The whole secret of dealing with frost bites of the face in arctic travel, he says, is to keep the hands warm and to run the warm hand over the face every few minutes to see if any part of it is frozen. Usually, also, one can keep oneself fairly well informed about the condition of one's face by wrinkling it and "making faces." If a spot of skin or cheek the size of a twenty-five cent piece becomes stiff one can always detect it by making a grimace. Then all one has to do is to take one's warm hand out of one's mitten and press it to the frozen spot for a moment until the whiteness and stiffness are gone.—Indianapolis News.

Mrs. G. A. Washburn of Jersey City Claims to be Person Sought by Attorney

The following letter was received at the Times office this morning:

"Fulton Times:

"I noticed in your paper that a Mr. Sid M. Van Wyck wished to find the decendants of Moses Luddington of Fulton. My mother's father was Nathaniel Ludington, brother of Moses Ludington.

"Mrs. G. A. Washburn,
101 Sip Ave, Jersey City, N. J."

Mrs. Washburn is the only heir of Moses Ludington to make her identity known thus far. Although the amount of the estate could not be learned from the letter of Attorney Van Wyck of San Francisco, it is probably one of large dimensions as Ludington was a well-to-do man when he left this city and it is very probable that he accumulated further wealth in the West.

When the Times first received the letter of Attorney VanWyck inquiries were made here regaring Ludington in an effort to ascertain whether or not any of his heirs were still living in these parts. Information given by an old resident inclosed the fact that he left this city in the late 50's and went west. He was engaged in the contracting business during his stay here, in partnership with Thomas Keeler, who died some years ago in Mexico. Both men were considered well off here.

Mrs. Washburn's communication will be forwarded at once to Attorney Van Wyck and it will probably be necessary for her to go to the coast in the near future. Mrs. Washburn has relatives and friends in this city who will be glad to learn of her good fortune. She may be addressed after May 1 at 101 Sip Ave., Jersey City. N. J.

GOLD FILLED PURSE

Pastor's Wife Given Substantial Token of Appreciation of Friends

Last night's reception given by the members and congregation of the State St. M. E. church to the pastor and his family, the Rev. and Mrs. H. D. Holmes, was one of the pleasantest of pleasant events.

The reception lasted from 8 until 10 o'clock and 200 persons were present to felicitate the pastor and his amiable wife, and as well to congratulate themselves upon the return to another pastorate of the good people who have labored hard for the welfare of their church of activity.

The church orchestra was also present, enlivening the evening with the sweet music and popular airs.

Mrs. Orin Bogardus made a pleasing address of welcome directed to Mrs. Holmes and at the conclusion of her remarks presented the pastor's wife with a purse containing gold coins. Mrs. Bogardus said that the token was but a small appreciation of reward for the earnest, painstaking work performed by Mrs. Holmes in the past in behalf of the church choir and the various young people's societies.

That Mrs. Bogardus' words received the endorsement of the entire audience was evidenced by the applause

In a general way that bulwark of strength in church work, E. R. Redhead, told in words full of the commendatory spirit of what has been accomplished by the pastor and his wife during the time they have lived in Fulton.

COMMISSION FORM URGED

Plan Outlined to Watertown's Business Men; W. J. Shepard Spoke In Its Favor

Watertown, Thursday.—At Wednesay evening's meeting of the Rotary Club, W. J. Shepard addressed the membership upon the all absorbing topic, commission form of government. He said:

'Our present system of city government," said Mr. Shepard, "has been a failure. Experts have estimated that under the present system between 45 and 60 per cent. of the amount paid for taxes is wasted. The chamber of commerce has considered carefully the question of the commission plan, and is ready to recommend its adoption.

"This plan provides for a submission of the question whether or not the city wants the form of government, to the people on the petition of ten per cent. of the voters of the city, which would mean in Watertown between 500 and 600 voters. The plan provides for five members of the commission, including the mayor of the city. The mayor has a veto, but votes like other members of the commission. Under this plan a city manager is selected. At the present time there are 18 to 20 cities in this country which have a city manager. The adoption of the city manager system is simply a variation of the commission plan.

"One advantage of the commission form is that ward limits are done away with in the election of the members of the council. In the present plan there is no provision for the referendum, the initiative and the recall. Under the city management plan all the executive and administrative duties of the city are in charge of the manager who reports every week to the commission. All of the executive functions are taken away from the council, but the council can discharge him when he proves himself unworthy of the office, although they cannot interfere with his uties as an executive manager.

"The debts of the various municipalities of the United States, are greater than the United States debt and the debts of all the states in the Union combined. And the debts in the cities are increasing at a rate of $100,000,000 a year. The time has come when we should put our feet on the politicians that are spoiling good government. Galveston wiped out her debt of $400,000 by a commission form; Houston her debt of $200,000; Des Moines her debt of $184,000 in one year, and Haverhill, Mass., her debt of $79,900.

"You can just bet on this, gentlemen: You will get one of two results from commission government. Either you will lower your tax rate or you will get more for your money. The plan is growing rapidly in the east, and would work wonders in Watertown. We could get the initiative, the referendum and the recall when we need it. We may not be certain of eliminating all of the politicians at first, but the machinery for doing away with the politicians is much better."

The question of the waste in municipal governments by graft then came up for discussion.

"I do not like to state this fact," said Mr. Shepard, "but now that the question has come before us I will say a few words about graft in Watertown. The man who preceded me as city chamberlain grafted between $20,000 and $30,000 or money, belonging to this city, but the city did not lose, because a kind father paid the amount over to the city. And there has been graft since then, as you know.

"But Watertown is better than a good many cities. Some are rotten, but Watertown is bad only in spots. Politics an business do not always work well together. We can keep them separate in the cities, in Watertown. The very meat of commission government is that the responsibility is fixed on certain persons."

Judge George W. Reeves then asked Mr. Shepard how commission government would insure the election of responsible commissioners. Mr. Shepard replied that there were many men in Watertown who would be willing to undertake the task at the salary of $750 a year, explaining that they would not be hampered by politics, and that their municipal duties would not interfere with their business, and that as a rule they would have to meet only one evening a week.

SUES SPEAKER'S BROTHER

Physician and Contractor Would Recover Heavy Damages From Phoenix Man

The case of Frank Massaro and Dr. Albert Hall of this city, against Kirk N. Sweet, of Poenix, is noticed for trial in the May term of court at Pulaski. The local men are suing Sweet who is a brother of Speaker Sweet, for $8,259 for damages and injuries received in an automobile accident at Phoenix last year when the machines of Massaro and Sweet collided.

Mr. Massaro was driving from Syracuse to Oswego in his car accompanied by Dr. Hall. While passing through Phoenix the car approached the driveway of Mr. Sweet's home as he was backing his car out of the driveway. Mr. Massaro sounded his horn and kept to the right hand side of the road but it is alleged that Mr. Sweet took no notice of the signal and backed across the road. In order to avert a direct collison Mr. Massaro ran his car into a sewer excavation and the machine was wrecked. Dr. Hall was thrown out and sustained severe injuries to his spine. Mr. Massaro was also shaken up and bruised.

Mr. Massaro claims that Mr. Sweet did not keep his car under control and Mr. Sweet denies this and places the blame on the local man. The local men will be represented by Von Bergen and Searle of Syracuse.

THE HOSPITAL ADDITION

Officials Met Yesterday to Inspect Plans

Oswego, Thursday.—Plans for the proposed addition to the Tuberculosis hospital at Orwell for which an appropriation of $8,000 has been made by the Board of Supervisors, were submitted by Architect L. L. Cope, at a special meeting of the Board of Managers held at the Supervisors' chambers this afternoon. Dr. J. A. More of Pulaski, James Gallagher, of Cleveland, H. Putnam Allen of Fulton, Supervisor A. S. Barker of Orwell and Dr. H. S. Albertson of this city, comprising the Board of Managers, were present. Meeting with the board was the committee from the Board of Supervisors made up of T. R. Siver of Schroeppel, W. B. Harter of Parish and V. D. Pierce of Albion. This committee will act as auditors of the expenditures for the addition. Dr. A. S. Dunbar, superintendent of the hospital, was also present.

The plans for the 12 rooms pavilion and the assembly room were approved by the Board of Managers as submitted by Mr. Cope, subject to the approval of the State Department of the State Department of Health, to which body plans will be forwarded immediately.

"Veterans at Bath Swindled."—Syracuse Jour.

At first glance we divined that some one had stolen the vets' clothes or suchlike—but the story states that the naughty, merry mucilage parlor operators in Bath, N. Y., are deliberately short-changing the poor old veterans who come around for their morning, noon and evening libations. It's a durn shame. Those poor old vets went to the wars and got shot for nothing in years gone by, and now they have to pay an excessive sum for the same privilege. Another example of the force of habit.

BRAVED COLD WATER TO CAPTURE FRESH FISH

Owing to repairs being made further up the river, the water flow over the lower dam ceased entirely yesterday. As soon as the rapids fell to some extent a crowd of boys and young men waded into the shallow water after the fish left without any means of escape. Some of the largest suckers ever seen in this vicinity were caught with ease, and several fine perch and pike also fell to the luck of the fishermen. An interested crowd of spectators perched on the lower bridge directing the fishermen and shouting encouragement. The water was "pretty durn cold," as one youthful wader expressed it, but the returns amply repaid them for their efforts.

FULTONIANS ATTEND BALL

About twenty-five couples from this city attended the Masonic ball in Oswego last evening. The affair was the most successful ever held by the Masons of that city, and the floor was crowded with beautifully dressed women and their partners executing the steps of the modern dances as well as those of days gone by. Although the directors of the affair had divided the program evenly between the modernd anoes and the older waltzes, two-steps and square dances, the majority of the assemblage showed a decided preference for the newer steps and accordingly the orchestra changed the program somewhat.

PHILLIPS ST. WON, 14 TO 6

Heavy Stick Work in Ninth Inning Produced Desired Result in Opening Game

In the opening game of the Grammar School Baseball League season, staged yesterday afternoon on the fair grounds diamond, the Phillips street school team defeated the Oak street school by a score of 14 to 6.

The game was a close one between two evenly matched teams until the final inning when the Phillips street hitters knocked out eight runs.

Chetney did splendid work on the mound for Oak street and was well backed up by Cole behind the bat.

Lundy and Sawyer did box duty for Phillips street and Dewey caught.

A feature of the game was a neat doublep lay pulled off by the Oak street infield, Chetney to Frawley to Bzdula, retiring the opposing team when they looked dangerous.

Prof. Wm. F. Merrill of the High school faculty umpired the contest.

The line up and score:

Oak St.—Church, s.s.; Dashnau, lf.; Cole, c.; Frawley, 1b.; Bzdula, 2b.; Rice, 3b.; Chetney, p.; Roman, rf..

TEAM ROUNDING INTO SHAPE FOR FIRST GAME

Coach Bill Stauring put the Fulton high school ball tossers through a stiff workout at the Athletic park yesterday afternoon. About twenty candidates reported for duty, the majority in uniform, and batting an fielding drill occupied most of the afternoon. The diamond has been scraped and is in pretty fair shape.

After the team had been given an hour's hard work, the Varsity men took on the second team in a five inning session. O'Brien was on the firing line for the regulars and Webb served up the twisters for the subs. Keeler was on hand at his old post on the difficult corner and Krausse, Lewis and Evers made up the infield. All the men showed speed, but some hard work is needed yet before any team work can be developed.

Don O'Brien, Pullen and Reynolds operated in the gardens. Captain Bray handled the receiving end and Len Roy acted as umpire.

All the regulars and many of the subs showed that they already had their eyes on the ball and the team looks like a strong aggregation with the stick this season.

The first game will be played at the park Friday, April 30. O'Brien will probably work in the box for the Fultonians.

GERMANS TO DRIVE AT YPRES AND YSER

to be even more far reaching and important, for with Hill No. 60 in British hands the way is laid open for a damaging blow at the Germans.

Hill No. 60 is a low lying ridge running between Zillebeke and Klein Zillebeke, with its summit near Zwartelen. Strongly intrenched and held by infantry, it formed a screen and protection for the larger hill at Zandpoudre, some five kilometres further east on the Ypres-Menin road, where the German artillery is posted.

The preparations for the attack—the massing of the guns and the reinforcing of the infantry—were successfully concealed from the Germans. The text book Maxim attack at dawn was for once abandoned, and the Germans apparently were taken completely by surprise. The mine under the hill was exploded on Saturday evening, and immediately afterward the trenches on the hill were searched by shrapnel and shattered by shells from the British masses of guns. Then the infantry sprang from their trenches to the assault. The first line of trenches on the hill was taken with little opposition, so great had been the effect of the mine explosion and the British artillery fire.

The second lines still held in great strength, and the Germans, surprised and rudely shaken as they were, fought stubbornly. But the dash, bravery and determination of the British were irresistible, and the whole hill soon was in their possession. When darkness fell fresh troops were thrown into the captured trenches, and during the night strong efforts were made to repair the damaged trenches and put them in a state of defence. It was a terrible experience however, for the British. The Germans had the range of the hill, and all through the night they rained upon it shell and shrapnel with telling effect. Nor was there any respite when dawn came, for with its coming the Germans launched their first counter attack. Masses of gray-coated troops swarmed over the plain, decimated by shrapnel and mowed down by machine gun and rifle fire. They re-formed and continued to advance with desperate courage. More than once they reached the British trenches at the foot of the hill, and then the bayonet was needed as well as the rifle shot and machine gun fire to keep them out. Time after time they returned to the charge. The fight raged furiously all through the day, but when night had again fallen the pluck and fine fighting qualities of the British had won the day, and the Germans had retreated, leaving heaps of dead and wounded in front of the lines. The British losses, too, were heavy, but not as great as at one time was anticipated.

returned to Petrograd, has paid a tribute to the sportsmanlike conduct of the Austrian garrison.

"'I consider it desirable to say,' General Seliwanoff is quoted as having said, 'that while the discussions of the surrender of the garrison were in progress no stores were set on fire and no ammunition was blown up. Such explosions as occurred were the result of fires lighted before the discussions began.

"'It is incorrect to say that Permysl was forced to surrrender owing to starvation, as stores sufficient for two weeks were found there. The surrender was due simply to the Austrian Staff's conviction that further resistance and sacrifice were useless. The men of the garrison suffered most severely from rheumatism, which incapacitated thousands of them.'"

PAVING TORN UP

Contractor's Force Busy Today Removing Brick on Bridge.

A force of men is at work today tearing up the paving on the north side of the canal bridge in First st. The bricks will be taken up and the upper half of the structure will be demolished. The southern end of the roadway will be left intact until the northern end has been filled in and a road laid, then the traffic will pass over the northern end and the lower section will be filled in.

Contractor Rosoff stated this morning that the work will probably be completed by July 1 When the southern end of the bridge is demolished the trolley company will have to make some arrangements for its tracks across the bridge. Mr. Rosoff could not say this morning what the company's plans were. The hump in the street at the intersection of 1st st. and Oneida will be taken off and the road over the old canal bed will maintain the same level as Oneida st. at the present time.

Do Not Increase the Automobile Tax

In the Senate caucus last night it was decided to drop the legislation imposing a 50 per cent. increase in the tax on automobiles. This legislation ought to be abandoned, the tax on motor vehicles is heavy enought as it is, and the automobile industry and the owners of automobiles should not be saddled with taxation burdens heavier than those they are already carrying.

It is, however, to be regretted that the shelving of the 50 per cent plan, seems to be accompanied by a disposition to substitute other legislation which would increase the automobile taxes already existing. For example, it is proposed to repeal the law cutting in half the license on cars operated more than four years. Automobiles are taxed more than they ought to be now, and automobilists are surely entitled to whatever relief they can get from the partial exemption created after four years of operation.

Nor should an unfavorable distinction be drawn against the commercial car. The auto truck is daily becoming a greater factor in business transportation, the commercial auto is indispensable, and it should be encouraged, not given a black eye by excessive taxes. The aim of legislators should be, not to strive to ascertain how heavy a weight they can put on the shoulders of automobilists, but how they can diminish the burdens heretofore imposed. There ought to be an end of singling out the automobile to carry general taxation of which the automobile ought to bear no more than its share. Automobilists do not object to paying their reasonable proportion of taxes. But they do protest, and very justly, against the tendency to impose special handicaps of taxation on the automobile. The State of New York ought to lead the van of the movement against that form of provinvialism which concentrates the fire of taxation against the automobile as a deliberately chosen and predestined target.—Buffalo Times.

MAYOR MITCHEL STARTED YANKS

"Bill" Donovan Made First Bow to New York Fans Today

New York, Thursday.—John P. Mitchel, Mayor of New York, made his second entry of the year as a baseball hurler today at the Polo Grounds, when he delivered a ball that he hopes started the Yankees on the way to fame and fortune.

Mayor Mitchel, having shown such sfficient control at the kick-off of the Giants, was not loath to accept the responsibility of heaving the new ball for the Yankees' opening today.

He made the display at 3.30 and immediately thereafter Walter Johnson of the Washington team tried to beat Donovan's 1915 model team in their first home engagement of the season.

CONSUMPTION OF LIQUOR INTERFERES WITH WAR

Lonon, Thursday.—Legislation of some kind to solve Britain's liquor problem is certain. Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchecquer, told the House of Commons yesterday that consumption of alcohol is interfering with the work of properly supplying the army at home and in France and that measures would be introduced in Parliament to remedy the situation.

The speech of the Chancellor was devoted largely to the needs of the army. In the course of his remarks he made the interesting statements that Britain now has 750,000 men at the front and that the manufacture of ammunition amounts now to nineteen times fore than the output at the beginning of the war. This increase, Lloyd George declared, is not great enough, and he attributed to the use of liquor the failure to obtain a greater output in the plants of the country. No suggestion of the method to be adopted by the government for dealing with the question was put forward by the Chancellor. The members of the Cabinet and government leaders are giving much thought to the question, however, and the opinion is general that the burden to be placed on the liquor interests will be as light as is consistent with the seriousness of the situation.

A STORY THAT VARIES.

The Bride Who Got Into a Chest and Was Found Dead There.

There is a story more or less diffused of a young bride on her wedding day playing the game of hide and seek and concealing herself in one of those ancient carved chests of large size. After she had got in the lid closed, and she found herself unable to raise it again, for it fastened with a spring, and she was shut in. Search was made for her in every quarter but the right one, and great perplexity and dismay were caused by her disappearance. It was not till years after, when chance led to the opening of the chest, that the body of the young bride was discovered and the mystery of her disappearance solved.

The story is found in so many places that it may be questioned whether it is true of any one of them. Rogers tells it of a palace in Modena. The chest in which the poor bride was found is shown at Bramshill, in Hampshire, the residence of Sir John Cope. Another similar chest, with precisely the same story attached to it, was long shown at Marwell Old Hall, between Winchester and Bishop's Waltham.

The folk tale of Catskin or Peau d'Ane represents the girl flying with her bridal dresses from a marriage that is repugnant to her, and as this tale is found all over Europe it may have metamorphosed itself into that of the bride who got into a chest, and died there.—Cornhill Magazine.

FARLEY WANTS NO GAMBLING

Excise Commissioner Says It Is One of the Saloon Evils of State

(By FREDERICK T. CARDOZE.)

Albany, Jan. 27.—Advocates of prohibition legislation and those who sympathize with the movement to do away with the use of strong drink, may not be familiar with the fact that in the state of New York there are 23,373 licensed drinking places at the present time. Of this number 16,628 are saloon licenses and 6,745 hotel licenses.

Another fact which is not generally known to the public, is that the state excise department collects millions of dollars each year from the saloons and hotels which have liquor licenses and turns the money into the state treasury. For the fiscal year, which ended on September 30, $18,109,260.61 collected from this source was transferred from the excise department to the state treasurer. The revenue represents an increase of $8,048,109.66 since 1896, when the state excise department was created.

Statistics frequently tell an interesting story and though usually dry (the present ones excepted) much can be read between the lines when figures are carefully studied. The excise department contributes more to the support of the state than any other branch of the government.

W. W. Farley, at present state excise commissioner, has some interesting things to say in his annual report to the legislature. He tells of the growing evil of saloon gambling and sets forth data with reference to the steps which have been taken by his department to break up the obnoxious and clandestine practice. He points out that from the auctioning off of liquor which has been seized in raids by his agents, $5,597.16 has been gathered in during 1914 and an additional sum of $49,165 collected through taxes on all night liquor tax certificates. Commissioner Farley explains that all night certificates can only be secured upon the approval of the mayor of the city where they are to be issued.

That there is a tendency on the part of certain cafe proprietors to evade the law is shown by the collection and recovery of $462,998 through prosecution of bond actions against certificate holders. Commissioner Farley won 114 cases brought to revoke licenses last year. Of this number 47 were brought for alleged gambling and isorderly conditions.

The number of no license towns in the state predominate, the number being 407. The number of license towns is 384, while there are 142 towns which have partial licenses.

Commissioner Farley says that each year there has been a decrease in the number of drinking places because of the law which made the population of a community the basis for liquor tax cerdtificates. Based upon a population of 10,000,000, each drinking place at present represents 428 people.

There have been introduced already several bills bearing upon the excise and liquor tax questions, the most important of which is the measure which has the backing of the Anti-Saloon league. The provisions of this bill has been widely published.

The chairman of the assembly committee on excise is Assemblyman John G. Malone of Albany. There is no excise committee in the upper house.

TWO MURDERED IN APARTMENTS

Evidently That Assailant Meant to Burn One Victim's Body; One Woman Held As Witness

New York, Jan. 27.—A birthday party culminated in a double murder today when Marion Franklin, a stenogapher from Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and a man believed to be John Christopher, an engineer, were beaten to death with a hammer in an apartment house at 145 East 114th st. The police arrested Joseph Kriegleger, janitor of the apartment, on suspicion. He denied knowing anything of the killing.

Miss Franklin, who was 30 years old, had been in this city for three months and lived with the Krieglegers. The party was arranged in honor of Miss Franklin's anniversary.

The body of Miss Franklin, fully clothed, was found on the floor of a bedroom. Nearby was a bloodstained hammer and a stained hatchet. Christopher's body was found in the basement near the furnace.

The police believe that it was the murderer's intention to burn Christopher's body, but that he was frightened away before he could do so. The man's body was found in the ash pit, in front of the furnace. His head had been crushed. n a corner was a heavy iron shaker used in the furnace. It was covered with blood and hair.

Policeman King was on duty early this morning when Mrs. Kriegleger came out of the house and said:

"My husband beat up a woman in my apartment. You had better call an ambulance."

As the police came into the apartment house the woman said: "I think you'd better come downstairs first and look at a man there."

Since the woman has been unable to make any coherent statement. She is detained as a witness.

Kriegleger, who had disappeared was seen about 5 o'clock coming from an areaway near his home. He was wearing only his trousers, undershirt and slippers and had no hat. He was caught after a pursuit of several blocks, during which the police fired several shots at him. He said he had been hiding from his wife.

Although an effort had been made to clean away the stains on the floor and in the apartment there was blood in many places and the prints of hands all over the walls. Mrs. Kriegleger, the police say, said, "Joe did it," and admitted that she had tried to stop the flow of blood from the dead woman with peroxyde.

The man and woman had been dead many hours when the police arrived and when asked why she had not notified the police before, Mrs. Kriegleger simply replied that she "must have fallen asleep."

In the dead man's pocket was found a letter written to him by Miss Franklin. It said:

"I must see you alone. I tried to get you on the telephone, but could not. She was terribly beaten up. He has the heart and soul scared out of her. Something must be done. I think there is a way to help her and I will do all I can."

Through the letter was unintelligible in the main, the police believe it referred to the relations between Kriegleger and his wife. She is said to have been often beaten by her husband.

Christopher, the male victim of the double murder, was a resident of the Union section of Queens, where he was active in Ladies and Knights of Honor and organizations. He was married and had five children. IIt was stated by one of his sons today that Christopher had recently been working in New York and nothing was thought of his failure to arrive home last night.

CALIFORNIA NOW WANTS THE KENTUCKY BRAND.

Sacramento, Cal., Jan. 27.—To establish horse racing in this state under the same law now in effect in Kentucky is proposed in a bill introduced in the Assembly. If passed racing would be under the direction and control of a racing commission of three members who will issue licenses, not more than one race meeting to be allowed in any county within thirty days. Five per cent of the gross receipts will be paid to the state. Betting would be permitted under the pari-mutual system.

FORMER FULTONIAN AT SAN DIEGO EXPOSITION

W. G. Pentelow of Corona, California, a former Fulton man writes friends in regard to the San Diego exposition. He writes interestingly as follows:

The buildings are in a ground of fourteen hundred acres. The west entrance to the grounds is over a beautiful concrete bridge which spans a deep ravine, the bottom and sides of the ravine are set to trees and shrubbery so thick that the earth is completely hidden, and shrubs that blossom, which makes a wonderfully beautiful picture. The several buildings are master works of art with the great array of green and flowers on all hands. The seven countys of Southern California joined together and built a most wonderfully beautiful building and filled it with exhibits from the several countys as our exhibit, not distinction as to countries. On our side of the buildings are stalls with two chairs and a desk in each where the literature of each county is distributed. There is a lecture hall in the building when each county devotes one half hour to showing views of their county and lecture on the same. I have not undertaken the task of lecturing yet but will have to come to it when I go back. I am here to get some new views to throw on the screen. With the Southern counties building is seventeen acres of land on which is laid several acres of flower beds laid out in a tasteful and artistic manner by an expert from Los Angeles. It is a marvel to the Eastern people the great array of roses in bloom with the many other varieties of flowers. Another portion is set to citrus fruit trees of the several varieties which all have much fruit on and look fine. Another portion is set to deciduous fruit trees. In the center stands a bungalow which cost with the furnishings a little over seven thousand dollars. In the rear is the vegetable garden with vegetables ready for the table. A garage, a cottage for the hired man and chicken ranges with several varieties of poultry, six pullets and rooster of each kind. Just in the rear of the bungalow is a bed of strawberries. I took some parties from Maine over the grounds last Wednesday and while looking out of the back porch of the bungalow onto the garden we saw the gardner picking ripe strawberries. He had about two quarts. How surprised they were when they saw the ripe berries. The woman said to the man: "You may go back and settle up the business and I will remain here; this is as near Heaven as I expect to get." It is really very amusing to hear the comments when looking on the great beds of roses one mass of bloom with all the other varieties to numerous to mention.

Large Stock of Tubers on Hand January 1

Washington, Jan. 27.—More than half of the marketable supply of potatoes of the 1914 crop remained in the hands of producers and dealers on January 1, 1915, the department of agriculture announced today.

This is the largest supply held over from the preceding year for five years and has brought potato prices exceptionally low, the department says. been crushed. In a corner was a heavy cent of the American potato crop 166,846,000 bushels were held in stock January 1, compared with 123,329,000 a year ago.

The United States rarely exports or imports potatoes in large quantities and therefore the European war has no material direct bearing on the potato market, it is stated.

"The Paper of Results"

Despite the unsettled local business conditions, the period between the dates of April 1 to 17, there were handled in the columns of Fulton's daily medium of exchange, a grand total of 2046.5 inches of display advertising. These figures do not include Readers, Miscellaneous Wants, Agency, Legal, and other Special Advertising. But does include exclusively, the Advertising of Local or Fulton Merchants.

FROM APRIL 12 TO 17

there were handled in the columns of The Fulton Evening Times, 748.5 inches of Display Advertising, all of which means this: That for the period of April 1 to 12 the daily average was 133.19 inches; That for the second period or between April 12 to 17 the daily average was 124.66 inches.

These figures are conclusive evidence that The Fulton Evening Times holds a front place as an Advertising Medium that cannot be displaced by any out-of-town publication.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Francis Ouimet, Amateur Golf Champion.

In the United States Golf association handicap list Francis Ouimet and Jerome D. Travers are rated at scratch, while Charles E. Evans, the Chicago crack, is given one stroke. All other golfers in the amateur ranks are given handicaps over these three expert club wielders. Ouimet first acquired international fame in 1913, when he won the open golf championship, defeating two of Great Britain's best professional golfers. Last summer he lost the open title to Walter Hagan, a young Rochester (N. Y.) professional. In September, however, in the national amateur tournament at the Ekwanok course he wrested the amateur crown from Jerome D. Travers of Upper Montclair, N. J., who for several years had been unbeatable and who was in the finals against Ouimet. The next amateur clash will be played over the course of the Detroit Country club, and the experts predict that either Ouimet, Travers or Evans will finish first. The largest handicap allowed by the U. S. G. A. is five strokes, and no player whose local handicap is more than five strokes can compete for the national amateur championship.

The Braves' New Stadium.

President Gaffney of the Boston Nationals recently announced that the Braves' new stadium would be ready in August. The grand stand will be a single decker of concrete and steel, and the total seating capacity will accommodate 45,000 spectators. The plant will be located at Cottage Farms, within six minutes ride from the South station over the Boston and Albany railroad. The trolley cars will enter the stadium on a spur track. The playing field will be about twenty feet lower than the street level and will be larger than any other ball grounds in the major leagues. To build the stadium Gaffney says he will spend about $350,000. He will do the work himself. Until the plant is ready for championship games the Braves will use Fenway park, the home of the Red Sox.

How Johnny Evers Views It.

Somebody asked Johnny Evers the other day if he believed the champion Braves would have a harder road to travel this year, and the famous second baseman replied:

"It will be easier for us because a championship ball club has half its games won before the first ball is pitched. We'll have the other teams buffaloed; but, of course, we will have to play hard all the way.

"The other teams are going to save their best pitchers for us right through the season, but even with such determined opposition I think we will have an edge."

Coombs May Come Back.

If Jack Coombs is able to pitch the kind of ball that helped the Athletics to win world's championships look out for the Brooklyn Dodgers! Coombs, who appears to be in splendid health, has shown just enough pitching strength down south to make Ebbets and Robinson happy. The Iron Man says that he is not in a hurry to cut loose, because such a course would be foolhardy. But he confidently predicts that as soon as warm weather arrives in the north he will be able to take his turn. If appearances mean anything Coombs is coming back.

Soccer Players Lose Jobs.

At the end of the football season on April 30 the English soccer players will find themselves in a position never experienced before, of being out of work, as all contracts with the professional players, with the exception of a small number who signed on until April 30, 1916, will end. The signing season, which begins on May 1 in each year, will be held over until late in August, so as to prevent any inducements being held out which will interfere with the call to the colors.

Big Losses at Juarez Track.

Racing at Juarez has been a costly venture during the past winter. It is reported that the track owners will have to meet about $100,000 in losses. The attendance, except on Sundays, has dwindled to less than 400 paid admissions each day, yet the promoters have lived up to all of their obligations.

About Sports Generally

By Frank G. Menke

The promoters of the Johnson-Willard fight lost money. The exact amount is shrouded in the maize of many conflicting statements concerning receipts, but the estimates as to the loss range from $3,000 to $43,000. It is the opinion of the writer that the $43,000 loss figure is nearer being correct than any other.

Jack Curley, chief promoter of the fight, after being asked a half dozen times for the real receipt figures, said two days after the fight:

"I can't give the exact figures now, but we are saying that the receipts were $110,000."

Curley, as will be noticed, didn't make the direct statement that the receipts were $110,000. He merely said "we are saying." His "we are saying statement has been disputed by three persons who were on the "inside."

Dick Klegin, director general of the affair, said on the day after the fight:

"The receipts will not reach $75,000."

On the night following the fight, Tom Jones, manager for Jess Willard, said:

"I don't know what the receipts are exactly, but I understand they are somewhere around $60,000. I make that statement because I know that Willard's share of the receipts will be around $16,000 and he was to get 25 per cent. of the gross receipts, including money taken in at the gate and money received for concessions."

Jack Robinson, who acted as press agent for the fight, said:

"I learn that the receipts were $56,900."

Attendance Disputed.

There also has been a big dispute as to what the attendance was. The promoters of the fight backed away from giving the exact figures, or even approximate figures. That left it up to the newspaper men at the ringside to estimate the crowd. Most of them are mighty good at estimating, and the whole crowd didn't total over 12,000 and that it might have scaled down to 10,000. Of that number it was said that 1,000 and probably 2,000 were admitted on complimentary tickets.

It cost the promoters close to $70,000 to stage the fight in Havana. That amount included the $32,000 that was paid to Jack Johnson. To this figure must be added about $15,000 more that was lost through the Juarez fizzle, as the promoters went to a lot of expense there.

When Willard signed for the fight in Juarez he was to get only 25 per cent. of the net profits. That would have made his share nothing at all had the same arrangement held over for Havana. But Jones said that he figured the fight might not draw well in Havana and that the net receipts, if any, would be small.

"So I insisted," said Jones, "that Willard be given 25 per cent. of the gross receipts if the fight were held in Havana."

Willard's Share.

If the gross receipts were around $60,000, as the writer has every reason to believe they were, Willard's share was about $15,000, as Jones stated. The expense of staging the fight was about $70,000, according to the promoters, and they lost $15,000 at Juarez. That means that the fight cost them a total of approximately $100,000.

If the receipts were only $56,900, as Robinson said, it shows the net loss was $43,000, according to approximate figures on expenses.

Even if the promoters did take in $110,000 as Curley said, "we are saying," the promoters would have lost on the affair, as in that case Willard's share would have been around $28,000, the Havana expenses $70,000 and the Juarez expenses $15,000, making a total expense of $113,000.

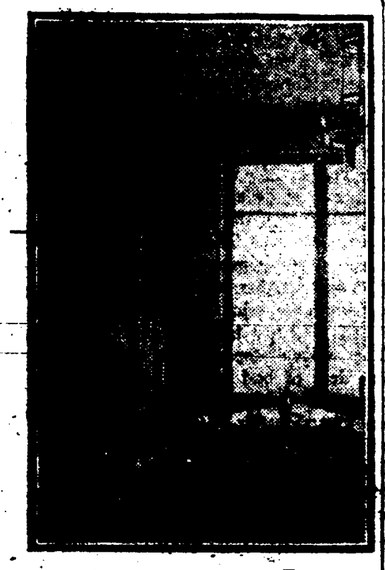
NURSERY HARMONY

Neutral Backgrounds and Well Constructed Furniture.

AFFECT CHILDREN'S MINDS.



Much Attention Is Being Paid to Psychology of Furnishing In Each Room—Process of Elimination Used With Good Results.

In every well appointed nursery there will be harmony of wall decorations, furniture and floor coverings. The furniture will be simple of line and will be low enough for the convenience of the small inhabitant. A cupboard will be provided in which toys may be stored when not in use, thus inculcating in the wee one orderly habits, which a harmonious room will also help to instill.

If in addition the nursery is properly ventilated and heated the mother will have the ideal nest in which to begin to train her young fledgeling in the duties, joys and beauties of modern life.

And as the child grows seize upon every tiny evidence of his love for the aesthetic and wisely train it, for in every individual there exists the desire for beauty, a craving which is no less insistent in its way than the purely physical appetites and one that demands a constant satisfaction.

It is in art that the intellectual and emotional characteristics of an individual or a race find concrete expression. Indeed, it is only when their psychology is understood that we can deduce, automatically, some idea of the culture which expresses these conditions. The reverse of this holds true; follow the course of the strong, clear and fine red of the Italian renaissance velvets through the period of Louis XIV., where the tone becomes less intense, until it changes to the Du Barry rose of Louis XV., and fades into the pretty Marie Antoinette pink of the Louis XVI. period. That transition tells an eloquent tale of the moral decadence of the French Court, the most brilliant, wasteful yet creative period of decorative art in history.

Out of the muddleheadness of the Victorian era there has arisen a clear, scientific and reasoning spirit, a spirit that analyses and explains, that has expressed itself very definitely in art, and particularly in that art with which we are all so closely concerned—the creation of a harmonious home.

The time has long since passed in which interior decoration was regarded as an esoteric art, understood only by the initiated. Successful decoration is self expression and common sense—with some knowledge, either intuitive or acquired, of the emotional and intellectual reaction of the individual to certain colors, compositions and arrangements. Beauty is harmony, and harmony means rest.

It is this knowledge which has eliminated the badly designed wallpapers, the shiny and overdecorated furniture, and the carpets swarming with impossible roses, which seemed to rise from the floor in crimson spots. The modern American home is becoming a combination of neutral backgrounds, simple and well constructed furniture and harmoniously keyed color tones.

KEEP GOAL IN SIGHT.

It is absurd to try to do things that are palpably beyond your ability. You will only make yourself ridiculous to all who know you and will cause yourself much humiliation and discouragement. Let each day's task be just a little beyond your ability, so that you will progress, but do not attempt those things which lay way out of your reach.

The surgeon cannot make remarkable operations until he has spent years of study on small problems. The chemist cannot attack the most difficult experiments until he has learned reams of textbooks. The pianist cannot play the biggest compositions until he has worked years on scales. The singer cannot sing arias of florid brilliancy without having first spent years on technique.

And so it goes. The accomplishment of anything fine means the working out of each day's problems one by one, never losing courage or patience, but plodding steadily on, with the goal always in view in the distance.

HIDDEN WEALTH.

Why It Is Always Wise to Analyze the Earth When Digging.

Material thrown up by burrowing animals or exposed in digging or plowing, and, of course, railway cuttings or any excavations, should be carefully examined for the presence or indications of useful minerals. Fallen stones, especially carried down by rivers, should be carefully inspected, and if any stones of a promising character such as vein rock, which are known as shode stones, be found, the inspection should be continued up the river or the valley. The main may be many miles or only a few feet away from where the stones that belong to the vein now are.

A vein rock usually is of a different degree of hardness to the surrounding rock. It is harder than the surrounding materials. In weathering the outcrop is marked by projecting masses of rocks or depressions, which may be followed by the eye for some distance marking a vein.

These outcrops should be examined to see if they contain any useful mineral or indications of them. If the outcrop presents a spongy looking mass, stained with dark and other hues of brown, it gives a favorable indication. This material is called gossan and is a favorable indication of rich minerals lying underneath.—Chicago Herald.

HARVEY AND THE BLOOD.

How His Theory of Circulation Was Born and Demonstrated.

It was while studying at Padua under a professor who had discovered the valves in the veins that Harvey discovered the circulation of the blood. He was curious to know what these valves were for, and, finding that they all pointed in the same direction, he could think of no reason for their existence unless it might be to prevent the blood from flowing backward.

Placing a ligature on his arm, he found that one set of vessels, the arteries, became distended with blood on the side nearest to the heart, while the veins became distended with blood on the side farthest from the heart. This to him meant only that the blood flowed from the heart through the arteries and back to the heart through the veins. It also explained the beating of the heart and the throbbing of the pulses.

But the medical and surgical world received this epoch making discovery with scorn. Harvey published a book on his discovery, and his practice fell off considerably. Doctors scoffed, and the public looked on him as a crank. It was a quarter of a century after the book appeared before the discovery was accepted by the learned men of the world.—New York World.

The Dumb Waiter.

The value of the old fashioned labor saving device, the dumb waiter, cannot be exaggerated. Instead of carrying up the many, many things that daily have to come from the cellar they are placed on the dumb waiter. No energy is wasted, and one trip will save three. It serves the place also of the more modern linen chute. The linen chute is not to be tabooed, for it has its uses, but it is practically wasting space to have both it and the dumb waiter. In many houses the dumb waiter stops short at the second floor—the reason why has never been discovered—or sometimes it starts at the first floor instead of in the cellar, another enigma. This is as impractical as it would be to have the sidewalk end before it reaches the house. It simply doesn't answer the purpose for which it was intended.—Woman's Home Companion.

Buddha.

The origin of Buddhism, which ranks in numbers among the great religions of the world, is wrapped in much uncertainty, and the personality of its founder is more or less obscure. It is generally believed that Buddha was a prince of a petty Indian nation and that he was born about the beginning of the fifth century before Christ. He was named Siddhartha and was also known as Sakya, his family name. The title of Buddha, which was given him, means "the enlightened." He spent many years in study and solitary meditation and finally evolved the philosophy which he preached for over forty years in northern India. He was about eighty when he died.—Youth's Companion.

Tuning Forks.

The tuning fork was the invention of John Stone, royal trumpeter, in 1811. Though the pitch of forks varies slightly with changes of the temperature or by rust, they are the most accurate means of determining pitch. Tuning forks are capable of being made of any pitch within certain limits, but those commonly used are the notes A and C, giving the sounds represented by the second and third spaces in the treble stave.

His Walking War Record.

The Dundee Courier has this laconic war note:

"Soldiers can be as laconic as sailors. The late Sir George Groves used to tell of an old soldier who went about begging, bearing a placard: 'Actions, 7; wounds, 9; children, 8; total, 24.'"

Fixing the Break.

"They were both broken up by their separation."

"But I understand they've effected a reconciliation and are now re-paired."

The Similarity.

"Jim says his wife's tongue goes as fast as an express."

"Yes, and it's always on the rail."—Baltimore American.

The Unarmed Ranchman

By JOHN TURNLEE

When MacDonnell left his home in Edinburgh for the wild west in America to engage in ranching he was as mild a mannered fellow as ever lived. Nothing troubled him so much as to have a difficulty with any one. On the day of his departure one of his friends said to him:

"It seems to me, Mac, that you will be out of your element in a country where there is no law except gun law."

"Oh, I won't be troubled," was the reply. "I'll not offend any one, and if any one offends me and I have to fight I'll try to arrange for a substitute of fists instead of guns."

"You'll not be likely to effect such an arrangement; you're too strong. Those fellows won't care to tackle you in a trial of muscle."

When MacDonnell reached his new home he astonished the inhabitants of the country by going about without the customary enormous revolver slung to his side. He was warned by friends that such a course was unsafe. True, the people of the region were a generous, whole souled lot, who respected any man for doing as he pleased so long as he did not injure his neighbor. But there were men who had come from the lowest haunts of vice, who would not hesitate to shoot any one they took a fancy to shoot, even if unarmed. But MacDonnell refused to be converted and continued to ride over his ranch with no other weapon than a lasso.

The only trouble he had was with a neighboring ranchman named Hawkins, who insisted on claiming MacDonnell's sheep. For a time, whenever there was a question of ownership between them, Mac would give in. This encouraged Hawkins to increase his demands, and it finally became apparent that if Mac did not call a halt all his sheep would in time be transferred to Hawkins' ranch.

One morning Hawkins rode up to MacDonnell's ranch house, called him out and began to abuse him scurrilously, accusing him of branding one of his (Hawkins') sheep. MacDonnell was obliged to stand and take what was said to him, for should he retaliate in any way Hawkins was liable to draw his revolver and shoot him. Mac waited till he had finished and was about to ride away. Then he said to him:

"Mr. Hawkins, you have grievously insulted an unarmed man. I am opposed to the use of firearms, but if you will give me such satisfaction as may be afforded in the ring with fists I shall be obliged to you."

"That kind o' fightin' may do for a milksop like you, but it isn't the kind we're used to in this country. When we fight out out here we fight to kill."

With that he rode away.

MacDonnell did not take this attack kindly. Several of his employees, including one of his herders, witnessed the torrent of abuse heaped upon him, and it galled him to live under the obloquy of having taken it without a fight. Besides, he knew that such a public insult would be spread abroad, and he feared that the community would consider him a coward. Finally he made up his mind that he must follow the custom of the country, and the day after the insult the 42 caliber revolver of the country appeared at his hip.

Fortunately he did not happen to meet Hawkins for some time. When he did it was up in the mountains back of the grazing lands. Mac was passing over a path about a yard wide leading around an almost perpendicular cliff. Behind him were two of his herders. Suddenly turning a bend, Hawkins and MacDonnell met face to face and not ten feet apart, Hawkins being first of four men.

MacDonnell was a very different man from the man who had left Scotland a year before. He had been brooding over the insult he had received till he was ready to fight to the death the man who had given it. He was very quick in his movements, and before Hawkins had quite taken in the situation Mac had drawn his revolver and had the drop on his enemy.

"Mr. Hawkins," he said, "I'll trouble you to ask the man behind you to relieve you of your revolver and drop it over the cliff."

Hawkins made no reply for a few moments, glaring at his antagonist.

"Suppose I decline," he said presently.

"In that case I'll drop your dead body over with a ball in it."

Hawkins stood MacDonnell's glance and the muzzle of his revolver a little longer, then told the man behind him to obey the order. His revolver was dropped over the cliff.

It was followed by Mac's weapon, and both men stood unarmed.

"I now propose a wrestling match, Mr. Hawkins, right here. If you can throw me over after my revolver you are welcome to do so."

"I decline certain death for both," said Hawkins.

"Then turn around with your party and go back."

Hawkins made no reply for some time. It was quite a distance to a place where the parties would have plenty of room to pass. Presently he turned and directed his party to go back.

MacDonnell never replaced the revolver he had thrown over the cliff, and its replacement was never needed.

A RARE DECORATION.

Austria's Grand Cross of the Order of Maria Theresa.

The grand cross of the order of Maria Theresa is today one of the most exclusive as well as one of the most brilliant of surviving orders. It was founded by the great empress of that name in 1737 in honor of the victory of her troops over Frederick the Great at Kolin. Its members are elected by ballot on the part of the chapter, the sovereign having no voice in the matter unless he happens to possess the order, although he is the instrument of its bestowal and the signer of the patent.

In the past hundred years, until August, 1914, only fifty-eight members had been thus admitted to the order, and at the beginning of the war in 1914 there were but three knights left, all of the third and lowest class. One was the Emperor Francis Joseph, who won the cross in 1848 on the battlefield of Santa Lucia against the Italians. The second was the Duke of Cumberland, father of the sovereign Duke of Brunswick, who received the cross for gallantry at the battle of Langensalza, where as crown prince of Hanover he helped his father, the blind King George, to direct the operations of his troops. The third was Prince Alphonse de Bourbon, claimant to the throne of the two Sicilies and popularly known as the Count of Caserta. He won his cross by the part he played in the superb defense of Gaeta, the last stronghold of the Bourbons.

HOUDON, THE SCULPTOR.

Known In This Country Mainly by His Statue of Washington.

Since the days of the cathedral builders France has never been without great masters of the chisel. Traditions and an ever accumulating skill have been passed on as from father to son through generations immemorial. With all that "apostolic succession" of genius we of another race are strangely unfamiliar. One name, however, we associate with that of our first president, and for this reason, and not because Jean Antoine Houdon was the leading sculptor of his time, is he sometimes mentioned in the United States.

As the "first sculptor of his day" Houdon was invited in 1784 by Thomas Jefferson, representing the state of Virginia, to make a statue of General Washington. On July 28, 1785, the sculptor with three assistants sailed in the company of Benjamin Franklin from Southampton, bound for Philadelphia. The journey required nearly two months and Houdon did not arrive at Mount Vernon until Oct. 2.

Two weeks were occupied in modeling the bust, making a life mask, and taking many measurements, with all of which the artist departed rejoicing, and, thanks to the rapid ocean service of the time, was home again on Christmas day.

The result of this trip was the notable marble which stands in the state house at Richmond, our most trustworthy portrait of the first president.—Scribner's.

"You do, eh? What have you got to offer?"

The older man shook his head.

"Not enough. Times are too hard. I can't afford a wedding."

The young man smiled.

"Now for my trump card," he said. "Everybody is eloping. We will elope and save the expense."

"What's old?"

"Vegetables conversing. I've often heard 'Jack and the Beans-talk!'"

FOR YOUNG FOLKS

Diminutive Cricket Player and His Mighty Bat.

ENGLAND LOVES THE GAME.

British Lads Take to Cricket as American Boys Do to Baseball. Items of Interest to Small People. Puzzles and Games For Idle Hours.

The game of cricket is as dearly loved by the boys of Great Britain as is our game of baseball by young America. Cricket is played to some extent in the United States, but most boys know little about it. There are eleven players on a side, and an umpire judges the play, as in baseball. The terms used are entirely different from those of baseball. For instance, the pitcher is called bowler, and the catch er is the wicket keeper. The batsman is called striker. The aim of the bowler is to knock down the wickets. The striker stands in front of the wicket and with a flat bat does his best to guard the wickets. A striker is out when a wicket falls or when he is caught out on a fly. The little boy with the cricket bat was snapped in a London park during the Easter holidays. He probably thinks he is big enough to play, but his companions are laughing at him.

Game of Suggestions.

This is a game which people either like or dislike very much. The players sit around the room or a table, and one of them begins by naming an article of any kind whatever—for instance, a watering pot. The words "watering pot" will immediately suggest something to the next player—say "gardener." He therefore says "gardener." The next may be reminded by that word of a bunch of violets she saw the gardener carrying that morning, and she says "violets." The next one, remembering the wild violets she found at Ventnor in the spring, says "Ventnor." That name suggests the seashore, and the next says "beach."

When the game has gone on for several rounds it will be seen that the minds of the players have been carried miles away from the original watering pot that started them.

It is interesting now to trace the series of suggestions back again to the starting point. This is done by the last player mentioning not the last thing he thought of, but the thing that suggested it to him. The retracing is more difficult than the original suggestions.

In this game two things are important. One is that silence be maintained; the other that the word you give should be suggested to you only by the previous player's remark. It is more fun to be quite honest about it and really say what was first suggested instead of making a choice.

The Oldest Wrought Iron.

The oldest pieces of wrought iron now are probably the sickle blade found by Belzoni under the base of a sphinx in Karnak, near Thebes; the blade found by Colonel Vyse embedded in the masonry of the great pyramids and the portion of a crescent saw exhumed at Nimrod by Mr. Layard, all of which are now in the British museum.

MUTTON, MONEY AND DRESS.

Eccentric Henry Cavendish and Some of His Queer Ways.

Whenever Henry Cavendish, the famous English chemist and physicist, entertained his guests he would always give them the same fare—a leg of mutton. A story goes that one day when four friends were coming it was asked him what should be ordered for dinner. He answered, "A leg of mutton." "Sir, was the reply, "that will not be enough for five." Well, then, get two," said the host.

When this eccentric gentleman died he was the largest holder of bank stock in England. He owned £1,157,000 in different public funds, besides freehold property of £8,000 a year and a balance of £50,000 on account. This large income was allowed to accumulate without attention. On one occasion, when the bankers had in hand a balance of £80,000, they thought it well to acquaint Mr. Cavendish with the fact.

"If it is any trouble to you I will take it out of your hands. Do not come here to plague me."

"Not the least trouble to us, sir, but we thought you might like some of it to be invested."

"Well, what do you want to do?"

"Perhaps you would like half of it invested?"

"Do so, do so, and do not come here to bother me or I'll remove it," was the churlish finale of the interview.

Cavendish was seventy-eight years of age when he died in 1810, and he had never changed the fashion of his dress for sixty years.—London Graphic.

ODDITIES IN NAMES.

The Old English Puritans Indulged In Some Curious Freaks.

Referring to an article on the unusual Christian name as an aid to fame, a correspondent kindly submits some specimen names for perplexed parents.

In 1878 a London journal announced the marriage of a lady whose first name was—take a deep breath—Tetuanuireiaiterniates, but it omitted to mention what she was called in the bosom of the family. Among the Dublin marriage licenses, too, the name Atleanadioiagra occurs. And as lately as 1895 a Dorinda Cassandra appeared in the London Times. With such names one could hardly fail to get into the papers.

Odd combinations of names resulted from the system of nomenclature followed by the Puritans. James Bronne in his "Travels Over England, Scotland and Wales," published in 1700, gives a copy of a "Jury Return Made at Rye, Sussex, in the Late Rebellious, Troublesome Times." The names of the twelve good men and true were Meek Brewer, Graceful Harding, Kill-sin Pimple, Earth Adams, Weep-not Billing, More Fruit Fowler, Hope-for Bending, Return Spelman, Fly Debate Roberts, Stand Fast on High Stringer, Be Faithful Joiner and Fight the Good Fight-of Faith White.

How a present day justice would enjoy himself if a jury named in this style were called before him!—London Chronicle.

Wonderful Earthworms.

As Darwin long ago showed, the earthworm is the farmer's friend. Its burrows drain and aerate the soil, while the earth which has passed through its body is finely divided and is constantly being brought to the surface from lower levels. Its body is adapted to the burrowing habit. The pointed head end is devoid of feelers and eyes, and the foot stumps are only represented by rows of bristles, which can be felt if the finger be passed along the body from back to front. There are no jaws, but the muscular part of the digestive tube acts as a kind of pump for taking in food. This includes plants and animals. It has a small gizzard, which contains many stones, and these are used instead of teeth to grind the food.—Chicago Herald.

A Lesson In Politeness.

Armed with a subpoena a deputy sheriff went out to serve it on a wealthy and extremely snobbish manufacturer, whom he met at the gate of the manufacturer's country home. The great man was in an automobile, accompanied by two ladies, and as the process server handed over the papers he politely raised his hat. The other assumed a democratic manner. "You don't need to take off your hat to me, young man," he said. "I took off my hat not to you, sir," was the answer, "but to the ladies with you."—Argonaut.

Barnes Showed Anger Documents Tell Tales Tense Situation Felt

Massive Collection of Literature Has Commenced to Unroll. Crowds Gather at Court House. Distingished Persons Attend Trial

Mr. Roosevelt and his attorneys won what they regarded as a distinct victory when Justice Andrews ruled that they could introduce into evidence any part in the report of the Bayne committee, which investigated Albany county, having to do with State printing. Another legal victory for the Roosevelt forces came with a ruling by the court that Mr. Roosevelt is entitled to testify to what his state of mind was when he wrote the alleged libellous statement and to anything that contributed to it. This opened the door to the conversations which Mr. Roosevelt had with persons other than Mr. Barnes, which Mr. Ivines vigorously contested yesterday.

Without delay John M. Bowers proceeded to get into evidence the fact that as late as 1912 Mr. Barnes owned 750 shares of stock in the John B. Lyon Company, of Albany, while Mr. Roosevelt fished out a letter written to him by Mr. Barnes in 1899, when he was Governor, stating that if the project to start a State printing house went through it would be a fatal blow to him financially.

It was with difficulty that Mr. Barnes restrained his anger at some of the statements made by Mr. Roosevelt. Frequently he reddened and half started from his chair as though about to say something in protest, but always thought better of it in time.

Once when Mr. Roosevelt asserted that the combination between rotten politics and rotten business extended to the lowest kind of business in Albany county, with a meaning so obvious that it could not be misunderstood, Mr. Barnes seemed to explode, but a word from Mr. Ivins quieted him and he sat back in his chair. But his anger was clearly intense and he shot wicked looks at Mr. Roosevelt for some time afterward.

On the contrary, Mr. Roosevelt was in rare good humor when he finished up his day. He laughed and shook hands with many admiring friends and it was noticeable that the look of seriousness which he has worn ever since he came here had disappeared. The fact that he will tomorrow be obliged to submit to a cross examination at the hands of a man as adept and subtle as William J. Ivins did not seem to disturb him in the least.

Masses of literature will be submitted in the testimony on both sides. Several letters have been used thus far in the trial. Ten trunks full of literature is the amount the Colonel is reported as having at his command.

Mustering every particle of evidence in his possession to substantiate his charge that a corrupt alliance exists between the political machines dominated by William Barnes and Charles F. Murphy, Mr. Roosevelt took the jury which is to sit in judgment on the charge that he is guilty of libel into his complete confidence, and neither rules of evidence, objections of lawyers or the admonitions of the Court restrained him. Whole sections of his testimony were stricken from the record when he was through, but not before they had been delivered to the jury in forceful and eloquent fashion.

Tells of Murphy-Barnes Agreement.

From his bag of political tricks Mr. Roosevelt dug out another batch of Republican party secrets and gave them to the public for digestion, to the intense delight of his partisans and the obvious disgust of the friends of William Barnes, the man who is suing him for $50,000.

Mr. Roosevelt devoted himself in large part to the direct primary and race track legislations. He proved by letters that Mr. Barnes had written to him that direct nominations in this State would lead into untold evils, and the idea of getting rid of bosses was absurd as long as there was party government.

He asserted that Mr. Barnes procured the election of Jotham Allds as President Pro Tem, of the Senate with the aid of Democratic votes, and that what the Democrats did for Mr. Allds was reciprocation for what the Republicans in the Legislature who were controlled by Mr. Barnes did for Senator Stephen J. Stillwell when the latter was being tried on a charge of bribery. He declared that Senator Grattan, whose single vote defeated the first race track bill when Mr. Hughes was Governor, had declared that he voted against hisp rinciples and his beliefs because Mr. Barnes, from whose district he came, compelled him to.

All of these things and many more equally sensational Mr. Roosevelt got before the Jury. Yesterday while he was on the witness stand he plainly revealed his impatience, but managed to restrain himself. Today he completely dominated the situation and frequently threw the courtroom into roars of laughter by his vehemence and determination to say what he had to say in spite of anybody.

A court room packed to the doors, a court house, in the corridors of which and in the streets adjacent to which thousands of curious persons had gathered, provided the background for the third day of the trial. Camera men, moving picture men and peddlers, attracted by the crowds, made their way about, and the scene vividly recalled circus day in a small town. In the court room men who have figured large in the public life of the State were gathered. Harvey D. Hinman, of Binghamton, in whose behalf as a candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor last fall Mr. Roosevelt made his alleged libellous statement, was there. So was Francis Hendricks, the veteran leader of Onondaga county, who had the pleasure of hearing Mr. Roosevelt tel the jury that Mr. Barnes wanted him to appoint Mr. Hendricks Superintendent of Public Works, but that he wouldn't do it because Mr. Hendrikcs lived in a canal town. Thomas F. Smith, secretary of Tammany Hall, who may have to testify in the case, came up from New York, and other notables present were Frederick L. Davenport, who ran for Governor on the Progressive ticket last autumn, and one-time Governor Horace White.

DOGS MENACE FARM SHEEP

If It Were Not For Dogs American Flocks Could Be Doubled

The number of sheep in the 36 farm States, which do not include any in the western division, could be increased by 150 per cent,it is estimated without displacing other live stock. Some authorities believe that the increase could be even as much as 50 per cent without serious interference with the number of other animals. An increase of 150 per cent in these 36 States would mean in money $144,267,000. In a new publication of the department, Farmers' Bulletin 652, the responsibility for this loss to the country is laid upon the sheep-killing dog.

Sheep-killing dogs, it is said, are the principal cause of the marked decrease in the numbers of sheep on American farms. In the 10 years between 1900 and 1910 the number of sheep in the country, exclusive of the States in the western division, decreased 3,900,000 head, in face of the fact that during these same years the market value of sheep rose so rapidly that the total value of sheep in this area was $19,000,000 or approximately 25 per cent more in 1910 than in 1900. Favorable though the market conditions wkere, they were not a sufficient incentive to induce farmers to risk the heavy losses from stray dogs.

The number of sheep killed annually by dogs can not be stated exactly, since there are many cases which are not reported at all. Judging from the figures in those counties and States in which reasonably complete reports are obtainable, however, it may be said that in the 36 farm States more than 100,000 sheep are killed each year by dogs. This, it is true, is less than 1 per cent of the total number of sheep in this area, but a 1 per cent loss on a business that is being conducted on a profit basis of 5 or 6 per cent can not be ignored. This estimate, it must be remembered, is also probably much lower than the actual figures. It is certain, too, that many men have been kept out of the sheep business through fear that in their own particular cases the loss would be much more than 1 per cent. Anyone who has actually seen sheep killed, injured, or frightened by dogs is likely to think twice before engaging in the business. In many cases while only 1 or 2 sheep may be actually bitten by the dogs, the whole flock is chased until it dies from exhaustion.

If the dog question could be satisfactorily disposed of, there seems to be no reason why the number of sheep in the country could not be increased to the extent already indicated. In Great Britain there is 1 sheep or lamb for each 2.5 acres of the total area. In the 36 farm States in this country there is 1 sheep or lamb for each 31.8 acres. The British farmer handles his land on an intensive basis and feeds his sheep on forage-crop pasture. Such pastures not only increase the fertility of the land but also free the sheep from many internal parasites contracted through grazing upon permanent pastures. In particular the use of a succession of forage-crop pastures will prevent stomach worms, one of the most prevalent and disastrous scourges of young stock, and will enable the farmer to market by the end of June or the first of July, when the market prices are usually the highest, the lambs that were born in the late winter or early spring. Handled under such conditions and on high prived farm land, the importance of a small flock of sheep can not be overlooked.

In addition to pointing out these facts the bulletin already mentioned, "The Sheep-Killing Dog," discusses the possible means of preventing in the future the loss from dogs. At the present time the various Stat laws on this subject differ widely, some States using the money obtained from dog licenses to reimburse sheep owners, while others permit the sheepmen to recover damages from the dog owners, and two offer them no recourse wdatsoever. Dogs, however, are very seldom caught in the act of killing sheep. It is always difficult to determine their owners, and where the damages are paid by the State directly from the dog-tax funds the money very frequently is far from sufficient to meet all the claims.

A remedy that is suggested for this situation is a uniform State dog law embodying the principle of a tax upon dogs sufficiently heavy to discourage those who are willing to take care of their pets from keeping them. Under this plan all dogs over 6 months of age must be licensed each year, the tax paid at the time of licensing and a metal tag bearing the license number attached to the dog's collar. Any dog found without this tag unattended and off its owner's premises may be killed. When found unatteded on a farm where sheep are kept the dog may be killed whether it has the tag or not, and under any circumstances a dog caught chasing or killing sheep may be killed. All dogs which can be proved to be sheep killers must be killed whether caught in the act or not, and a reward of $15 should be offered for anyone identifying a sheep-killing dog. The money received from dog taxes should be devoted to reimbursing sheep owners for their lost stock, and the country should in turn recover this money whenever possible from the dogs' owners. A special license should be issued for kennels where large numbers of dogs are maintained under such conditions that they can not possibly o any harm to neighboring flocks.

While some such plan as this is probably indispensable to the full development of the sheep industry in the United States, there are cases where the flock master will find in its absence the use of dog-proof fences very desirable. The grazing of sheep upon comparatively small areas of land sown to forage crops, instead of upon permanent pastures in larger fields, materially reduces the area to be fenced and makes this a practicable precaution. In the West fences have been built which prove a satisfactory defense against coyotes, and the fence that will turn aside a coyote will turn a dog. A fence of this character can be build as follows:

Posts 7½ feet in length, set 2½ ft. in the ground and 16 ft. apart; a barbed wire stretched flat to the surface of the ground; 3 inches higher, a 36-inch woven-wire fence having a 4-inch triangular mesh; 5 inches higher, a barbed wire; 6 inches higher, a second barber wire; 7 inches above this, a third barbed wire. Total 57 inches.

It is important to remember, however, that the bottom strand of barbed wire must be stretched flat on the surface of the ground at all points. If necessary, the ground should be graded before the fence is built. Thereafter such small holes as may appear may be filled in. It is not always necessary to fence the entire pasture, for dogs usually attack sheep at night only.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, April 22.—Governor Charles S. Whitman is now facing one of the most intricate situations which he has been called upon to meet since his election as chief excutive of Nw York State. Within a few days he must take up one by one the numerous bills which have been passed in the closing hours of the waning legislative session and dispose of them either by his approval or veto.

After a legislative session comes to an end a governor has thirty days within which to give executive attention to the measures which have been passed by both houses and the month so set aside for this purpose by law is usually one fought with great physical and mental effort. Aside from the time which he must necessarily devote to the examination of bills, the governor oftimes is besieged with requests to act favorably upon this or that measure by individuals and delegations. He is perhaps as frequently requested to affix his veto. Unless he desires to permit bills to automatically become laws, he must veto them; hence the necessity of his examining them all is obvious.

Governor Whitman will receive several hundred bills at the close of the session and the measures will cover so wide a field as to require him to consider them with care. The financial propositions will receive his closest attention.

It is very unlikely that bills carrying appropriations will be signed unless the object for which the appropriations are needed are deemed worthy by him. The executive has taken the stand that he will veto all appropriations which do not clearly show that there is a public necessity behind them.

Because of the condition of the finances of the State Governor Whitman feels that he is justified in safeguarding with the utmost diligence the resources of the treasury.He has made known his views as regards the necessity for economy to more than one legislator who has visited the Executive Chamber and urged that favorable consideration be given his bill.

The governor makes no promises. Several members who are anxious to see certain of their bills carrying appropriations become laws, have been reminde that economy and efficiency were the slogans before his election and still remain so.

It is anticipated that the annual supply and appropriation bills will be pruned to the utmost. To gratify this or that State official it is yearly the custom to incorporate in those documents each year certain salary increases and other items, some of which, because of the numerous provisions of the bills, are approved. These little insertions will be carefully scrutinized by the present governor as they have been by othr executives.

Individual appropriation bills bid fair to occupy but little of the time of Governor Whitman, since their title will at once suggest what the appropriations carried are for. He will hew to the line upon all measures not of State-wide importance.

In a number of instances bills carrying appropriations have not been pressed by their introducers for passage since it has become known that extravagance will play no part in the governor's program.

STAR-CHAMBER SESSIONS AFFECTED ELECTION YESTERDAY

By a margin of 113 votes the taxpayers of Oswego yesterday defeated at a special election the proposition to increase the budget of the Department of Water $25,000 a year for three years. 881 taxpayers vote, the heaviest vote at any special election since 1908 when the lake water measure was carried. The people showed plainly that improvements to the water system financed by a direct tax were unpopular inasmuch as the method was too burdensome.

The water department created a great deal of bad feeling against the measure by holding star-chamber sessions and refusing to divulge the nature of the proposed improvements.

The election was watched with interest by several Fultonians who own property in Oswego.

Roosevelt Gets Cross-Examination To-day Courtroom Crowded

Important Evidence Piling Up. Letters, Documents, Etc., of Sensational Import Regarded as Consequential

On top—is where Mr. Roosevelt insists on being. The first assault of the Barnes forces upon Colonel Roosevelt were decidedly without telling results. While under cross examination Mr. Roosevelt parried every attempt to show that his past had been one of abject subservience to Platt. Letters were produced as proof that he had constantly bucked Platt when he attempted to throw the harness over him.

He showed that even in his political infancy he had outmatched in craft the crafty Quigg, late accelerator of public opiion for malfactors of great wealth, and wriggled out of the net Quigg had spread for him.

On cross examination and under the enemy's fire he got matters into the record which his own lawyers had failed to get in.

And in half a dozen explosive sentences fired point blank at the jury he pictured himself as possessed of the liftiest principles, the most unassailable political integrity and of such righteousness as is seldom found on this isde of the firmament.

He was on the stand part of the morning and afternoon. He gave his occupation as author, ranchman and naturalist or explorer and the confession was wrung from him that he had at times held public office.

Never for a minute was his mind off his work. In it traps were set for him, but he saw every one. And freely admitting that in his young innocent days he had been taken in by the smooth bosses, he declared in clarion tones that as soon as he saw the monsters in their real and hideous guise, he unsheated his sword and went after them hot foot.

The morning session was devoted for the most part to the introduction of the Bayne report, which served to show that for a time at least there was no evil combination of the bosses. Murphy started that investigation and Barnes was the victim of it.

The principal paragraph of the report quoted was this:

"The most conspicuous beneficiary of graft, public extravagance and raiding of the municipal treasury we find from the evidence, to be William Barnes himself as the owner of the majority of the stock of the Journal Company. How much more than the majority of the stock he owns he refused to disclose."

The most interested listener, as the witness returned shot for shot and made himself his own witness, was a dark, tall, sardonic looking gentleman who sat directly behind the jury box puffing at a big lighted cigar and now and then grinning under his short mustache. He was William Loeb, Jr. It has been eight years since Loeb carried on his broad shoulders the responsibility for many things of national importance which were frequently shifted to them.

And now when the Colonel has to show where he got one of the most damning charges he made against Barnes, Loeb sits waiting in a corner ready to answer when called upon: "I did it."

The Colonel's cross-examination will be the bill today. Yesterday was his day. But in this war fortunes quickly shift and what makes it tense with excitement is that from one moment to the next you never know today than ever before. Nearly a fourth of its number were women.

A letter written September 10, 1898, by Lemuel Quigg, a Republican leader in New York, working under Platt to Mr. Roosevelt in regard to a possible nomination as governor, contained this extract:

"Please do not feel annoyed with me if I do a little preaching. Even in my short period of observation, I have seen so many able men who have brought themselves forward to important and powerful positions, finally fall down and wander off into political retirement, that I have looked into the cause of it, and have always substantially the same state of facts. They have been brought forward by the organization, sustained by the organization, developed by the organization, until the idea became virtually fixed in their minds that they were the 'whole thing.' This notion first inspired by mugwump flattery and then expanded by their own ambitions, has carried them into opposition with Senator Platt and into attempts to establish new machines of their own. Then came the end. They have collapsed because they allowed themselves to get out of joint with that general party sentiment which has gradually centered around Platt as a leader and which has acquired such strength under the leadership as to make departures under new ambitions impracticable.

"The thing I fear is that these plausible and poisonous mugwumps will at some time or other involve you in some of their 'good government' entanglements, intended as they always are, to help the Democratic party and to create dishonest prejudice against decent Republicans.'

Roosevelt's Reply

Colonel Roosevelt's reply, dated September 12, 1898, in part was as follows:

"Your representation of what I said was substantially correct; that is, it gave just the spirit. But I don't like the wording of some of your sentences. At first, on account of this, I hesitated how to reply, but finally came to the conclusion that the last sentence of your 'report' covered the whole matter sufficiently. I shan't try to go over your different sentences in detail, and there are various secret changes to which I think you would agree. Then I wish you could have brought out the fact that these statements were not in the nature of bids for the nomination, or pledges by me, and that you made no effort to exact any pledges, but that they were statements which I freely made when you asked me what my position would be if nominated and elected.

"I know that you will not in any way wish to represent me as willing to consent to act otherwise than in accordance with my conscience."

P. S. "I want to make clear that there was no question of pledges or promises least of all a question of bargaining for the nomination; but that I promptly told you the position I would take if I was elected governor and suggested what I thought it would be best for both Senator Platt and myself to do so as to prevent the chance of any smash up which would be disastrous to the welfare of the

BRITISH SUBMARINE SUNK; N. SEA CLOSED TO SHIPPING; NAVAL BATTLE IMPENDING

ALL EXITS OF NORTH SEA BLOCKED; BATTLE NEAR

London, Friday.—A great battle in the North Sea—the most titanic engagement in the history of naval warfare—may be a question of hours. All commercial shipping has been cleared from the said German ocean, and all preparations are complete for a trial of strength between the British fleet and the German Grand Fleet, supported by the Heliogland fortress.

London last night was in a fever of excitement in anticipation of the battle. Rumor after rumor spread through the streets, restaurants and clubs, each fed by some line from the telegraph or cable that told of activities of the empire's forces afloat.

For a week British warships have been operating in the eastern reaches of the North Sea, even under the guns of Hligoland itself. A statement during the day by the German Admiralty said British submarines had been repeatedly observed in Heligoland Bay, which leis between the island fortress and the mainland, and that one of these crafts was sent to the bottom on April 17. It said, further, the destruction of other such vessels is considered probable.

This German statement was passed by the censor in London without comment and without denial.

A most significant and at the same time most unusual message came from Amsterdam early in the evening, quoting an official announcement on behalf of the British government stopping all traffic between the British Isles and Holland. This announcement was not issued in London, but it, likewise, was passed without comment by the censor. It reads:

"All shipping between Holland and the United Kingdom is stopped for the time being. No ships will leave the United Kingdom for Holland after today. Ships from Holland will not be admitted to the United Kingdom after today.

"It is hoped shortly to resume limited cargo and passenger traffic. Special arrangements have been made for the transfer of mails."

Earlier in the day the Admiralty made known to foreign consular officers steps that have been taken to conditionally close more British ports to mercantile shipping. No specific ports are mentioned, but the notice says "certain ports" may be closed without warnin.

Signal Warnings of Closed Port.

"Closing will be indicated by three vertical red lights at night and three red balls by day. When these signals are displayed vessels must proceed to examination anchorage or keep to sea," the notice says.

Still other indications are present that "Der Tag" is near at hand. The Admiralty has been working at full pressure for days. Every naval base has been under extra guard and the employes have been urged to greater exertion. The fleet is known to be at the highest point of efficiency, and letters from the fighting ships have told of an undercurrent of feeling that action soon would take the place of the monotonous patrol duty.

That the French have joined their British allies is apparent from a dispatch from Copenhagen, which says an Anglo-French squadron has bee sighted in the waters to the north of Stavanger, on the Norway coast. Stavanger is almost due east from the Orkney Islands and on a line which almost marks the northern limit of the British patrol that guards that exit from the North Sea.

Heligoland, which is now the center of the new operations, is the strategic point that must either be destroyed or rendered abortive as a harbor of refuge before the British destroyers can hope to successfully cope with the forces in the Elbe or the Weser. Britain has had many occasions sinc war was declared to regret the action of her statesmen who in 1890 ceded this island to Germany. The bargain was an exchange for concessions in Africa, and Britain was giving up only a crumbling island in the North Sea. Similar reasoning was held forth by United States Senator Burton when he declared that in giving up Vancouver Island to Canada the United States was yielding only a pile of rocks. That same pile of rocks has yielded the most valuable coal mines today in the Pacific. Britain was wise in the Vancouver matter. In the Heligoland affair she exhibited short sightedness in the light of subsequent events which seems incredible.

The Island of Heligoland rises out of the North Sea like the Rock of Gibraltar, and at the time of the exchange by Britain the only anchorage shelter was one afforded behind a line of reefs on the southern side of the rock. The village of Heligoland lies at the base of the island, and to reach the village it is necessary to pass inside the reef line from the west. The least water is four fathoms, but off the village, close to, there is an anchorage in seven fathoms.

The German authorities completed, just before the war began, in August, a breakwater protected harbor off the face of the village. This harbor is accessible to vessels drawing eighteen feet and offers excellent shelter to torpedo boat destroyers and submarines. Any attempt to reach the harbor on the part of attacking British submarines necessitates passing inside the line of reefs and through the four fathom entrance, which is the narrowest part. To force an entrance here means, furthermore, that the attacking craft are ex-

Kaiser States Defeat In Hungary Would Be Fatal Blow to Germany

By Frederick Bennett

London, Friday.—The great Austro-German attack on the right flank of the Russian southern army now is developing successfully for the Russians. Recently the enemy brought a great quantity of heavy guns along the winter positions of the River Dunajetz, but the tremendous exchange of long range firing already has established the superiority of the Russian big guns, which are destroying the enemy's transport.

The Russian infantry are deploying over a distance of nine or ten miles, and the enemy has been diven back from Gorlice in the direction of Neu Sandec, which is a point of crucial importance, with a strong bridge over the Dunajetz, besides being the junction of the railway system into Moravia and of good causeway roads.

The Russian army here forms a link between the troops fighting in South Poland and the right wing advancing southward below the Carpathians through Bartfeld.

Prisoners arriving at Kieff declare the Kaiser has been with the Austro-German army and that he addressed the Saxon corps last Saturday in Bukowina, telling them they must protect Hungary like their own homes. A Russian victory there, he added, would be the defeat of Germany herself. The Kaiser then visited other German corps among the Austrian positions in North Hungary and returned to Cracow.

ITALY'S 500,000 MEN ON NORTHERN FRONTIER

London, Friday.—The Daily Telegraph's Malta correspondent telegraphs:—

"The captain and officers of the latest steamship in here from Italy are all bubbling over with enthusiasstic talk about the intervention of the Italians in the war. Italy, they said, has recognized her time and was goin gto take her tide at the flow.

"Five hundred thousand men are declared to be standing in readiness at the frontiers and an army of more than 2,000,000 is eagerly waiting orders. A great number of emigrants have returned from America and other places nearer Italy. They are all men who have done full military training under conscription and who are clamoring to be allowed to fight. Italians here are daily expecting to hear that Italy has commenced hostilities."

SENATE BILL CONDEMNED

Whether the reader is Democrat, Republican, Progressive, Prohibitionist or Socialist; whether he is a taxpayer or a renter from one who is a taxpayer, it matters not—it is his bounden duty, provided he has at heart an interest in the welfare of this city, to arise in righteous wrath at the contents of the Senate Bill which provides for the payment of salaries to the next mayor and board of aldermen.

That the bill in general bears the stamp of unpopularity is a foregone conclusion. Somewhere, somehow, it has its friends, but they are not legion. The best evidence in the world of the truth of the latter statement is the frequency of the calls in person and by 'phone at The Evening Times office, of men who have at heart the good of the city in which they have lived for many years, and in which they hope to spend their remaining years of life.

Last evening there called at the publication office of this newspaper a gentleman whose life has been spent in Fulton; whose political faith is identical with the political faith of The Evening Times—which is Republican in County, State and National politics, and who said:

> "I came in to pay for a subscription for The Evening Times, because of my approval of the attitude the paper takes upon municipal affairs. Such a paper has for a long time been needed in Fulton and your paper deserves the united, unstinted support of every right-thinking citizen of the city."

That gentleman said more than is contained within the quotation marks—enough in fact to fill several columns of this newspaper. He embraced in his criticism of past and present city administrations the habit or practice of taking moneys from the water department fund and using it to bolster up weakened budgets in other departments of the city government. He did not overlook the importance of attracting the attention of the people of this city to the Senate Bill which provides for salaries for mayor and aldermen, adding that it is high time the people of Fulton aroused themselves to a duty they owe to themselves and to posterity. "Who must pay for the extravagance and inefficiency of the kind of government we have been getting?" was this same gentleman's remark. Continuing, he said: "Don't you think the time has arrived when we should adopt a policy of pay-as-you-go?" This remark, in effect, meant that the city should not plunge into debt head over heels.

This man, battle-scarred, grizzled, and valient always in the service of the city he loves and the political party which he adores, has heard the call for efficiency above all else in affairs of a municipal nature. He wishes the days of inefficiency were over that the city of Fulton might emerge from the burden it bears, face about on past history, saying to the world without, We've had enough of the everyday kind of municipal government; now we stand for a city government that is administered upon business principles, giving to all without fear or favor a square deal—in fact, a city government that is economically administered, whose taxes are equitably adjusted so that no man is prevented by exorbitant rates from building a house or houses as investment.

When these things have once fallen on the soul of this city only the grimmest sense of blind duty to man or faction will hold even a fraction of the people to the furrows through which they have been plodding.

Republicanize the Republican Party

Republicans are thinking and talking about their party; on every hand they are hailing harbingers of victory; in every direction they are looking for competent and inspiring leadership. This is well, for the peril that wrecked the party in 1912 is not overpassed. Men are speaking of "rehabilitating," "regenerating," "rejuvenating," "resuscitating" the party. Why not say frankly and once for all that the Republican party needs relrepublicanizing?

History is quite clear that the Republican party had its birth in an effort to express the moral affirmations of a majority of the American people. It was not an alignment of men who had kindred economic interests, or a clique of dissentients who voiced a critical protest, or a respectable rancor for disreputable political alliances. If the Republican party will think as clearly, speak as candidly and act as honorably as it did in the days of Lincoln, it will sweep the country.

Every one is tired of bickering, caviling and carping about the several terms of the tariff; the people want a party of positive principles, of deep and passionate moral convictions, of chivalrous and irreproachable leadership. Just to pick out flaws and points to faults and indicate errors in the Democratic party is not sufficient. What does the Republican party stand for unequivocably and enthusiastically? Let those things be formulated in simple and sincere

Opinions

The Reformed Frankfurter.

The spirit of conservatism that is bitterly antagonistic to reform has always been strongly intrenched at Coney Island, but a recent move of the Board of Health strikes at the very heart of the inustry which, more than any other, breathes of unregeneracy. Last Sunday a sanitary frankfurter replaced the "hot dog" of hallowed memory.

In its reformed state the frankfurter lodges in a glass case, whence it from the wheel of fortune and leave wrapped in a shroud of wax paper designed to shield it from degrading contact with the few microbes, germs and bacilli that have contrived to elude ethe vigilance of the authorities. Under the new regulations the frankfurter must remain in its cold frame until summoned for the sacrifice. It can no longer roam the beach in search of its blood relations. It is even forbiden to bark. The germs and microbes that once fattened on its richness must browse elsewhere. Once free as the air, the frankfurter has received a staggering blow at the hands of the great engines of reform.

Will the other great industries suffer in like manner? Will wax paper clothe the mouthpiece of the lung tester? Will the "pinch" disappear former's mother, Mrs. Julia Benedict, the gold watch and chain a prey to the chance speculator? Will the island itself become hopelessly Haussmannized?—New York Herald.

Ill Advised Action

A dispatch from Peking states that the message recently sent from China to President Wilson by certain missionaries, advising intervention on the part of the United States in the negotiations between Japan and China, cost, in cable tolls, approximately $6,000, and that the tolls were paid by Chinese officials. It contained 5,000 words, and went much into detail.

In so far as the action of missionaries who stood as sponsors for the proposition that the United States should antagonize Japan in its dealings with China is concerned, it is not necessary to characterize the motives which inspire them to sign the dispatch. It is enough for present purposes to know that they acted as the vehicle for transmitting the proposal to President Wilson. There is, though, a vital principle involved which gives to the incident much significance.

The dispatch in question could have no other effect than to endanger the pacific and friendly relations between the United States and Japan. In view of questions relating to alleged operations by the Japanese at Turtle bay, on the coast of Lower California, irritation between the two friendly powers might easily result. It is a significant fact, according to the recent advices from Peking, that the dispatch to President Wilson was not approved by many of the most prominent American missionaries in China. Indeed, it is stated that the great majority of the missionaries did not see the message before it was sent, and others to whom it was shown declined to indorse it.

This would seem to be an occasion for plain speaking. It is not desirable that American religious missionaries in China or elsewhere should be used as the medium of stirring up strife between two friendly powers. Thef ranchise of missionary societies does not contemplate interference by missionaries in the political affairs of the countries in which they are sojourning. All the activities of these missionaries should be devoted to their legitimate work. And it is not the legitimate work of religious missionaries to interfere in diplomatic matters and thereby endanger the peace of the half of the world which is not already involved in sanguinary warfare.—N. Philadelphia's Second Annual Clean-up Week

By R. Robinson Barrett

Chief Inspector of Nuisances, Bureau of Health, Philadelphia.

In conducting Philadelphia's second annual Clean-up Week, April 20-25, last year, a committee of three men, representing the Bureau of Highways, the Bureau of Fire and the Bureau of Health, was appointed by the Mayor to take charge of the work done under the supervision of the city officers. The members of this committee were: John Neeson, Assistant Engineer of Bridges and Sewers, Bureau of Highways (Chairman); Joseph Mallory, Fire Marshal, Bureau of Fire; and R. Robinson Barrett, Chief Inspector of Nuisances, Bureau of Health.

Shortly after the appointment of this committee, the Chamber of Commerce and the Merchants' and Manufactures' Association of Philadelphia appointed a large representative committee of citizens to co-operate with the City Committee in order to conduct a successful campaign. This committee was divided into twelve subcommittees, to wit:

Finance
Press
Poster and Printed Matter
Trade Associations
Community Associations
Charitable and Benevolent
School and School Children
Churches
Retail Stores
Street Cars
Vacant Lots
Fire Prevention

The persons on this citizens' committee were all porminent business men and men interested in civic activity in Philadelphia.

In order that all the citizens might know the date and the object of Clean-up Week and give their best co-operation, an extensive and effective advertising campaign was entered into.

The Director of the Department of Public Works sent out 3,400 personal communications to the following:

(a) All advertisers and advertising agencies, manufacturers of brushes, brooms, buckets, vacuum cleaners, and, in fact, to every concern manufacturing any kind of article used for cleaning.
(b) All women's civic organizations—Civic Club, Home and School League, Literary, etc.
(c) All business men's organizations.
(d) All theater managers.
(e) Managers of motion picture houses.
(f) All real estate agents
(g) All banks and trust companies
(h) Boards of trade.

Two copies of a large placard announcing Clean-up Week were posted on windows in each street car operating in the city. On the back of this placard a silhouette of William Penn attracted the attention of the public, so that upon entering the street car most persons, having their curiosity aroused, immediately proceeded to read the news on the side of the poster inside the car. The same placard was distributed to schools, libraries, clubs, lodges, commercial and industrial establishments and railroad companies, with the request that it be posted in a prominent place.

Seven hundred and fifty thousand gummed labels, suitable for attaching to envelopes and to packages carried through the mail and delivered by the department stores, were distributed to all public service corporations, department stores, newspapers, banks and trust companies. These bummed labels were very attractive and were found to be a most effective means of advertising.

Two hundrd and sixty thousand four-page bulletins were distributed by the police at the homes of the city. These bulletins were not thrown upon the porch, but were handed to the householders, so that they could not help but learn the message they conveyed. The bulletin was so designed that the back could be used to notify the city waste collector wherever there was rubbish to be moved. It also contained many suggestions as to means by which the citizens might co-operate with the city officials.

Twenty thousand colored display placards were distributed to the department stores and all retail merchants in the city of Philadelphia. They were posted in a prominent place in all the large show windows. Because of the artistic coloring and the simplicity of this placard, it made an attractive window show card and was very popular. A much larger poster, but similar in design, was placed on all the billboards in Philadelphia, and many of these were used on hauling-wagons and automobile trucks.

Seven hundred and fifty streamers, 2 feet by 3 feet, with the words, "Clean-Up Week, April 20th to 25th," were given to the industrial and commercial institutions in the city and were used extensively on the harness of the horses of delivery wagons and in some instances were tacked on the side of the wagons. Some of these streamers were plain white with black lettering, and other yellow with blue lettering.

One million yellow cardboard folders were printed and distributed to all retail dealers, Union headquarters, lodges, clubs, social centers, public service corporations, department stores, etc., with the request that they be sent out in packages delivered and in all envelopes containing monthly statements.

Three hundred thousand badges and the same number of blotters, containing information regarding Clean-Up Week, were distributed to the public and parochial schools.

Three hundred and fifty thousand circulars were distributed to the policyholders of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, requesting their co-operation in Philadelphia's Clean-Up Week.

Several colored slides, indicative of the spirit of Clean-Up Week, and containing information regarding it, were made up and sent to the motion picture theatres, of which there are 205 in the city. It is estimated that 700,000 people attend motion picture performances daily in Philadelphia, and there is no doubt that this was one of the most effective means of advertising. Programs, leaflets, circulars, etc., were used by the theatres and motion picture houses. A number of the commercial interests in the city took advantage of the spirit of Clean-Up Week and advertised wares and commodities useful in the work.

Bulletins of various organizations throughout the city, such as the City Club, Civic Club, Business Men's Association, etc., devoted a great deal of space to Clean-Up Week. Many of these organizations prepared letters and circulars of their own which they distributed among their members. Over six hundred return postal cards were sent to the owners of all sanitary vacant lots, urging them to clean and beautify their properties.

In addition, an extensive newspaper campaign was carried on, which reached its climax in the issues of Sunday, April 19, immediately prior to Clean-Up Week. Articles by prominent men in all walks of life, commending the Clean-Up Week spirit, were printed in all the morning papers. Practically every morning leading up to Clean-Up Week articles appeared relative to some new step made by the committee, and in this way the interest of the public was gradually aroused and their co-operation obtained.

Clergymen, in addressing their congregations on Sunday, April 19, requested the co-operation of their parishioners in the endeavor to make Philadelphia "spick and span." Many neighborhood contests were instituted and prizes were offered to the boys and girls doing the best work during Clean-Up Week. Garden contests were encouraged, and the use of vacant lots for garden purposes was heartily endorsed by the combined committee. Many addresses and lectures were given by members of the Clean-Up Week Committee and city officials, telling the citizens of the advantage to be gained through Clean-Up Week.

In all the advertising matter displayed, the householders were advised that the city would remove all the waste accumulated in the grand cleaning-up. They were advised that this material would be collected on the days of the regular ash and waste collections. Arrangements were made with all the contractors collecting waste and ashes in Philadelphia to put on many hundred additional teams to take care of the excess material during this week. Special teams were arranged to remove rubbish where it had accumulated on vacant lots. All the municipal buildings were given a thorough cleaning, and all the offices and desks of the employes were cleaned out. A great number of department stores, public service corporations, etc., issued similar orders to their employes.

The city painted most of the fire plugs during this week, and the United Gas Improvement Company repainted its lamp posts. Wherever the co-operation of the property owners in cleaning up vacant lots could not be secured, the Division of Sanitation of the Bureau of Health issued mandatory orders upon the owners. If these orders were not complied with, the work was done by the city and the properties were liened in accordance with the Acts of Assembly. Arrangements were made for extra dumps in all parts of the city, to temporarily take care of the excess material, which was subsequently removed to the city's authorized disposal stations.

Of course the whole campaign depended upon the co-operation of the citizens, it being their duty to thoroughly clean out their own premises and put the waste material ae places readily accessible to the city waste and ash collector for removal. The response of the citizens exceeded all expectations. There seemed to be no particular class distinction between the persons co-operating with the city in its campangn. In every locality, tremendous amounts of waste and rubbish were placed out for collection. Old material which had accumulated throughout the winter in the attics and cellars and about the houses, such as old beds, frames, springs, mattresses, broken bottles, glass, chinaware and crockery, broken chairs, tables, benches, bureaus, washstands, rockers, old carpets, rags, decayed wood, tin cans, plaster, quantities of ashes, straw hats and a great number of Christmas trees which had probably been about the houses and yards since the holiday season—in fact, everything from tin cans to old and dilapidated grand pianos were removed by the city waste collectors. In many sections of the city so much material was accumulated in the houses and put out for collection that sufficient receptacles could not be obtained and the rubbish overflowed into the highways. In these cases it was necessary for the city to obtain extra help in shoveling paper and waste into wagons. Over five hundred lots were cleaned up and placed in a sanitary condition.

The activity of the Philadelphia Boy Scouts in all sections of thec ity is particularly commended. Many vacant lots and yards and other properties were cleaned up through their efforts. Before the campaign started, schedules were arranged so that their work could be carried out in systematic order. Many of the local business men's associations conducted campaigns of their own in their respective localities. Members entered into the movement with great enthusiasm; in some places they did the actual physical labor themselves. It was not an uncommon sight in any part of the city to see business men, women, girls and boys working together, the men with their coats off and their sleeves rolled up.

The Clean-Up Week movement received such a tremendous impetus that it was impossible to complete the work during the week specified, and, accordingly, it was continued during the following week. It is estimated that over 135,000 cubic yards of waste material were collected. This material, if placed on a city lot 300 feet by 300 feet, would fill it to a height of approximately 40 feet or the top of a three-story building.

ANOTHER HEIR FOUND BY TIMES

Letter From Ottawa Tells of Moses Ludington's Brother Charles P., Who Was Born in 1857

Last night's mail brought to The Evening Times a letter, which follows:

Fulton Evening Times,
"Fulton, N. Y.

"Gentlemen: A copy of your paper, the Fulton Evening Times, of April 17th., has just been received by my father, Mr. Charles P. Ludington, in which appears an article referring to the estate of the late Moses Ludington of California. The article also stated that you wished relatives to communicate with wou, which my father has asked me to do.

"He wished me to tell you that he is the son of Phillip Ludington, who was a brother of Moses. He was born in Marcellus Falls in 1857 and before coming to Canada 25 years ago, wassuperintendent of the Pulaski Paper Mills. At present he is superintendent of the E. B. Eddy Co. paper mills of Hull, Canada.

"We would be very much pleased if you would send us complete information addressing same to Charles P. Ludington, 30 Gatineau Road, Hull, Canada.

"Thanking you for your interest in the matter and awaiting an early reply, I am

Yours very truly,
"K. P. Ludington."

In the Evening Times of Monday it was stated that Mrs. G. A. Washburn of Jersey City, N. J., was the only heir of Moses Ludington to make her identity known, which was at the time true, but the Ottawa letter gives to the case another color.

All information so far received by The Evening Times has been forwarded to Attorney Van Wyck at San Francisco, and in the meantime this newspaper is endeavoring to still further spread the news of good fortune awaiting heirs, if living, of Moses Ludington.

OFFICIAL WAR BULLETINS

FRENCH

Paris, via London.—he following official statement was issued by the French War Office today:

"Near Langemarck to the north of Ypres, the British have repulsed two attacks. At Hill No. 60, near Zwartelene, German counter attacks, whose violence seems explicable by the desire to repair the defeat that has been denied by the ojcial communication of the Imperial General Staff, have definitely failed. The losses of the enemy are higher than the figures indicated yesterday.

"In the sector of Rheims there has been an artillery duel.

"In the Argonne, at Bagatell, a German attack of no great importance was repulsed.

"Near St. Mihiel, in the forest of Apremont, we carried by assault two successive lines of trenches at a place called 'The Cow's Head,' which forme in our positions a salient that seriously embarrassed us. A very large number of German dead were left on the ground. We took fifty prisones.

"In Alsace we have continued to makep rogress on both banks of the Fecht. To the north we hold the confluence of the Fecht and its left bank affluent, the Wurmsa. To the south we have reached Schlinssloch, thus gaining ground toward the east in the direction of Metzeral."

"After a surprise artillery attack French forces last night advanced in the western part of the Wood of Le Pretre, but were repulsed, with heavy losses.

"In the eastern arena of hostilities the situation shows no change."

"On the northern border of Hartmans-Weilerkopf, we destroyed a point of support of the enemy and in the evening we drove back a French attack.

"In the Bukowina front the enemy's offensive was repulsed by our counter attacks at the point of the bayonet. The enemy after suffering heavy losses. The enemy after suffering heavy losses fell back on his positions.

"In the other sectors of our front there has been nothing in general except the customary rifle and artillery firing at various places."

More than four hundred Russians dead were left, while twelve hundred Russians were captured.

"On the other sectors of the Carpathian front and in Southeast Galicia and Bukowina only local artillery engagements and skirmishes are reported."

MRS. BENEDICT DIED YESTERDAY

A Former Settler Who Came to Fulton Seventy-Seven Years Ago

Julia A. Benedict, 88, died Yesterday at the home of W. W. Gillespie in the Whitaker Road, where she removed three weeks ago.

Mrs. Benedict, was born in Vernon and was the widow of the late Gilbert Benedict. Both were pioneer residents of this section having come to this city seventy-seven years ago. For years Mrs. Benedict was active in Presbyterian church circle and held the distinctive honor of being the oldest member of that church Of late years her declining health has forbidden activities but her interest in the substantial things in life was maintained till the last.

About a year ago Mrs. Benedict suffered a broken hip and since then she failed rapidly.

One sister, Miss Winfred Carrington of Syracuse survives, also one son, Cameron C. Benedict, who with Mrs. Benedict left Fulton a short time ago for New York city to take up his position in the Comptroller's office in that city.

The funeral will be held Saturday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the home of Mrs. Arvin Rice, 184 S. 3d st. Rev. Charles Robertson will officate. Burial will be made in Mt. Adnah.

MRS. SHATTELLE'S FUNERAL

The funeral of Mrs. Harriett Shattelle, 82, who died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Leon Baker, in Hannibal st., was held this morning from the home at 8:30 o'clock and from the Church of the Immaculate Conception at 9:30. Burial was made at St. Mary's.

THE CHARM OF THRIFT

Doctor Johnson, who was one of the wisest of men, always advised his friends to marry well-to-do women because they, and they only, knew the true value of an income. "A woman of fortune," he was wont to say, "being used to the handling of money, spends it judiciously. But a woman who gets the command of money for the first time upon her marriage has such a gust in spending it that she throws it away with great profusion.

Tis gust in spending, or rather this profound distaste for economy as an ugly and irksome thing, characterizes American women of all classes; but it works most havoc in families whose incomes are large enough for sufficiency and security,—those twin blessings of life,—but not for a prodigality that is equally stupid and unjustified. Economy, as understood and as practiced by Latin nations, is not irksome. It is part of the game of life, a limitation accepted in good faith, and managed with such dexterity that, although it may rub now and then, it seldom pinches hard. A year or two ago a writer in the Atlantic Monthly gave a vivid and sympathetic sketch of a French middle-class household, with its assured comfort, its touch of elegance, its carefully balanced expenditures. The picture was as accurate as it was pleasing. A French woman takes an honest and just pride in making every penny of her money bring its fair equivalent; and she knows that her family keenly appreciates the results of her excellent management. She goes to markt. The artichokes are big and green and beautifully fresh. Her husband likes artichokes. Very well, then, there must be no salad, and no cherries. Artichokes represent that day's extravagance, and the rest of her marketing deals with the necessaries of life. It no more occurs to her to buy both the artichokes and the salad than it occurs ot her to be sorry for herself because she cannot do so. Her good dinner represents heights achieved, and difficulties overcome. Does an Alphine climber want to be carried in a sedan chair? What charm, after all, encircles the mountain top but the supreme sense of triumph?

In this land of plenty, economy is ill understood and distasteful. Housekeepers ignore it, servants despise it. A Boston woman whose daughter had lived for two years in Italy lamented whimsically that the girl could no longer be permitted to run the house at home. "She did fairly well before she went away," sighed the amused parent; "but now she asks the cook what has become of the other half of the onion, and the cook gets up and goes."

In Italy, where everything can be purchased in small quantities, half an onion looms large on the horizon. If a customer chances to want one egg, she buys one egg. No dealer looks askance at her because she does not take a dozen. If she wants a pat of fresh butter and a tiny flash of cream, she buys them for a few cents, and has the comfort of knowing that both are superlatively good. Italians are more intolerant of stale eggs than we dare to be, and they abhor the salted butter that we contentedly consume. But no food is wasted, and no one considers wasting as a privilege. You seldom hear economy preached in France,or Italy, or Spain; instead it is universally practiced. — Youth's Companion.

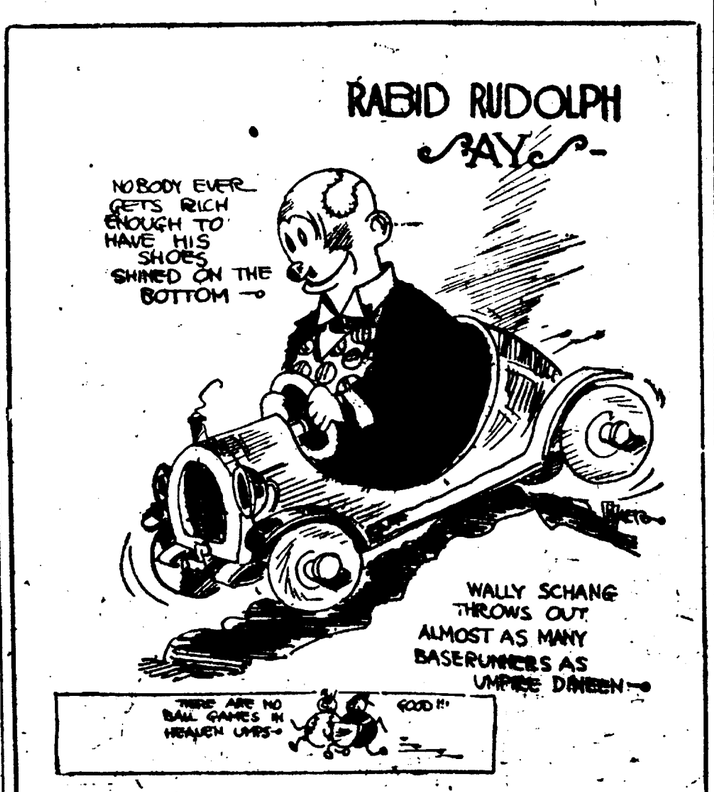
OSWEGO WANTS COOPERATION

Information Wanted as to Probable Benefits to Be Derived from Canal Terminal

Oswego's leading professional and business men are in receipt of a letter from Captain L. V. Frazier, U. S. A., who has been designated to make the survey for the new Oswego harbor. In his letter, the Captain asks for information regarding the exact improvement desired; the number of industries, navigation and other interests which will be benefited by the new harbor; what amount of commerce will be affected by the improvement; what terminal facilities are to be had or what will be furnished, and the business men are invited to submit views inwriting and other interested parties which will be benefited by the harbor are asked to submit their ideas.

Oswego's future as a shipping point hinges on the new harbor and, in order to get the proposed improvement the other towns along the new barge canal will have to co-operate with Oswego. Accordingly a committee has been appointed to confer with business interests along the line and all interested will be asked to boom the improvement.

The commercial growth of Fulton, Phoenix, Syracuse, Utica and other towns along the canal route depends upon the new harbor in Oswego; if the harbor is not large enough to accommodate the increased trade that is sure to center their with the opening of the new canal the towns mentioned will be equal losers. Freight rates, etc., will be influenced greatly if the improvement goes through, according to the Oswego boomers.



A representative of the Oswego Chamber of Commerce was in this city yesterday conferring with Secretary Deydecker of the local Chamber and the matter will be brought to the attention of the local directors at once. A delegate from Oswego also interviewed business interests in Syracuse, Phoenix and Baldwinsville yesterday in an effort to ascertain the sentiment in those places toward co operation.

R. L. McCULLY WANTS

Names of Auto Owners—Not Even Prospective Owners Are Exempted

The directors of the Fulton Automobile Club and the committee in charge of the dinner to be given April 28 at City Hall, met last night in the office of President McCully of the Club, and the final arrangements for the dinner were made. H. H. Bristol, H. F. VanSanford and B. J. Quinn are the committee on arrangements and they announced that Clinton Hall of the Lewis House will be the caterer and he has promised to eclipse himself in this instance. The dinner will be strictly informal and the menu will be particularly appropriate and tasteful.

President McCully has requested that the names of all those who expect to attend be sent in before Monday in order that the club may make suitable reservations for the diners. A cordial invitation is extended to every owner or prospective owner of an automobile in the city to attend. Only a nominal fee will be charged.

LESSON TAUGHT BY ELECTION

Oswego's Experience Shows That People Want Frankness of All City Affairs

Last night's Oswego Times points to a fact that should never be overlooked by city officials.

The Times says:

"People who take considerable interest in the business affairs of the city believe that a lesson of considerable importance is attached to the defeat of the increase to the water budget at the taxpayers' election yesterday and say that the other city commissions and departments will do well to profit by the knowledge gained. It is generally understood that the people of the city, particularly the taxpayers, are the ones who are interested in the business of the city and it is generally believed that they should be kept well informed of just what the various departments are doing.

"More than one vote was cast against the Water Department increase yesterday, not because the people did not want other people to have the benefit of water service and pure lake water, but because the Department of Water has not been frank and open in the transaction of business and has not taken the people of the city into its confidence. It will be remembered that at the first of the present year a resolution was adopted by the Department of Water would hold executive sessions, in other words, what the department did and what it discussed did not need to be told to the people. It was a polite way of telling the people that the policies and plans of the Water Department were none of the people's business.

"The Water Department is not standing alone in its refusal to let the people know what is done in the meetings. The department has had an example set for many years by the Department of Fire and Police, which has positively declined to hold an open meeting and does not even pretend to give out what happened after the meetings are over. The Department of Education, also, for several years past, has insisted on holding secret sessions.

"This idea that the people of the city should not be allowed to know what the officials are doing is being carried altogether too far and voters and taxpayers alike, are beginning to resent it. The people who pay taxes feel they are entitled to some accurate knowledge of the business transacted by departments supported by them and it looks now as though no further money would bev oted by the people until there is a distinct change in policy on the part of such city departments as insist on holding secret sessions to discuss public business."

P. T. CLUB MET

Mrs. George Blake of 316 Waldradt st., pleasantly entertained the West Side P. T. Embroidery club on Thursday afternoon. An unusually large number of members were present.

The occasion was marked by the day being the birthday anniversary of two of the members who being present were made the center of festivities.

WOMEN WORKING AGAINST BILL

Say Proposed Measure Is Class Legislation Effects Local Offenders

The Women's Prison Association is making an appeal to members of the Legislature to work against the passage of the Hoff-Mills bill, which is intended to develop the reformatory and correctional functions of workhouses, penitentiaries and reformatories under the jurisdiction of departments of correction in cities of the first class. Copies of the bill have been sent to the mayors of Rochester New York and Buffalo.

Opposition to the bill is based in part upon the fact that it provides it would prevent committments to county jails and workhouses, shall be committed to penitentiaries. It is held that such a procedure would place offenders against law and decency in institutions intended for felons.

Those opposed to the bill say that it would prevent commitments to the State Farm for Women at Valatie, Columbia county, as magistrates would be required to commit offenders to an institution under the jurisdiction of the Department of Correction of the respective cities. It is also pointed out that offenders in Rochester and Buffalo would be committed to a penitentiary for a term of three years, while offenders in New York would receive a workhouse term of two years for the same offense.

The claim is made that the bill is class legislation in that its provisions are directed against women exclusively. It is called a subtle attempt to segregate immoral women and a measure making probation impossible after the second offense. Another argument of the opponents of the measure is that the term for the third offense, two years, is both unjust and inhuman, particularly as the same offense in men is condoned and ignored by society.

The statement of the objectors makes the following comment on the bill:

"The State has already assumed through its reformatories for women and the state farm for women the support of women recidivists. The inmates of these institutions have proper medical attendance and industrial training. The promoters of this bill propose the establishment of industrial training schools in local institutions and will thus impose additional expenditures which are unnecessary under the present system. Why, when the state has consented to this support andt raining of women offenders, should the cities reassume the expense of their maintenance? If our state institutions are fault of the management and not of the institutions and it is the duty of the state to see that it is properly managed.

"So far as can be ascertained, the promoters of this act are confined within the boundaries of New York city. There is no reason to believe that the authorities of Buffalo and Rochester, who are at present committing women offenders to the state farm at Valatie and the reformatory at Albion, have been consulted in the matter. It is evident that the law has been made general to avoid authorization by the mayor of an individual city. As a general law, it is a direct infringement upon home rule."

WAR ORDERS COMING FOR AMERICAN WOOLEN CO.

War orders amounting to about seven and a half millions of dollars have been placed with the American Woolen Company at its Boston office, according to a report received today. The governments of France, Great Britain and Russia are the heaviest buyers and the large order is occasioned by the new allied army regulations which call for the destruction of the entire uniform of a soldier every month, for sanitary reasons. These orders will be followed by others and woolen men say that the English mills are unable to supply the demand.

A large order for blankets has also been placed with the company and several other domestic mills in this country.

It could not be learned this morning whether or not the new order will affect the conditions at the local plant of the American Woolen Company. In the past serges have been the main product of the local mills and so far no orders have been received which could justify more activity here. It is expected that the company will make arrangements to handle some of its business through the local plant, however, if the Lawrence mills are found inadequate.

CHAMPION JESS WILLARD'S TIPS TO YOUNG MEN.

If a fellow wants to get anywhere he must stick in the face of the world.

Knockers are plenty but boosters few when you make your start.

One can be a prizefighter and a good man, but it's pretty hard.

I'm strong for the sportsman, but I hate the "sport."

Regular sleep is money in a young man's pocket. Three hours before midnight are worth six afterward.

A man who sleeps late runs his brain on one cylinder.

Swearing never helped a young man do a stroke of work.

No other kind of romance counts if you'll only be satisfied that the best sweetheart in the world is your own wife.

TWINS ARE PROBLEM IN U. S. MARINE CORPS.

But if Hallie Profits in Service Leslie Puts It Over Him In Love.

The Woodcock twins, Leslie F. and Hallie, twenty years old, who on enlisting obtained the promise that they should always serve in the same company, have become one of the chief problems of the United States marine corps. The entire corps at League island, Philadelphia, is amused by the continued complications which have arisen.

Both men are exactly alike in build, pose, action and expression, and as a result all sorts of punishments, rewards, commands and warnings meant for one are received by the other brother.

Leslie F. was found the other day in a state of well founded indignation over what he termed his brother's "outrageous conduct." He was engaged in painting a ceiling green, he explained, as a punishment for not reporting for drill, although he had been at the drill, and his brother, then absent upon a pilfered "shore leave," had not reported.

"Sometimes," said Leslie F., "I get a chance to put over a little matter on Hallie, and, believe me, when those chances come, I'm about due to get away with it. It seems to me that I've been doing that boy's work ever since we started toddling.

"Down in Norfolk a little while after our enlistment Hallie got himself a girl. One day he didn't have enough to take a car out to his girl's house. He asked me for a loan, and I said, 'Never!' Then I got all dressed up and just dropped out to see the young lady myself.

"Well, it sure was fun. It was 'Hallie' this and 'Hallie' that, and I never was petted so in my life.

"That's only one of four times I have outlucked Hallie in the romance market, but he gets back and then some. Here in the barracks he has it all over me all the time."

Scientist Gets Seeds of Trees That Grow 400 Feet High.

Seeds which are expected to grow trees more than 400 feet high have been received from Australia by Professor Henry G. Walters at the Plant Research and Botanical institute, Langhorne, Pa. The trees which Professor Walters will endeavor to grow are a part of the glory of Australia, but so far as he knows, none has ever been grown in America.

"From the cells of these huge trees, eighty-one feet in circumference, it is possible to distil a liquid hydrocarbon similar to that distilled by Edison from coal gas," Professor Walters says.

BEAR CLOSES UP TOWN.

Redding (Conn.) Citizens Take to Attics When Horse Is Eaten.

Redding, Conn., was closed up by a real, live, honest-to-goodness bear. The village board of strategy planned to attack so soon as it had a sufficient supply of ammunition and meanwhile used the telephone in arranging tactics.

Citizens were laughed at when they declared they had seen a bear. Everybody said it was all bunk that there could be a bear within fifty miles of New York city, but when one of Farmer James Green's horses was found half eaten everybody took to their bear proof cellars and attics.

WORD WORRIES WAR OFFICE.

British Puzzled Whether to Make It "Embuss" or "Embus."

A question of orthography is exercising the authorities at the British war office.

Since they have been using the London auto busses for the troops in France it has been necessary to employ some word in orders to indicate the getting into and getting out of those vehicles. A battalion is instructed to "embuss" at a certain point and to "debuss" at another. The spelling has been questioned in Whitehall. It is argued that it ought to be "embus" and "debus."

About Sports Generally

By Frank G. Menke

There is a man in baseball today for whom fans from Maine to Mexico and from the Atlantic to the Pacific are hoping success. But it doesn't look as though their wishes will make him a ball player.

That man is Jim Thorpe.

The great Indian is trying mightily to make good for McGraw and the populace is with him at every turn. And to our way of thinking this is as it should be.

Thorpe has been a wonderful athlete, yet with all the honors and the attendant publicity, he is unspoiled. Cheerful always, with a real sense of humor, avoidage of homage due him and, withal, not taking himself too seriously, the Indian stands in relief as an athlete of the very highest caliber.

He is working hard for McGraw. He would rather be "Thorpe, a great ball player," than "Thorpe, greatest football player and all-around athlete," but it doesn't look as though his ambition ever will be realized. He can't hit a curve ball.

Greater than Jess Willard

At one time Thorpe was a greater man than Jess Willard is now. But the Indian didn't rush into vaudeville or try to make money by selling chances to look at him. He plugged right along, trying to make good in his chosen line.

No athlete lives a cleaner life than Thorpe. If he wanted to make money he could quit baseball now and get a position coaching college athletes that would pay him more than he gets from the Giants.

Some day he will quit baseball and take up coaching. Then, his friends hope, he will gain the title of "Thorpe, greatest all-around coach."

Curley's Tribute to Johnson.

"The saddest thing I ever saw in my life," said Jack Curley as soon as he hopped off the train in New York on returning from the Havana fight, "was when Jack Johnson started to wave good-by to us at the wharf in Havana and then turned and walked alone and in tears down the pier.

"Beaten and a fugitive from his own country, it broke him all up to see our happy crowd headed for the land of the free. I found Johnson a man before, during and after the fight. It doesn't make any difference what he's done outside the ring, he was a brave, game, generous warrior inside of it. He is the first man defeated since John L. Sullivan, who has been man enough to acknowledge defeat without a hue and cry of being tricked and doped out of his title."

For the Children

Group of Youngsters Watching a Ball Game.

After long months of weary waiting the baseball season has at last arrived, and all the boys, great and small, are supremely happy. There are other sports that young America likes very well, but nothing so thoroughly fills the youthful heart as a game of baseball.

As soon as the spring sun dries the mud in the playgrounds, balls, bats and mitts are taken from their winter hiding places and the fun begins. And it is well that the boy finds joy in baseball. There is no other game that will develop the best there is in him.

It teaches quick thinking and acting and furnishes abundant exercise to build up and strengthen the body. Baseball is truly called the national game, for there is hardly a man or boy in the country who hasn't, at one time or another, been either a fan, a player or both. The illustration shows a group of boys watching a game in one of New York city's parks. Their faces show the eagerness and interest with which they regard the various plays.

A New Box Party.

A young people's society gave the following unique affair that resulted in a most enjoyable evening for all the participants: The invitations were delivered in tiny pill boxes and asked the guests to bring a lunch prepared for two in a box to consist of sandwiches, hard boiled eggs, cake and wafers. The entertainment committee provided potato salad, coffee and olives. The first test was for girls only, and each was given an empty box, a piece of paper and some string. Scissors were also placed accessible to all, and five minutes was allowed for seeing who could do up the neatest parcel. A prize was awarded, consisting of a box of homemade candy. The next test was for the boys, and the same boxes were used and a number of articles produced to be packed, and the man who displayed the neatest box at the end of five minutes received a box of salted peanuts. The luncheon boxes were hidden, and the company was divided into pairs by matching animal crackers and hunted the boxes. Then after the feast a boxing glove was produced, and each one in turn had to put it on and write his or her name and the date.

A Flower Love Story.

Marigold lives in the woods with her mother and was very happy until one day she heard that her friend daisy was to be married to johnny jumpup, and then she wanted to marry too.

One day the young prince William came riding by, who was called sweet william. He fell in love with marigold and aster to marry him. She said, "I will have to ask poppy." So the next afternoon he came again at 4 o'clock and found her sitting on a snowball blowing a trumpet, watching how the sweetpea hops. When she saw sweet william she rose, and he picked her tulips. He said, "If you don't marry me I will wear a bachelor's button, and you will see my bleeding heart." But she said she would marry him, and so he took her home, gave her a golden rod and a buttercup to drink from. The next day they were married by jack-in-the-pulpit, and then marigold said, "I hope I won't be a mourning bride, but will live forever with sweet william and be will forget-me-not."

The Seven Wonders.

The seven wonders of the world were: 1. Egyptian pyramids. 2. Mausoleum of Artemisia. 3. Temple of Diana at Ephesus. 4. Hanging gardens of Babylon. 5. Colossus of Rhodes. 6. The statue of Jupiter Olympus. 7. The Pharos, or watchtower of Alexandria.

The seven American wonders have been decreed to be as follows:

1. Niagara falls. 2. Yellowstone park. 3. Mammoth cave. 4. Canyons and Garden of the Gods. 5. The giant trees of California. 6. The natural bridge. 7. The Yosemite valley.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Boys.

We all love manly fellows,
Boys that are brave and true;
Boys that are helpful and earnest
And know just what to do.

The boy who can help his mother
With her weary household work;
The boy who learns well his lessons
And never is known to shirk.

The boy with a heart as gentle
As a girl's, when the case demands,
And the boy who is always ready
To do that which falls to his hands,

God bless, may heaven bless them!
They are most everywhere;
They are most everywhere in demand

HOUSECLEANING NOTES.

Some Hints Which the Housewife Will Find Invaluable at This Season.

Housecleaning notes of interest are sought by many housewives just now, and the following hints to housecleaners are put in as few words as possible. Each item aims to help some worker and may help many.

A good way to keep the rugs from wrinkling after they have been well cleaned and brushed is to roll them tight on a long pole, taking great pains to see that they do not wrinkle in the rolling. When they are tight tie a bit of cord at the top and bottom of the rugs to keep them from loosening and stand the pole in the corner in a room which is not being cleaned. This pole can be conveniently moved, and you will find that the rugs, instead of becoming wrinkled again and just as dirty as at the start, will stay quite fresh and clean until you are ready to relay them.

If you have any white furniture, white enameled wood or white iron bedsteads you will probably find it quite gray by housecleaning time. But a cloth wet in kerosene will remove all the dirt quite easily. Do not try soap and water, which also does the work of dirt removal, for you will find that all the enamel comes off.

Also once the enamel polish is rubbed off you will find that the white furniture soils much more quickly. Kerosene, however, leaves the enamel unharmed and the furniture as white as new.

If there is hardwood furniture it will probably need cleaning as much as the rest of the house. It can be done quite easily with a homemade mixture of a quart of warm water and two heaping tablespoonfuls of bal soda. Apply this solution with a well soaped toothbrush; then rinse with cold water and dry with a soft cloth. Only do a small piece at a time and work quickly, for therein lies the secret of success. Afterward go over the wood with a mixture of one-third turpentine, two-thirds raw oil and a pinch of salt. Rub this in well for the polish.

Very often the floors are the most neglected part of the house in the general cleaning, yet if rugs are used a good part of the bare floor always shows. If you differ from most housewives in being very particular about the appearance of your floors you will find this an excellent polish: Pour into a quart of turpentine not quite a half pound of melted beeswax; then add 5 cents' worth of liquid ammonia.

Put this mixture in a tin pail and set this pail in another bigger pan or pail holding hot water and put it on a low fire to heat. If you can keep it warm while you are using it so much the better, for it grows thick and hard to apply when cold. Put it on with a flannel cloth and polish up with a bit of carpet.

KNOW YOUR WARES.

The Housewife Should Be Familiar With Cuts of Beef.

If the young housewife would only realize that she can never economize until she learns to know the wares she buys she would improve much more rapidly in her profession. For example, she should know just how a beef is cut up and which sections are best for cooking purposes. She should know from which part of the lamb the loin chops come and why veal is so high priced.

For example, good beef from animals that have been well nourished is a healthy red. The fat is firm and faintly colored with pink, and the meat itself has streaks of fat.

The price in beef varies according to seasons. In summer few women care for roasts, but prefer steaks. For this reason the sirloin and round cuts are quite high from May to October because of the excessive demand for them. The rib roasts, on the contrary, drop in price during the hot months, but soar again as winter draws near.

To listen to the orders of most housewives one might think that an ox was made up of nothing but rib roasts and porterhouse steaks. The demand for them is so great that the other parts of the beef, which must be bought by the butcher at the same time as the favorite cuts, sink to prices much lower than is customary for beef. But these cheaper sections often hold just as much nourishment and less waste than the more popular cuts.

A flank steak can be broiled or braised with a stuffing or cut up for a beef stew or pie. It is perfectly delicious when properly cooked and is a great saving.

The rump of beef is rather neglected too. From it can be made good pot roasts, or if the housewife will take the trouble the rump beef can be corned at home by dissolving enough rock salt in a pail of water to make the water stiff enough to float a raw potato. In this the rump should be plunged, covered and allowed to stand from two to four days, according to the amount of brine wanted in the beef.

The cuts from the round steak are usually ground for chopped meat and are usually almost as high in price as the round steak. When the housewife sees cheap chopped meat let her avoid it. It is sure to be puffed out with water and fat. It is far better to pay a little more and to obtain legitimate meat.

Lightning Omelet.

Butter a baking dish and put several strips of stale bread at the bottom. Cut several slices of any good domestic or imported cheese. Beat two eggs to a froth and add salt and pepper. Pour on top of the bread and cheese. Put

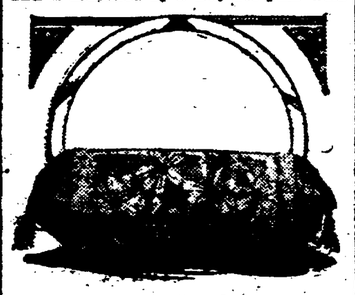
President of Association For Erection of Washington Memorial.

MRS. HENRY F. DIMOCK.

A building is to be erected at Washington which is to be a veritable people's forum. There is an association called the George Washington Memorial association, of which Mrs. Dimock is president, which has been authorized by congress to raise $2,500,000 for the construction and maintenance of this building. A site has been set apart by the Sixty-second congress next to the new National museum and near Pennsylvania avenue, which is valued at $500,000.

The memorial is to contain rooms for various state exhibits, offices for patriotic, educational, scientific and public welfare organizations of national scope; many small and average size halls, a banquet room, reception room, etc., and a large hall to seat not less than 6,000 persons.



This auditorium, with the small halls adjoining, will afford ample accommodations for great world congresses such as have heretofore met in the capital cities of Europe. Diplomatic functions and the inaugural reception may be held there also.

This unique and serviceable memorial, when completed, will be under the care and administration of the board of regents of the Smithsonian institution.

Make Your Days Joyous.

Here is a general warning to elderly women: Never permit yourself to live in the past. This trick, more than anything else, will age you. So often we hear women say: "Life holds nothing for me now save memories. I live again my loved ones in the past."

That speech and crows' feet are boon companions. Naturally the woman of fifty or more finds herself dropping into reminiscences, but do not indulge in this habit even if it gives you a melancholy sort of pleasure. Find pleasure in those around you. Force yourself to be interested in their interests. Think of the future. Never permit yourself to think that your usefulness is ended or your capacity for enjoyment dulled. If you cannot play tennis you certainly can take brisk walks in the fresh morning air—and play bridge later in the day, if your conscience permits. And there is no law against your playing golf.

Do not dress in what is known as a kittenish fashion, but do not think that because years are overtaking you you must wear dun colored raiment. Do not brush your hair back severely from your face and don an uncompromising cue. Fluff your hair on either side of you part it, and under no circumstances wear a severe pompadour unless you have classic features and a stately carriage.

Do not curl your hair with the tongs as this has a tendency to break hairs which you cannot afford to lose. Better far to use soft rags or patent curlers overnight, and right here let us speak of the nightcap, which is enjoying a decided revival. Make this of very thin china silk, interlined with fine floss wadding in which you strew sachet powder. This gives a charming perfume to the hair and warms off dangerous bone drafts if you sleep with

The Quirk Attraction

For today there are two smashing features in the Keystone comedy, "Sea Nymphs," which features Fatty Arbuckle and Mabel Normand. One big two reel laugh. The other is that old time comedy drama made famous by the late Frank Chaufrau entitled "Kit The Arkansas Traveler" with which he toured the United States for several seasons and which played to capacity houses everywhere and which the writer enjoyed on three occasions. Many will recall its sterling qualities in the 80's. A big bill of amateurs and three other reels are also included. Tomorrow a splendid program has been prepared especially for the ladies and children. POLICEMEN AWHEEL TO SOON TERRORIZE SPEED MANIACS ON STREETS

The new police motorcycle which has been ordered through James Bogue, the Harley-Davidson dealer here, will probably arrive early next week. Mr. Bogue made an effort to get one from the distributing agency in Syracuse and, if that had been possible the machine would have been here yesterday, but the agency sold its last machine in stock ten minutes before he arrived and an order to the factory at Milwaukee was necessary.

The machine will be a six-horse power single cylinder model, and all the policemen in the department will be taught the operation of the motor.

As soon as the motor arrives and the police become well versed in handling it, an active crusade will be inaugurated against the speeders and reckless drivers of automobiles and motorcycles who are making race courses of the city streets especially in the residential districts. Hevay fines will be imposed upon all offenders and it is hoped that reckless motorists will be inoculcated with more respect for the law when these actions are taken.

Muffler cut-out, smoke and traffic ordinance violators will also be prosecuted and it has just come to the attention of the department that there are several unlicensed drivers in the city. It is no unusual spectacle to see a small boy at the wheel of a large motor truck or automobile in direct violation of the law. Automobilists who are members of the Fulton Automobile Club will also take action in the near future in this matter.

A Home for Ten Cents

A few days ago Miss Serena Helen Blue, a Minnesota girl, went to the Unite States Land Office at Cass Lake, Minn., and paid ten cents to the Government for a deed to her homestead at Turtle Lake, in that State.

Miss Blue's acquisition consists of a point of land forming a little cape jutting into the lake, the area consisting of eight one-hundredths of an acre. The land office functionaries say it is the smallest homestead ever taken up.

The young woman who has the property is twenty-seven years old. To comply with the law and obtain a land patent, she built a log house whose dimensions are 14 by 16 feet, and lived in it seventeen months. The dime paid ito then land office was the necesary Government fee, and because of this payment Miss Blue will not be obliged to finish the three years of residence on the homestead which would have otherwise be required.

The law demanded that Miss Blue cultivate 218 square feet of the 3,484 square feet in her miniature estate. She did more than that, putting nearly half the lan under cultivation. Her crops consisted of cabbage, tomatoes and clover.

Here is a young woman who was determined to have a home in her own right an who had no false no snobbish notions about going ahead to get it. She didn't mind the venture being a humble one, didn't care if somebody laughed at it, was willing to live in a log house provided she could call it her own, gauged her enterprise by what she knew she could accomplish, and gave the government better than it asked in complying with the regulations.

If everybody were as much in earnest, and as sensible, as Miss Serena Helen Blue, landed proprietor, of Turtle Lake, Minnesota, more folks would own their homes, and the "Back to the Land" movement would mean less talk and bigger achievement. —Buffalo Times.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, April 23.—Senator Elihu Root, chairman of the Constitutional Convention has ably contrasted the parallel between the present convention and the one that preceded it in a speech at the meeting of the Academy of Political Science delivered last year. The words of the distinguished diplomat and senator are of peculiar interest on the eve of the return to the Capitol of the one hundred and sixty-eight delegates who will revise the State Constitution under the guidance of their chairman.

"There is an interesting parallel between the present Constitutional Convention and the one that preceded it," observed Senator Root. "The last one ought to have occurred in 1887, twenty years after the Convention of 1867. It did not please the party which happened to be in power in 1887 and for a number of years afterward to have the Convention, because they could not get the arrangements just to suit them. At last, in 1893, everything was right and the convention was determined upon and brought on; delegates were elected in 1893, and a convention was held in 1894. But lo, after everything was right and the Convention was determined upon these came a revolution in the politics of the State, and the other party elected a majority of the delegates and controlled the Convention.

"At this time it seemed to some one—I don't know to whom—that it would be a bright stroke of politics to advance the Convention, and so a special election was held, and the Convention was brought on by a narrow majority, composed in part, we already know by judicial decisions of fradulent votes. But lo, after the Conevention was thus determined upon a revolution occurred and the other party controls the Convention.

And the lesson is that it does not pay to be too acute and adroit and cunning in American politics. The best way is to go on in a simple direct, honest, faithful effort to help the working of our free self-government. Whoever does that will go ahead of the very smart politicians every time.

Senator Root pointed, out in his next thought that in September, 1914, the Convention of that year had substantially completed its work, and had taken a recess for a few days to enable the committee on revision to give the last careful consideration to the terms or form of work. He said that he went from Albany to Saratoga, where the Republican convention was held and found himself put on the committee of resolutions.

"I attended the meeting of the committee and someone produced a platform which had been prepared and which was handed to the chairman of the committee. The platform was read, or run through hastily and the chairman was about to put it to a vote. I noticed that no mention was made in this platform of the work of the Constitutional Convention—a Convention the majority of which was composed of Republicans, nominated and elected by Republican votes. We that the convention had done some good things, but it was not considered of sufficient consequence to mention in the resolution of the Republican convention which met immediately after the work was completed. I made some observations upon the subject, and was very loyally seconded by a gentleman for whom I have always had the kindest feelings and a clause was put into this platform approving the work of the convention. This year I went to Saratoga to attend the Republican convention, and there were present between twenty to thirty of the ablest leaders of opinion from all parts of the State of New York, who spent three days in discussing the question as to what position the Republican party ought to take in regard to the work of the Constitutional Convention. That marks a change in the public attitude towards questions of government."

Moral Note in Politics

During the last few years a great change has taken place in politics. When Steffens wrote "The Shame of Cities" he had plenty of facts to make good the lurid title of his exposure. City government the country over is better today than county government. Mayors as a rule, appreciate their responsibility to the people and try very hard to make good. Aldermen the country over are making a sacrifice to serve in common councils. The Chicago Herald rings the true note in this:

From now on the moral note promises to grow more an more important in our politics. The old idea of public affairs as a cold business transaction is rapidly being tempered with newer ideas of public responsibility and wide humanity. The human element is coming into its own. The tendency is to answer more and more emphatically the age-long question: "Am I my brother's keeper?"

This does not mean that politics will become sermonesque. It does not mean that what one side assumes to be the exclusively moral view of any question will necessarily triumph over views no less sincerely held by thousands of other citizens. It does not mean that the morality of an issue always will remain division on moral questions more or less responsive to temperamental or acquired differences of people.

But it does mean that the day of the mere politician—of the national leader who bases hisc laim to leadership on his skill as a strategist and his opportunism as a statesman— is about ended. Henceforth the man who expects to impress himself on the great American public must ground his appeal on wide sympathy, on lofty aims and moral earnestness. —Watertown Standard.

INDUSTRIAL COMMITTEE GETS RIGHT DOWN TO WORK FOR INDUSTRIES

The newly appointed committee on industries of the Fulton Chamber of Commerce met last evening at five o'clock in the chamber rooms. Director W. H. Butts was in charge and among those present were F. B. Dilts, vice-chairman; William Church, secretary; L. G. Adams, E. J. Schem and F. W. Richardson, comprising the executive committee, and Messrs. Ames, Gilbert, Bidwell, Gillard, Macksey, Hall, G. C. and T. H. Webb and Frank Zaia.

The executive secretary explained the purpose of the committee and the work which is to be performed, namely to help the present industries here; to secure new industries; to better the laboring condition to secure work for the unemployed and to advertise the advantages of the city.

A sub-committee which will handle the work of assisting the present industries was appointed comprising, Messrs. Adams, Richardson and Forsyth. A sub-committee to work toward securing new industries comprises, Messrs. Schem, Richardson, Smith and G. C. Webb. The sub-committee which will find work for the unemployed is composed of Messrs. Gilbert, Hollingsworth, Massaro Bidwell and Church.

The subcommittee on advertising and publicity, which will take steps toward putting Fulton and its advantages in the limelight outside of the city comprises Messrs, Putnam, Wolever, DeBarbour, Mason, E. E. Morrill, Ames and Andrews.

The meeting was featured with a great deal of hustle and ginger on the part of the members of the committee, and proved conclusively that the committee is composed of active and interested parties. The spirit of the committee and its ability to get down to business at once without delay was a source of great pleasure to Secretary Heydecker and Director Butts.

WATERING CITY TREES

Practicable Method Described by Investigator Who Has Studied Subject.

"In a recent issue of the Scientific American," says a correspondent of that paper, "appeared a description of a novel contrivance which is being used in Strassburg, Germany, for applying water to city trees in dry seasons. The method therein described—of bending a perforated iron pipe around the tree to be watered and then attempting to saturate the hard ground sufficiently for the needs of a large tree by means of pouring water into a funnel and thence into the bent and buried pipe, pierced with small holes—appears to be a most impractical and expensive method.

"Your correspondent has often had occasion to apply water to planted trees in an arid climate, and he has been uniformly successful with the simple expedient of boring one or more holes with a post auger, avoiding all large roots, at a suitable distance from the tree—say eighteen inches, more or less, according to its age—and to a depth of two to three feet.

"These holes, if more than one is deemed necessary, should encircle the tree equidistantly and be tamped full of horse manure mixed with light stable litter, which will be found to take up water by the bucketful as fast as it can be poured thereon, fertilizing and softening the ground all around the roots and retaining the moisture for a long time.

"A dab of hay can easily be added on top of any hole where settling takes place. By this means the roots will also receive an increase of moisture during rainy seasons."

Bill For County Welfare Boards.

Largely as a result of the success of the boards of public welfare in Kansas City and St. Joseph a bill has been proposed by social workers in Missouri to create in every county in the state a board of public welfare for the administration of all county social service activities. These boards would replace what are at present known as boards of county visitors, which are purely advisory.—Survey.

Hill No. 60 Like Crater of Volcano as Shells Spurt Fire and Death

By Harold Ashton

London, Saturday.—Throughout Thursday tumult unspeakable raged around Hill No. 60. For many hours the British hung on grimly against the most terrific bombardment they have yet experienced. The Germans brought the whole of their heavy artillery to bear upon the hill, which was nothing more or less than a spot of flame and fury, shattered, smashed and spurting fire and blinding dust.

It was more like what one would imagine a volcanic crater in full eruption to be than anything eles,' was the description given by one observer to me.

British infantry and the best shots drawn from many British regiments fought, lying prone on their faces for hours in open firing until their rifles got too hot to hold. Their courage and staying power amid all this hell was sublime. Shrapnel burst over them continually. Hundreds were wounded in the back. But still they fought, and whenever there was a chance of a charge or a slight dash forward they took it with magnificent nerve.

The aeroplane warfare was continuous, and the Germans flying high over the hill flung hundreds of incendiary bombs on the British temporary intrenchments. By nightfall Hill No. 60 was a spectacle indescriable. Thousands of shells had been rained upon it.

GERMANS GIVE UP IDEA OF SETTLEMENT

London, Saturday.—The Daily Mail's correspondent at The Hague telegraphs:

"Reports received here through diplomatic channels from Berlin state that the German government has practically abandoned the attempt to arrange a settlement between Austria and Italy.

"Prince von Bulow has been instructed to notify the Italian government that Germany considers its claims preposterous.

"In diplomatic circles rere the report is generally credited."

The Daiy Mail Warsa correspondent send to his newspaper a long statement from "a high authoritative source," in which the possibility is discussed of an early conclusion of a separate peace with Austria.

"Although the air is full of such stories and the indications show that Asutria is desirous of an instant and lasting peace," the statement says, "it must be understood that if Austria ceased to be a belligerent her position as a neutral would mean that she would be able to offer as great, if not a greater obstacle to the success of Russian arms as if she remained a belligerent.

The Russian plan of campaign now is definitely based on Grant's despised American civil war theory of a continuous extension of battle line. tI is necessary that Russia possess herself, temporarily at least of the Austro-German frontier line from Cracow westward. Grant failed to hack his way through although he had the preponderance of five men to his opponent's two, which is a greater preponderance than we can hope to attain. But he kept extending his line unti lone day the foe failed to get him and was outflanked.

From the same source the correspondent says he learns that recently there hav been two confrencs between Emperor and Emperor Francis Joseph and Archduke Eugene of Austria, at which a possible separate peace for Austria was discussed.

17-INCH GUNS USED AGAINST ALLIED LINE

London, Saturday.—Krupp's newest engine of destruction has made its apeparance in Flanders in the form of a 17-inch gun. hSells from it have fallen in Ypres this week, according to the official "eye witness," who sent the following semi-weekly report to the War Office yesterday:

"The German attacks on Hill o. 60, which had stopped at the time of issuin gthe report of last Monday, have been renewed several times. These attacks all failed, and for the time being they have ceased. We hold the entire crest of th hill and so deny its use to the enemy(who have attached great importance to it.

There is not and there never has been any truth in the German official communication that the enemy had recaptured this position.

"During the course of the operation around Hill No. 60 the enemy fired shells seventeen inches in diameter into the town of Ypres.

"Another Inquirer" in substance asked this question, "Does the City of Fulton pay $60 a month for stenographic services while the recipient of the salary is doing private work?" The question remains unanswered, yet the public has been told that a special election costing $60 is a means too expensive to get the sentiment of the people upon an important question.

In accordance with a proclamation issued by Mayor Fox earlier in the week, a public meeting of the Common Council was held last night at City Hall for the purpose of hearing objections to Senate Bill 1266, entitled, "An Act, amending the City Charter of the City of Fulton in regard to the limitations of the said city to contract debts." The bill simply brings the city under the constitutional provision setting the limit of indebtedness at 10 per cent. of the assessed valuation. The clause was not incorporated in the city charter when it was drawn up and has been enacted for the guidance of the public officials. The resolution was introduced by Alderman Gardner, and was passed.

After the passage of the amendment measure, several phases of the Brown bill were discussed. The bill provides a salary for the Mayor and Council if the present council sees fit, and also empowers the council to direct the City Camberlain to borrow sums of money not to exceed $20,000 when public safety, fire, flood or any other emergency deemed sufficient cause by the council shall arise. Alderman Foster objected to that part of the bill saying that the council already had the power to raise emergency funds by special election, and that he could not see the necessity for such an amendment to the charter.

President Stevenson of the Board of Public Works was granted the floor, and he told the assemblage that the bridge over the Hunter tail-race on North 1st st. was in an unsafe condition. In fact the street should be closed. The Board has no funds with which to build a new bridge and at present a special election is necessary if money is to be raised. If the Brown bill is passed the council can appropriate the money necessary and if any other occasion should arise which is deemed an emergency by the council further appropriations can be made up to the sum of $20,000.

The estimated cost of the new bridge is $400. Alderman Foster said he conceded the necessity of a bridge but asked if that amount could not be raised by special election. Mayor Fox said the special election would cost too much money. Alderman Foster stated that the cost would not exceed $60 and reiterated that the taxpayers should be allowed to vote the question and he did not favor an amendment which would empower the council to appropriate large sums at any time it saw fit. He stated that the definition of the word "emergency" would play a large part in the matter in the future. President Stevenson stated that he would order the street closed. He told the council that the Board of Public Works has only $862 on hand and this amount must be used to clean the streets for the balance of the year. Alderman Foster again conceded the necessity of the new bridge but maintained that the method of raising money by a special election was the safest way.

Alderman Foster introduced a resolution regarding the improvement on First st. between Rochester and Broadway. The council is in receipt of a letter from the State Highway Commissioner relative to the improvement, and the costs of the road, plans, specifications, etc., are included. The road is to be known as State Highway No. 55408, and the state is to pay part of the costs. The extra costs which are to be borne by the city amount to $10,300. It was resolved that the plans and costs be approved and that the sum of $10,300 be appropriated, such amount to be placed in the hands of the City Chamberlain subject to the draft of the State Commissioner of Highways. The motion was passed.

Russian Aeroplanes Aid Army's Raid Into East Prussia; Stores Destroyed

By Frederick Rennet

London, Saturday.—A strong column of Russian cavalry again has entered East Prussia near Memel and continues to threaten the enemy's left flank.

New Russian giant aeroplanes of the Ilya Murometz type have been very active in destroying the enemy's stores in East Prussia and on the lower Vistula. They are much speedier than any German airship and carry as havy ammunition. One of them dropped explossives upon German barges on the Vistula below Plock, sinking many.

These aircraft until recently were regarded as being in a risky experimental stage, but they now are certainly the most formidable and them ost reliable heavy aircraft in the world.

The condition in the south is as entirely satisfactory as it is possible to be. The Russians still continue to repulse the enemy's counter attacks in the Southern Carpathians, and the main movement will develop elsewhere."

A Reuter dispatch from Petrograd says:

There was much activity yesterday on the part of Russian airships. One dropped fifteen bombs on Plock. Several German vessels on the Vistula were struck, as were the railroad station and trains.

Two other machines bombarded the railway station at Mlawa and the German aerodrome at Sannisy. Considerable damage was done to German trenches.

MAYOR CLAIMS ABUSE BUT IS NOT SPECIFIC

Before the meeting adjourned, Mayor Fox made a brief statement, a copy of which could not be procured this morning at the City Hall, in which he said among other things, that The Fulton Evening Times had soiled the memory of all city officials in the past and was assailing those of the present; that the administration was working hard to make things easy for the next administration; that he was ready at any time to hear complaints; that all taxpayers, big and little would be given a square deal; that the city was still several thousand dollars under the limit of indebtedness and would remain so while he was Mayor.

The Mayor's statement, however, for so many words conveys remarkably little to the patient taxpayer. His Honor states that things are being prepared in the proper way for the next administration, thereby intimating that he will not seek a return to the office which he now holds. We might run a large headline on that. "Mayor Fox Will Not Run Again." He also complains of the way The Evening Times has been abusing him, but fails to question the veracity of the statements which have appeared in The Evening Times. He simply says he has been "assailed,"—whether wrongfully or rightfully, he fails to say. He stated that any taxpayer who would come to him with a just grievance would be heard. His Honor banks on human nature. There are taxpayers in large numbers who would like to go to the Mayor and tell him several things, but they refrain for various reasons. The Mayor may have a few things conveyed to him by the next returns, if he decides to run again.

The Mayor also stated that he was tryin gto keep down expenses. Now think this over:

A taxpayer has asked through the columns of this paper whether or not the Common Council pays a stenographer $60 monthly, and whether or not that stenographer is doing private as well as public work. Mr. Feeley is being paid $60 monthly—whether he is doing private work for Mr. Fanning is a question. If the Mayor is really in earnest when he says he wishes to give everyone a square deal, why doesn't he investigate? He is a public servant and he knows whose bilsl are paid each month. Last evening Alderman Foster suggested a special election for the purpose of giving the taxpayers of the city a chance to express themselves on a certain question. Mayor Fox objected to a special election, saying it would cost too much. The cost would approximate $60. Do you get the point? $60 paid to a stenographer each month isn't imporant enough to demand any investigation, but $60 is too much money—when it means a chance for the taxpayers to express themselves

A SUGGESTION

The Evening Times would not attempt to do more than suggest. Sentiment, public sentiment, is a powerful factor for good, and in this enlightened day, a newspaper cannot hope to change the course of mortal man by the ego of the editorial quotation "We," which is nothing more than a shield. The Evening Times in making suggestions is unable to use the personal pronoun "I," because the single capital has the identity of the man who makes a practice of running for the Presidency of the United States, or of prescribing for the navy men the use of grape juice—and nothing stronger.

The Evening Times not being of the personal pronoun brand, and not caring to hide behind a shield, is left accordingly upon one resource, which is, to turn the limelight on the force of suggestion.

In Thursday's issue of The Evening Times Mr. "Truth Seeker" asked this newspaper as a public organ to discontinue filling its columns with unanswered inquiries and to give a suffering public the information sought by at least two men who have contributed letters for publication—letters that bore upon affairs of vital importance to every citizen of the city. In reply to "Truth Seeker's" request for information that is explicit—information that is not couched in "an imputation" produced "by a cleverly worded inquiry," The Evening Times falls back upon its line of defense, which is to suggest. Every communication appearing in these columns is suggestive—purposely unfinished—left for the reader to think and to act according to his own dictates—after the fashion of his own ideas.

Dost thou, O "Truth Seeker," fall under the spell of the thought?

If this small town daily newspaper has opened up new avenues of thought, taken down a length of old rail fence, and let the minds of many of Fulton's best citizens wander into other pastures; if The Evening Times in its simple way has started something going toward better conditions in municipal government, by opening up its columns (which are as free as the air we breathe) for the discussion of city affairs that reek with the odors that belong to aged refuse, then the medium has done well to suggest, and the messages have reached home.

While it is within the province of this newspaper as a public organ to comply with "Truth Seeker's" request, by giving the public the information which is sought by different writers of letters and hundreds and hundreds of men and women taxpayers of Fulton, it ill becomes a paper whose "We" is not well grounded in the homes and hearts of the eople of a city of adoption to even attempt more than has been undertaken—for be it remembered that The Evening Times has not reached the age when its forbears begin to look for the first sign of a tooth. And more than that—the "We" with the usual quotation asys unto "Truth Seeker" and others, deliver us from considered as having a sixty-horse-power opinion of ourselves.

"Truth Seeker" must be a longer-lived resident of Fulton than many another citizen. He must know that there is a solid basis for the queries fired by the writers of the various communications that have appeared in The Evening Times; and knowing, why does he not turn on the limelight?

OUR ONLY LINE OF DEFENCE

The custom has grown up in this country, even among military men, of speaking and thinking of the navy as "our first line of national defence," the coast artillery and mobile army forming the second and third. What are the facts? At the outbreak of the war the coast artillery would defend, with doubtful adequacy, our chief cities and harbors from attack by sea. It would afford no protection against attack by land.

Our regular mobile troops, available for combat with hostile troops which had effected a landing and exclusive of those garrisoned oversea, number between thirty and forty thousand men. Their usefulness, in view of the fact that the landing might take place with at least treble their numbers at a point practically unforeseeable, may be left to the imagination.

The militia numbers over one hundred thousand, but the British territorials, who at the beginning of the present war had the reputation of being slightly more efficient than our militia is, were subjected to three months' training before being put into the firing line. The volunteers were trained for six months and more. Using such troops, militia or volunteers, before they are properly trained is cold-blooded butchery.

We find then that, rhetoric apart, our navy would be for three months after a declaration of war our sole line of national defence. Under our present military system, which is based on factors that are not liekly soon to change, we should have no other line. Between our coast cities and the enemy stands the navy, and the navy alone.

This is not a temporary condition arising from the whim of politicians. It is the settled policy of the country, and, as such, it throws an enormous responsibility on one man—a responsibility that, since August 1, has grown in the minds of many Americans to be the weightiest in the country.

Unfortunately, that one man is the present Secretary of the

Opinions

Worse Than Ever!

Just how potent the canners who desire to exploit and overwork women and children are has been proved anew at Albany by the fact that the Rules Committee has been forced, somehow, to revive the vicious Bewley bill after it was recommitted by a vote of the Assembly. Recommittal at this stage of the session ordinarily kills a bill; in this case the house was especially warned that a vote for recommittal would be a vote to kill the bill. Yet this many-lived monster, mysteriously reanimated, is again capable of mischief.

No mistake should be made about the scope of this measure. No matter what Governor Whitman may have been led to believe about it, the provisions speak for themselves. It gives the canners greater leeway than the former bill, which the Governor refused to sign.

That bill permitted only seventy-two hours' work a week for women; this one removes all restrictions on the total hours of work a week, providing that not more than twelve consecutive hours of work in one calendar day may be required. Not even the most greedy canners want an employe to work more than twelve consecutive hours in any one calendar day.

Under the ingeniously worded provisions of the new bill they could squeeze from seventy-eight to eighty-four hours' labor out of their workers in "emergencies;" that is, they could contract for the produce from an acreage far beyond the usual capacity of the plants, and then, running the canneries on the "emergency" basis, earn fat profits by driving their women and minor employes to the limit of their endurance. Any worker who didn't like such conditions at ten cents an hour would always be able to quit—and starve.

Such a bill, masquerading under the guise of harmlessness, is an abomination. No legislator who values the welfare of the youth of this generation and the mothers of the next can vote for it.—N. Y. Tribune.

American Dyes

Is dye-making, as an American industry, a hopeless undertaking? Thomas A. Edison says it is not. A directly opposite view is taken by Bernard C. Hesse, who recently delivered an address on the subject before the American Chemical Society in New Orleans. This authority thinks that Germany has a grasp of the manufacture of dyes with which no other country can successfully compete.

He points out that in the United States the makers of chemicals already have many profitable fields open to them, and that it would be foolish of them to risk money in so precarious a venture as dye-making on an extensive scale. He says that the textile manufacturers are the men who would profit most from home-made dyes, and that they are the ones who, logically, should stand the risk in establishing a business which would be largely experimental. He sums up the situation, as far as this country is concerned, as follows:

The transplantation of the coal-tar dye industry to the United States is not a question of patent protection; it is nothing but an economic question—a plain matter of dollars and cents. Those products can be made in this country if persons will buy those products at a fair margin of profit over the cost of domestic production: and, since we know in advance that the cost of production here will be above the cost of production elsewhere, plus any prevailing import duty, why should we go to the costly venture of spending millions of dollars to prove the obvious?

Of course, if these statements must be accepted at their face value, there is nothing more to be said. Dye-making in the United States is a dead issue. But it may be noted that Mr. Edison and other practical men think that, possessing, as it does, the necessary raw materials, chemists of high ability and the m st efficient manufacturing methods in the worl, the United States could find facilities for successfully producing dyes; if protected from gross price-cutting by foreign makers. And, as Mr. Hesse appears to be of German extraction, perhaps he looks at the subject from a Teutonic viewpoint. At any rate, he says: "As a matter of fact, the whole world's coal-tar dye consumption is about enough to make a decent-sized business for one country."—Rochester Chronicle.

A SHOT GUN DOSE

By I. E. Hyde

The papers dope us full of war,
We don't know what our symptoms are;
But, Belgian kids we're feeding.
The preacher says: "With your permission,
I'll take your dough for foreign mission."
A stab—our purse he's bleeding.
A public move—it is a sin;
But, something has to get your tin.
(I hope you are not laughing.)
The school wants a dozen books.
The doctors graft like banded crooks.
(I really am not chaffing.)
The town must have another church.
Your cash will take another lurch;
You cannot keep it longer.
And now they want a charity ball.
We hear it oft', that same old call;
I think its growing stronger.
The teachers say your kids must go
And boost a dentist bill to show
Their teeth are in a socket.
Another graft; another dose,
To cure the man you think is close.
(You'll hit an empty pocket.)
How can a man climb up a hill,
When forced to take that bitter pill
That old Doc Grab is mixing?
Let's toss his bum cathartic out;
It's time we knew what he's about;
And chuck the dose he's fixing.
We'll delve into analogy,
And get wise to pathology,
And when old Grab cries "Cash,"
We'll mix him up a shot gun dose,
And get him in a comatose,
Then, flunk him all to smash.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

In Alabama mother wants to vote. The State Congress of Mothers at Montgomery adopted with enthusiasm and unanimity a resolution to that effect.

* * *

In Kansas a number of small towns had complete tickets of women in the field at the recent election, but in no place did they win. Women in office, at least in Kansas where women have had municipal suffrage since 1887, is not a result of woman suffrage.

* * *

In Montana, according to the Butte Miner, "None of the judges were forced to explain the voting machine to women, while many men seemed at a loss to know what to do after pulling down the levers."

It was also said to be the first election in Butte free from arrests for offences connected with the election. The police attributed the quiet and order to the presence of women in or near the polling places. It was estimated that between 80 and 90 per cent. of both men and women who were registered voted.

Ethel Mackenzie, of San Francisco, filed a brief in the supreme court on April 6 attacking the validity of federal law of 1907 under which she was denied the right to vote because of her marriage to Gordon Mackenzie, a subject of Great Britain.

It has been questioned by many authorities how Congress could deprive an American woman of her citizenship when the Constitution of the United States expressly forbids any state from even abriding the privileges and immunities of citizenship.

The feminists have found a champion in an unsuspected place—namely, the Riggs National Bank of Washington. The Controller of the Currency, in his recent charges against that institution, cites the fact that it loaned money to women, as an illustration of its unsound banking policy.

In rebuttal the bank states: "The Controller does himself no credit by criticizing this bank because it has loaned money to women, who, both in law and morals, have a right to transact their own business. Our women customers seldom request a loan without tendering ample collateral, and this bank is not only glad to accommodate them, but it cheerfully testifies that its losses on loans to women have been negligible."

"I am almost certain that woman suffrage will come without force in my country," said Jules Bois, the French author and member of the Legion of Honor, during the discussion following his address in New York on "The French Woman and the American woman." And he added, "It is the only way to save my France."

FALSE FIRE ALARM SOUNDED AT BOX 24

The fire epartment was routed out last night at 10.35 by an alarm from box 24, at Kellog and West 4th sts. The fireman made the long run in record time but on their arrival at the box, no sign of a fire could be found. A thorough search of the neighborhood was made in an effort to find the person who struck the alarm, but the guilty one had evidently made good an escape.

ON THE RIALTO

Vanitas vanitatis — from what heights has this man fallen! It is erstwhile Mayor of Terre Haute who is now passing a few exceedingly dull months in Indianpolis. His entertainment costs him nothing and although he must content himself with the same suit of clothes for some time, he has evidently resolved that the folks "back hum" shall feel his power as of yore. While studying alternately the bars of his cell and those of his raiment, he decided to give forth to his subjects one more royal command. Accordingly a long distance order has been issued that the famous, riotous, gay tenerloin of his municipality shall close its doors. Yes, the Mayor has ordered that the "Red lights" shall be dimmed forthwith. Three cheers for civic pride!

Arnica in large quantities and various other salves and remedies have been orded for the Department of Police. The new motorcycle which will be used in running down speed demons, and other "fast" conveyance controllers in this here, now, city, is on the horizon and the younger and more agile coppers of the local force are awaiting its coming with keen anticipation. Chief Dyer has not as yet ecided who will play horse with the contrivance, but it is expected that there will be keen rivalry for the job. The motor is just what is needed and after a few of these Barney Oldfields in embyro have parted with a small portion of their superfiuous lucre, the city streets will cease to be speedways an a staid and conservative gait in keeping with the surroundings will maintained by the auto owners.

Our first anniversary! "The Rialto" made its bow, so to speak, before the interested and appreciative (?) populace of Fulton just one week ago today. By way of celebrating this momentous event, we wafted our way to the Roberts and Wood drug emporium and partook of an especially delicious soda, concocted by Mawruss, that prince of the marble counter. Thence to the Onyx where we absorbed another thirst-quencher. (Before going we waited here sundry hours with both ears open in the faint hope that someone might offer to buy, but no such miracle took place.)

Another movie has come to town—an devotees of the shifting fotos will find another haven of enjoyment in the Hippodrome on Oneida st. He didn't give us a pass!)

dents have often sagacity and forents have often sagacity and foresight beyond their years. One evening a fortnight past, a party of Normal stuents engaged the library of the local high school for a private dance. Of course chaperons were necessary. The call was issued that the party should be ready to embark for this city on a certain train, about the hour of seven. At that time the party appeared at the station and boarded the train. Just before the train started however, the pupils made a quiet exit, and the unwitting chaperones were carried to this city minus their charges. The pupils appeared later with abject apologies, of course.

Evidently astray from the Herald's regular joke column, a story labeled "Newspapers May Merge" appeared in last night's issue of that paper, from the pen of its Fulton correspondent, W. L. W. Therein he states that we contemplate a merger with the Observer. We don't know what he ate to affect him to such dreams, but he was ever an entertaining and humorous scribe and we presume that this is one of his attempts. A little more time in garnering real news and less wasted in penning romances, is our advice to our friend.

GARNO VERDICT STANDS

Judge Devendorf Denies Motion for New Trial

Oswego, April 24.—Attorney Joseph T. McCaffrey received yesterday a copy of an order issued yesterday by Justice Devendorf, denying the Henry P. Burgard Co., a new trial in the action of Louis Garno of this city against the firm for personal injuries. Two years ago Mr. McCaffrey, appearing for Mr. Garno, secured a judgment of $5,000 against the Burgard Co. An appeal was made for a new trial on the ground of newly discovereed evidence. This was denied. The matter will probably be taken to the Appellate division. The attorneys for the Burgard firm were G. M. Fanning of Fulton and Falk and Phillips of Buffalo.

ROOSEVELT WAS NOT SURSRISED

Admitted Campaign Gifts By Big Financiers

Theodore Roocevelt on the third day in his cross-examination continued his story of the "big bosses." He admitted yesterday the big financiers contributed to the campaign fund, and says he would have been surprised if they hadn't.

He mentioned the famous half a million dollars Thomas Fortune Ryan contributed to the cause of Alton B. Parker, and swore he never had seen a list of names of the persons who helped swell the fund of $3,000,000 used in connection with his campaign for the Presidency.

The list contained the initials of men the Colonel readily identified as being allied with the country's most powerful business and financial interests.

In speaking of the Ryan contribution, the witness gave it as his opinion that a leader of big business who contributes a half a million dollars to help elect a candidate for President of the United States, is prompted by the same spirit which would cause him to donate a similar sum to a church, and that such a contributor has no more hope of reward in one case than he has in the other. Personally, he said, he would have been very much surprised if many masters of big business had not contributed to the Republican campaign of 1904.

The Colonel mentioned the Standard Oil Company, and campaign contributions, too. He said that if the report of the Congressional committee which investigated his campaign contributions showed that "H. H. R." and "J. D. A."—which the witness thought stood for H. H. Rogers and John D. Archbold—had contributed to the Republican fund in 1904—he was astonished. He said he had given explicit instructions against receiving any Standard Oil contributions.

The Colonel was just as active on the witness stand today as upon the three previous days. He moved around in his chair, adressed his own and the plaintiff's counsel and Justice Andrews. More than once he had the entire court room in an uproar. Sometimes the presiding justice, himself, was forced to place his hand over his mouth to hide a smile.

Only once did the Colonel exhibit any outward sign of fatigue. That was well toward the end of the proceedings, when he placed his elbow up on the judge's bench beside him and bent his head over, to one side until it rested upon his hand. He remained in that position while a series of letters was being read to the jury, the thumb and index finger of his free hand toying with his watch chain.

Today there was no session of the court and, Mr. Barnes went to Albany last night, but Colonel Roosevelt elected to remain in Syracuse until Monday. A number of conferences were arranged for today by attorneys on both sides.

Bundles of letters were reviewed the cross-examination.

Many letters that passed between Mr. Barnes and the witness were identified by the latter and read to the jury. In these letters the pair discussed political and legislative matters and the appointment to offices in the state government of a number of men. In one of the letters Mr. Barnes expressed stern disapproval of a measure which proposed that state senators should be elected for four years and assemblymen for two, because such a condition would give the voters "little opportunity to register approval or disapproval."

Monday the trial will be resumed with vigor.

EXCHANGES EXACTED FOR CANADA MONEY

Canadian money is now worth only 99 cents on the dollar in Watertown. This decrease in the value of the currency of the dominion is a result of the European war, which is rebected in Canada through charges on currency and checks.

Until of late the Watertown banks have been able to dispose of their Canadian money with the cost of only an eighth of one per cent. Now Canada is asking one per cent. And so the local banks have found it necessary to charge depositors the one per cent.

One of the savings banks has for some time been making the one per cent. charge on amounts over $1, but it is only within a few days that the national banks, and the trust company have made the charge. One bank has accumulated the sum of $1,000 in Canadian money for which they will have to pay $10 for exchange.

A charge of one per cent is also made on all Canadian checks cashed in this city, and a small tax stamp must be affixed to all Canadian checks dated after April 15.

Canadian money has until now been accepted without question, as the banks had no difficulty in disposing of it. It was pointed out this morning by an officer of one of the banks that the only recourse for people of this city was to not accept Canadian money.

OSBORNE SAYS LUXURY TALK IS ALL NONSENSE

New York, April 22.—Thomas Mott Osborne told the members of the Ethical Culture Society, that all talk of luxury in Sing Sing was nonsense and that he had no reservations made in advance. Any one who had the idea that prisoners were surrounded with luxury, he said, ought to visit Sing Sing and see for themselves that many improvements need to be made.

In speaking of his "common sense" treatment of prisoners he said: "The reason why so many criminals are not cured of their criminality is because they have not been educated along lines that make for incentives for good. Brutality in treatment naturally results in rebellion on the part of the criminals and makes him a more dangerous criminal upon his release than he was before entering prison. By what I term common sense treatment every man has a chance to create his own treatment. There should be a system of sentencing so that a prisoner may upon good behavior be released at any time the wardens and officials think best."

Mr. Osborne severely criticised the method of work and pay in the prisons. He said that more than two-thirds of the men in Sing Sing were men who had been to prison before.

"The reasons," he explained, "were lack of common sense in meeting the man on his own level. Men were not allowed to talk, to see the green grass, to even turn their heads. They work hard and only receive one and one-half cents a day. I know one man's wife who is earning her living on the streets of this city. They never had proper treatment. Is it any wonder that when they are released they wish revenge on society for such inhuman treatment?

"The very foundation of reform work in Sing Sing is based on the deep loyalty of the men themselves, expressed by them in 'never squeal on a pal.' We are building of system of treatment on that foundation.

"I wish to say that I have no sentimentality toward the prisoners. When a man disobeys the law he should go to prison. The action of the laws should be rigid and be the same for the rich and the poor. Not enough men are sent to prison. Many in Sing Sing should be out and many that are out should be in.

"I do believe that after a man is in prison his treatment should be similar to that in a hospital. He should not be made to suffer as much punishment as possible. In a hospital when a man has a broken leg he may be laid up six weeks and it may be ten weeks, but when he is cured he is released. The doctors cannot tell how long we are going to be sick in bed with a disease. They do not tell us we are to be sick five weeks or two weeks because they do not know. So it is in treating criminals. Some may need a sentence of one year and others only six months. They should not be sentenced for five years when treatment of one year will cure them and make the man a decent citizen once more."

MUSICIANS ENTERTAINED

State Street School Orchestra Had Jolly Evening.

The members of the State Street School Orchestra, who have so recently blossomed into musical circles, were delightfully entertained last evening by Mr. and Mrs. John Hunter.

Principal Lois A. Harrington and Miss Blanche Seymour, 7th grade teacher, and a few other invited guests made up the party and enjoyed to the greatest measure the hospitality of the host and hostess.

A feature of the evening was a lantern show. Each guest took a picture of himself or herself taken in babyhood days. These photographs were reproduced upon the screen showing the "baby" in life size. Merry peals of laughter resulted as each picture was shown.

Refreshments were served and an impromptu musical program given.

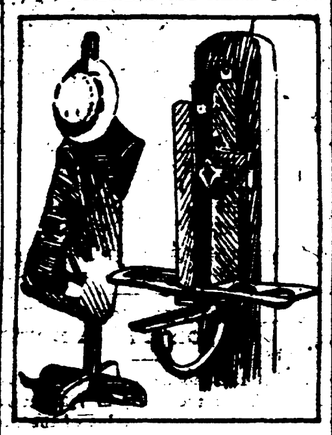
POPULAR MECHANICS

Nevada's Underground Water.



Certain valleys of southeastern Nevada contain a large supply of ground water, and a part of this water can be economically developed for irrigation, according to a report by Everett Carpenter just issued by the United States geological survey. The localities at which ground water can be found are indicated, and the best methods of recovering the underground water at each locality are described. The report contains also an interesting account of the geology of the region and shows that at one time this desert country contained a large river and seven large lakes, all of which are now absolutely dry. The ancient stream and lakes are described and shown on maps for the first time in this report. One of the most valuable features of the report is a guide to watering places on routes of travel, supplemented by a map showing roads and watering places and a table giving the distances between watering places.

Manufacture of White Lead.

Basic carbonate, white lead, is made in several ways. The old Dutch process consists in placing lead plates on grids in clay pots with dilute acetic acid, stacking the pots up and covering it with tanbark. Fermentation of the latter causes a rise in temperature and the production of carbon dioxide, which acts on the lead in the pots and gives a basic lead carbonate. At the end of two months the white lead is ground in water and dried, being ground later in oil. The "quick process" requires but two weeks and is carried out by acting on finely divided lead with dilute acetic acid and carbon dioxide, from burning coke, in revolving cylinders. In the "mild process" no acid is used, the finely divided lead being agitated in water through which air is blown. Hydrate of lead is formed and later carbonated. A very good product, free from all acid, is obtained.—Engineering Magazine.

Locking Hook For Garments.

A new holder for coat, hat and umbrella is equipped with a locking mechanism by which these articles, though out in the open, may be secured under lock and key, says Popular Mechanics. It is therefore particularly adapted to shops and offices as well as to barber shops, restaurants and similar places.

COAT HOOK THAT LOCKS GARMENTS.

In using the mechanism is first unlocked and opened, the arrangement being such that the key cannot be removed until the mechanism is again closed. The coat is placed on the hook projecting from the bottom, the umbrella in the hole in the horizontal bar that best suits its size and the hat on the smaller bar projecting from the front. When the holder is closed these articles are held securely and cannot be removed except by unlocking the mechanism with the key.

Zinc Oxide In Paint.

Zinc oxide is one of the most valuable white pigments and is produced by roasting and subliming certain ores of zinc. It is very opaque, has excellent spreading qualities and is generally mixed with basic carbonate of lead—white lead—for use in white paints. By thus combining these certain undesirable qualities of both are overcome. For instance, zinc oxide dries to a hard surface which does not stand changes of temperature as well as the softer lead pigment. On the other hand, it tends to eliminate the tendency toward chalking which the lead possesses. It is widely used as a base for delicate colors and in enamels.—Engineering Magazine.

Vulcanizing a Patch.

Several vulcanizations, one over the other, will make a better wearing patch, allowing plenty of time between them. Common gasoline now contains some grease and a higher grade should be used for cleaning the rubber. The casing should be left on the demountable rim and fully pumped up when vulcanized.—Automobile Dealer.

Increasing Engine Power.

It is a mistake to increase the power of an engine beyond the amount for which it was designed, no matter what means may be used. By so doing there is placed upon the working parts of both engine and chassis an excessive strain that may injure the whole car.

Lubricant For Axle Springs.

For an anti-rust lubricant for the leaves of axle spring heat a pound of old India rubber and mix with a half pound of grease and a half pound of graphite.

About Sports Generally

Consider the Phearless Phils!

To date this curiously composite club, corralled by Pat Moran, has spun off six straight victories, four of them from the generous Giants, and now they are leading the National League.

Thus far they have borne bravely, yea, even boisterously, the general aspect of champions.

But for 38 (count 'em) seething years, the Quaker City has been represented in the old league by some of the noisiest starters and quietest finishers the grand old game has ever known. Nearly always, the Phfilibustering Phils get away with a wild, hilarious clatter, which generally vanishes to a throaty whisper down through the dog days.

There is no written nor unwritten law against it, but in 38 years no Philadelphia National League baseball club has won a pennant. Some one is all the time pickin' on them. Many believe that the Federal League kept the Pfickle Phils from the rag that year it grabbed off Doolan, Seaton and Knabe. But if it isn't one thing, it's another. Some one is always putting the garbage in the ice cream freezer for the gang from the soporific city.

They dig up stars, but not pennants. The Delehantys, Espers, Crosses, Hamiltons, Lajoies, Wolvertons, Magees, Loberts, Doolans and Krlabes come and go, but still the Phils pflounder pfutilely. But some day—maybe this year—but s'no use, John, s'no use.

Mr. Rowland's System.

One of those peculiar and seemingly indefensible shifts with which Chicago's new manager, Clarence Rowland, has been surprising the folks this spring, was made Sunday. It illustrated his system of doing the unusual thing, and proved the contention made that he either is possessed of peculiar baseball intuition, or is extremely lucky.

John Collins was on first base in the ninth, with one run needed to tie. Felch was due to hit. A drive into the crowd was good for three bases, and would tie the score. Felch's entire reputation is built on his ability as a fence buster. In addition, on his last previous trip to the plate he had rocked the walls with a two-sacker that scored two men and that tied the game up.

It looked like his place and right to hit. But Rowland yanked him, and sent up Fournier, another long hitter, and a left-hand batter. And Fournier proceeded to make good with a single, after Collins had stolen. The switch had proved the right one, but Cobb's throw to the plate balked its crowning with success.

Dick Kauffman, the former Elmira first baseman, who led the State League with the stick last year, is making good in St. Louis. Apparently he has killed Jack Leary's chance for a regular job, but the former Utica first sacker will be kept as a substitute catcher and infielder.

* * *

Joe O'Rourke, the new Albany manager, is mad because Walter Harnett and Fritz Geiser, two pitchers on the Senatorial payroll, are reported to be dickering for jobs with other teams on the circuit. He says he'll suspend 'em.

* * *

The Syracuse Post-Standard speaks right up about Amby McConnell. "Amby McConnell, the new second baseman, is proving one of the fastest players that ever has appeared on the Syracuse team. He fields and throws like a star of the first magnitude, and with him at the keystone sack the infield should prove the best in the State League."

WOMEN OF ALL NATIONS SHOW FINE HEROISM IN FACE OF WAR

In Every Stricken Land They Have Cheerfully Taken Up Work of Men Gone to Battle Line.

Many Have Even Fought as Men and Thousands Are Training to Be Able to Defend Homes.

NOTHING is more remarkable in the great war than the heroism with which the women of all the stricken nations have borne the acid test. Every day for the past eight months women have proved by their ability, their sacrifices and their services, as well as by their unspeakable sufferings, that war is their business as greatly as it is man's. Everywhere woman is coming to the front with flying colors.

In Germany, France and England women are not merely doing the work of men. A few have gone to the front and are ready to fight with the rifle to defend their homes.

No picture could be more touching than that Frau Ida Boy-Ed, mother of Captain Boy-Ed, naval attache of the German embassy at Washington and one of the foremost literary women of Germany, draws of the German "soldier mother." Throughout the empire, she says, the women have enthroned motherhood by giving up their dearest for the fatherland. A sovereign glory shines on every German woman's brow as she fulfills all the duties that have had to be abandoned by the heroes to whom she gave birth.

Beware of Suffragettes!

Several contingents of Englishwomen, who proudly boast that they are suffragettes, have arrived at Havre,

CROWN PRINCESS CECILIE OF GERMANY.

France, for service with the English army. Some are qualified as telegraphers, others for telephone work, others as messengers. Others are to serve as chauffeurs.

A letter found on a German prisoner taken at Neuve Chapelle contained the passage:

"Magdeburg, 28-2-15.—Several battalions of suffragettes have landed at Havre. There are 500 women in each battalion.

"I want to warn you to be very careful when you meet them. Don't let them scratch out your eyes, and, above all, don't let them capture you. That would shame you before the whole world."

Germany's first woman army doctor to be given charge of a military hospital was Dr. Elisabeth Reinicke. She wears the uniform and the other insignia of her rank and enjoys all the dignities pertaining to it.

Five military hospitals have been equipped and staffed entirely by Englishwomen. In two other hospitals more than half of the doctors are women.

Mrs. McKenna Makes Bullseyes.

In an old railway carriage on a sidetrack in France, not far from the firing line, from 7 p. m. to 3 a. m. members of the British Women Emergency corps hand out soup, chocolate, coffee and milk to men on their way from the trenches.

The women of this corps wear a smart uniform, and among them are some of the most fashionable set in London. Every day they practice rifle shooting at a miniature range in the basement of a club in Piccadilly. Mrs. Reginald McKenna, wife of the British home secretary, is one of the crack shots. The other day she made three successive bullseyes.

More than 35,000 women have already registered themselves for special war service in England since the call made by the government on March 17.

The women employed on government contract work are paid the same piece rates as men. Women willing to undertake dairy or agricultural work get a fortnight's training in agricultural colleges, with $5 a week as a living allowance.

Are Aids In Camp.

Throughout England a woman's volunteer reserve has been formed for such military duties as telegraphing, signaling, writing, scouting and camp cooking. The colonel in chief is the new Marchioness of Londonderry.

They are being taught the use of rifle and revolver, the art of signaling, scouting and map drawing and even how to dig trenches. Regiments of them swinging through the streets have become a familiar spectacle in London, Manchester and Liverpool and the other big cities.

The Hon. Mrs. Evelina Haverfield, daughter of an earl and descendant of one of George Washington's staff officers, has trained a corps of 200 women to assist in the cavalry remount department.

The girl guides is another big corps organized in England after the system and rules of the boy scouts. They make the signal flags for use on the coast, do sewing of all sorts, mainly for the boy scouts, who are being used now as patrols, and in costume are a cross between sailors from "Pinafore" and inmates of a girls' orphan asylum.

Run Trolley Cars.

In London the woman police volunteers are familiar sights on the streets.

Women street car conductors are being tried in Glasgow. The uniform includes a neat blue skirt and coat edged with gold braid. They work only four hours a day and are paid the same wages as men—$6.25 to $9 a week.

Hamburg is to install women as conductors on the street cars, so that the men may be free to go to war. Berlin already has a number of women car conductors.

The Women's National service is active in Berlin. It holds many public meetings to remind housewives of their duty to conserve Germany's food resources. All the meetings are full to overflowing.

Royal women are also sharing the burdens.

Few of the European royalties have had a more anxious time in the war than the Crown Princess Cecilie of Germany, wife of the heir to the throne. She has frequently been at the front to cheer her husband and recently presented him with their fifth child and first daughter. The crown prince hastened to Berlin from the battle line, but could be at her side only a few hours.

Queen, a Pathetic Victim.

The Czarina Alexandra Fedorovna and two of her four daughters have passed examinations as trained nurses and with scores of titled Russian women are working shoulder to shoulder with the daughters of the humblest citizens.

The Grand Duchess Olga, sister of the czar, is a nurse in a field hospital, taking her turn by day and by night in the hardest routine work, in receiving the wounded, removing their blood stained clothes and heavy boots, bathing the wounds, assisting at operations and sharing in the work of the wards.

Queen Victoria of Sweden is one of the most pathetic victims of the indirect consequences of the war. She is a daughter of the Grand Duke and Duchess of Baden. Until the war broke out it was little to her that she was a German, but now she has quarreled with her husband because he will not side with the kaiser. The breach is so serious that the queen has decided to return to her mother's home at Karlsruhe, and it is doubted if she will ever return to Sweden. She is dying of tuberculosis.

Women have taken the places of all the grooms in the famous Duryea racing stables, near Paris.

Women have insisted even to death to go to the front with their soldier husbands. The most pathetic case was that of the wife of Captain Jean Herail of the French cavalry. When she refused to leave after her husband had been told he would be cashiered if she stayed he shot her rather than let her degrade their name. He has just been acquitted at his court martial.

"K. of K.'s" Tart Telegram.

What might have ended in a similar tragedy was recently averted by Lord Kitchener. "K. of K." heard that a distinguished and recently married officer was being visited by his wife at his headquarters in the field.

"One of you must come home," Lord Kitchener wired.

But women have also fought. Among the wounded German prisoners at the hospital at Warsaw seven women were discovered whose wounds showed that they had been in bayonet action. Four of them died.

Found among the wounded transported to Moscow was a Russian girl of sixteen, Alexander Shirohova, who fought for three months without betraying her sex.

Helen Choba of the Kuban Cossacks went as a trooper with the full knowledge and permission of the authorities. She could beat most men of her age at feats of horsemanship and sword play.

Tomiloffskaya, a Russian colonel's daughter of twenty-one, donned a man's uniform, distinguished herself in fights in East Prussia and was three times wounded. She led bands of men in scout service and intercepted a German telegram of intention to attack the Russians.

Peasant Woman Is Brave.

Twelve-year-old Rosa Zenoch, an Austrian girl, carried water for twelve days to German soldiers in the trenches near her home until one foot was torn away by shrapnel.

A peasant woman, Jalina, on the East Prussian frontier, made it a practice to supply both Russians and Austrians with drinking water. At 12 o'clock each day she appeared between the firing lines, driving a decrepit old horse hitched to a water cart flying the Red Cross. At her appearance both sides ceased firing. Both Russians and Austrians then sent one soldier each at a time to fetch a bucket of water. When the water barrel was empty Jalina bowed to both sides and drove away.

Marie Kurpyeva, a Russian volunteer aviator, has received from the czar the cross of St. George for daring work on the Carpathian front.

They Want to Fly.

Mme. Jeanne Pallier, who holds licenses as an aviator and a chauffeur and is now forming a woman's automobile club in Paris, has appealed to Mme. Poincare, wife of the president of France, to aid her in persuading the French government to let women help in the army as fliers and auto drivers.

Among the 200 members of the new club are the Duchesse d'Uzes, who was the first woman to obtain a chauffeur's license in France; Jean Catulle Mendes, Helene Dutrieu, Louise Abbema and Marie Marvingt.

In recognition of the devotion of Lady Ralph Paget, Red Cross worker, Uskub, Serbia, has decided to rename its finest street after her.

Lady Paget, wife of Sir Ralph Spencer Paget, a member of the British diplomatic service, is a granddaughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Paran Stevens of New York.

With the hope that they may help to end the strife the Women's Peace party in America is having Euripides' "Trojan Women" played as a peace sermon in cities throughout the United States.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Francis Ouimet, Amateur Golf Champion.

In the United States Golf association handicap list Francis Ouimet and Jerome D. Travers are rated at scratch, while Charles E. Evans, the Chicago crack, is given one stroke. All other golfers in the amateur ranks are given handicaps over these three expert club wielders. Ouimet first acquired international fame in 1913, when he won the open golf championship, defeating two of Great Britain's best professional golfers. Last summer he lost the open title to Walter Hagan, a young Rochester (N. Y.) professional. In September, however, in the national amateur tournament at the Ekwanok course he wrested the amateur crown from Jerome D. Travers of Upper Montclair, N. J., who for several years had been unbeatable and who was in the finals against Ouimet. The next amateur clash will be played over the course of the Detroit Country club, and the experts predict that either Ouimet, Travers or Evans will finish first. The largest handicap allowed by the U. S. G. A. is five strokes, and no player whose local handicap is more than five strokes can compete for the national amateur championship.

The Braves' New Stadium.

President Gaffney of the Boston Nationals recently announced that the Braves' new stadium would be ready in August. The grand stand will be a single decker of concrete and steel, and the total seating capacity will accommodate 45,000 spectators. The plant will be located at Cottage Farms, within six minutes ride from the South station over the Boston and Albany railroad. The trolley cars will enter the stadium on a spur track. The playing field will be about twenty feet lower than the street level and will be larger than any other ball grounds in the major leagues. To build the stadium Gaffney says he will spend about $350,000. He will do the work himself. Until the plant is ready for championship games the Braves will use Fenway park, the home of the Red Sox.

How Johnny Evers Views It.

Somebody asked Johnny Evers the other day if he believed the champion Braves would have a harder road to travel this year, and the famous second baseman replied:

"It will be easier for us because a championship ball club has half its games won before the first ball is pitched. We'll have the other teams buffaloed; but, of course, we will have to play hard all the way.

"The other teams are going to save their best pitchers for us right through the season, but even with such determined opposition I think we will have an edge."

Coombs May Come Back.

If Jack Coombs is able to pitch the kind of ball that helped the Athletics to win world's championships look out for the Brooklyn Dodgers! Coombs, who appears to be in splendid health, has shown just enough pitching strength down south to make Ebbets and Robinson happy. The Iron Man says that he is not in a hurry to cut loose, because such a course would be foolhardy. But he confidently predicts that as soon as warm weather arrives in the north he will be able to take his turn. If appearances mean anything Coombs is coming back.

Soccer Players Lose Jobs.

At the end of the football season on April 30 the English soccer players will find themselves in a position never experienced before, of being out of work, as all contracts with the professional players, with the exception of a small number who signed on until April 30, 1916, will end. The signing season, which begins on May 1 in each year, will be held over until late in August, so as to prevent any inducements being held out which will interfere with the call to the colors.

Big Losses at Juarez Track.

Racing at Juarez has been a costly venture during the past winter. It is reported that the track owners will have to meet about $100,000 in losses. The attendance, except on Sundays, has dwindled to less than 400 paid admissions each day, yet the promoters have lived up to all of their obligations.

TRUTH SEEKER WOULD HAVE "KNOCKING" STOP; SAYS MAYOR FOX IS GOOD AS PREDECESSORS

SOLICITORS CARDS READY

Solicitors cards can be had on application at the office of the Chamber.

The Chamber of Commerce announce today that the cards which have been prepared for the protection of local merchants from fraudulent solicitors are ready—the cards read:

"No subscription, donation, advertisement or other contribution will be considered by this Company until you have presented the facts concerning your proposition to the Fulton Chamber of Commerce."

When a soilcitor undertakes to state his proposition the merchants can call his attention to the card and refer him to the Chamber of Commerce where his story will be investigated. His proposition is submitted to five members of the Chamber who are known only to the Secretary and Vice-president who pass on the merits of his proposition. The Secretary appoints two and the Vice-President three members, and neither knows who the other appoints. If three of this committee of five approve the proposition a red card is issued to the solicitor which he may show when called upon to do so by the merchants. This scheme is for the protection of the retail merchants and other who are victims of all kinds of solicitors. It is to their advantage to secure the cards. They are not limited to the members of the Chamber but are offered for the protection of all merchants of the City. This scheme has been used with great success in Rochester, Watertown and a dozen other cities.

A Prominent Citizen, Who Would Have Right Conditions, Admonishes Against Further "Knocking;" Asserts That City is Misgoverned.

To the Fulton Evening Times:

No fault can be found with The Times for making timely suggestions, but when the suggestive takes the form of a criticism that is an insinuation rather than a just criticism and which reflects unjustly, or appears to so reflect, to the injury of the reputation of an official, then, The Evening Times oversteps the bounds of propriety and does itself an injustice. No doubt The Evening Times intends to he fair to everyone and no criticism is intended to its editor who is undoubtedly inspired with honorable motives, nevertheless, the tone of some of the inquiries which have appeared in its columns, apparently, were made in a spirit of animosity rather than for the purpose of enlightenment.

Many persons, without doubt, are pleased to have a daily home paper, which is fearless and dares to expose wrong doing and The Evening Tmes is to be commended in the main for its action in bringing to the attention of the public matters which vitally affect the welfare of our city.

For political reasons, alone, the writer did not support the present Mayor. There were those among us who sincerely doubted whether the Mayor was as well fitted for the head of our city government as some other candidates were, but the votes which he received showed that a majority of our citizens reposed confidence in his fitness and integrity.

The writer has resided in this city since its inception and has noted the efforts of the various heads of our city governments in the matter of giving to the people a satisfactory government. With few exceptions, criticism of a very harsh nature has been their reward and so severe has been the knocking that most of the desirable mayoralty timber has, by choice, kept to the woods rather than be dragged into the limelight of unjust criticism. It is doubtful whether any one of the men who have filled the office of mayor of our city has received the right kind of support and encouragement in the discharge of his duties. The present Mayor is undoubtedly actuated by a keen desire to give to our city a satisfactory government and he has been, at least, in his effortsas successful as the majority of our mayors have been. Undoubtedly, he has made some mistakes just as have most, if not all, of his predecessors have done. Instead of knocking why not try to encourage the Mayor and the officers of his administration in their efforts to give us good government. It is a matter which has never been tried in this city. Why not try it, and let The Evening Times, the members of our Chamber of Commerce and all good citizens interest themselves in the work of scurin ggood government for our city and aid our Mayor and all of our city officials in their efforts to secure better civic conditions among us.

TRUTH-SEEKER.

TRAFFIC EXPERTS TO TALK

Thursday night at 8 o'clock the Division of Industries of the Chamber of Commerce has arranged a public meeting, either at City Hall or at the Chamber of Commerce office to hear Dr. J. E. Campbell and Thos. G. Smiley representing the Northern N. Y. Traffic Association.

Dr. Campbell desires to interest paper manufacturers and manufacturers of other commodities in his association. The service his association intends to give is principally in connection with a traffic bureau in charge of a traffic manager who, will advise shippers as to rates, etc., of the Interstate Commerce Commission Law.

The Industries Division thinking his talk would be of interest to others than the members of the Chamber have made the meeting open and public. Further notice as to the place of meeting will appear in Tuesday and Wednesdays paper.

British Crawl Across Trenches Filled With the Dead to Hold Hill

London, Monday.—The most fearful convulsions of nature were equalled when the British began the battle of Hill No. 60 by exploding a series of mines beneath the German positions on the eminence. Trenches, parapets and sandbags disappeared and utter demoralization followed among the defenlers of the hill. The Britis "eye witness," in a message made public by the War Office last night, presents a stirring narrative of the battle. He says, in describing the effect of the explosion and the events of the succeeding hours:

"The whole surface of the ground assumed strarife shapes. Here it was torn into hufe craters. There large mounds of fallen debris were to be seen,

"The reports of the explosions died away, and while dense columns of smoke and dust still hung in the air our men, led by their officers, sprang from the trenches and dashed across the intervening space of some forty to sixty yards lying between our line and the gaping craters before them, the front covered by the attack being onlf some two hundred and fifty yards in length.

"Where the mines had actually exploded nothing was left of the occupants of the hostile line, but in the neighboring trenches our assaulting infantry witnessed an extraordinary scene. Many German soldiers, possibly owing to the fact that they were working, were surprised while in their shirt sleeves and without equipment. Stunned by the violence of the explosions, bewildered and suddenly subjected to a rain of hand grenades thrown by our bombarding parties, they gave way to panic.

"Cursing and shouting, they were falling over one another and fighting in their hurry to gain the exits leading into the communication trenches. Some of those in the rear, maddened by terror, were driving their bayonets into the bodies of their comrades in front of them.

"Of all this our infantry had but a momentary glimpse before they fell upon the enemy with the bayonet, burst through the maze of trenches, poured into the craters and pressed on down the communicating trenches until at last they were stopped by barricades defended by bomb throwers.

GERMANS QUICK HOLD THE ADVANTAGES GAINED

"The first line of trenches was captured in a few minutes with little difficulty, and fifteen prisoners fell into our hands, but it was then that the real struggle began, for the Germans quickly recovered from their surprise.

"From our line the hill is a salient point which is exposed to fire from three sides, and it was only a few minutes before the German gunners took advantage of this fact and opened fire. Soon the whole position became obscure in the smoke of bursting shells. Meanwhile our batteries had begun to support the attack, and a terrific artillery fire was maintained far into the night.

"From many points along our line to the north and south of Hill No. 60 could be seen the flashes from the shells, while the flashes from the guns were so nearly continuous they resembled the effect of musketry fire. Under this fire our men had to work, throwing up parapets toward the enemy, blocking their communications and generally rendering the position defensible.

"Nor was the enemy's infantry idle. Advancing up the communication trenches, they threw hand grenades over the barricades and also into the mine craters, on the crumbling bodies of which our men were clinging in an endeavor to obtain a foothold.

"Throughout the night the fighting continued, culminating early in the morning of April 18 in two massed attacks by the enemy. These were beaten off, principally by the fire of our machine guns, some of which had been brought up.

"Nevertheless, inspite of the heavy losses, which left the hillside piled with dead, the enemy continued his prsssure during the whole of Sunday until we were gradually driven from the southern edge of the hill. At six o'clock help reached our front line in the form of reinforcements, who swept the Germans from the foothold they had gained.

Newspapers Declare German Squadron is Seeking British Fleet

London, Monday.—Reports continue to reach London from Germany and Scandinavian sources that the German High Seas fleet is cruising off Heligoland. The Norwegian steamship Foedin is said to have met the fleet in the North Sea a week ago. The Foedin was stopped and a German naval officer told her captain the Kaiser's fighting ships had only one desire. That desire, he said, was a meeting with the British, and he hoped the British fleet could be found.

Two big German newspapers that reached Copenhagen yesterday—the Tages Zeitung and the Vossische Zeitung—declare the German fleet is ready to accept battle in the North Sea. The entire fleet, the newspapers declare, have several times cruised over the sea vainly seeking Vice Admiral Jellicoe and the British beet.

BRITISH HOLD SWAY AT CHANNEL ENTRANCE

Important happenings from the direction of the German high sea fleet have been anticipated ever since Admiral Von Pohl took over the command some weeks ago from Admiral von Ingenohl. The latter officer, as is well known, has favored a Fabian policy, a wearing down, as it were, of the British naval forces. This it was expected would be accomplished through incessant attacks by submarines and destroyers combined with forays by cruiser squadrons. That this policy did not square with the more recent decisions of the German war councils was made evident both by the change in commands and the announcements from Berlin that the high sea fleet has cruised repeatedly in the North Sea of late. The deduction is inevitable that either Admiral von Pohl is deliberately courting an engagement of the firts magnitude or is endeavoring to maneouvre the main British fleet into a postion of his own choosing.

FAIR PLAY!

It is not surgrising that all the daily newspapers in New York City that opposed the nomination of Governor Whitman are now picking flaws in his administration. We do not say that it is without flaws, but it is too early to pass judgment. While these newspapers have no responsibility for the government, they are all very busy telling the executive what he ought to do, the appointments he ought to make or not make, theb ills he ought to sign and the ones he should veto. The governor scarcely has had an opportunity to become familiar with the tremendous responsibilities of his very trying place. Give him at least a fair hearing. Judge of his merits by what he has accomplished at the close of the legislative session. Judgment in the midst of the session is neither fair nor just. The New York newspapers which so bitterly opposed his nomination and which are now so anxious to conduct his administration might bear this admonition in mind.—Leslie's Weekly.

ENFORCING THE TRAFFIC LAW

In police court in a neighboring city, recently, a justice made an example of an automobile driver who, while intoxicated, operated a motor car. In sentencing the man to pay a fine of $50 or serve 50 days in the penitentiary, the justice took occasion to reprehend the offense for which the accused had been found guilty.

Other automobilists were fined for violating the city's traffic laws, one paying $25 for exceeding the fifteen-mile speed limit within the mile radius, and another $5 for passing street cars on the left side. The police justice indicated quite plainly that violators of the traffic laws must expect punishment.

RELIGION AS SOCIAL JUSTICE

The antagonism of the I. W. W. toward "Billy" Sunday in Paterson is not important in itself, but is symptomatic of what the world demands of religion. How and when and where the individualistic interpretation of Christianity crept into the mind of the Church is hard to tell. On the very threshold of Christian history we have a hint that the new faith had a social or communistic aspect, for the disciples sold what they had and held all things in common. Europe is strewn thick with institutions founded by the Church to ameliorate social evils.

Outside of organized religion, and also within it to a considerable degree, there is a conviction that Christianity cannot be merely personal piety and a smug satisfaction with individual spiritual privileges. In some way or another the followers of Him Who fed the hungry, healed the sick, taught the parables of the Good Samaritan and Dives and Lazarus, and Who gave the vivid picture of the standard of judgment in Matthew xxv, must also concern themselves with social equity and economic justice or they fail adequately to represent Him Whose name they bear.

It is significant, too, that those who are most sharply criticising the Christian Church as it exists today are not impeaching it on the ground of a lack of charity, of sympathy, of mercy. They have reached a point where they scorn alms-giving and look contemptuously on spasmodic benevolence. They ask justice, kindness, equality of opportunity, the abolition of the exploitation of the weak by the strong, an environment in which they and their children may be able to share in the resources of the physical universe and profit by the intellectual privileges of the social world. It has not infrequently occurred that crowds of workingmen have hissed the Church and cheered every mention of Jesus of Nazareth. The demand of the day is that the interpretation of religion by the Church shall be as broad as that of the teaching and life of its Founder.—Philadelphia Ledger.

One Cent Shares

There was a great scandal in England some years ago caused by the collapse of fly-by-night joint stock companies, the shares of which had been sold to artizans, day laborers and scrub women.

Experts who investigated the methods of the promoters and traced the widespread misery brought upon ignorant purchasers, reported that the rape-root of the mischief was "the one pound shares."

They meant that the law, by permitting the issue of shares of as low a denomination as one pound sterling —or $5— enabed ,tricksters to sell nicely engraved certificates to poor and ignorant persons, who would not and could not, out of their scanty earnings, purchase shares of the higher values, ordinarily issued by more legitimate corporations.

But "America leads the world." What British promoter would ever have dreamed of offering stock at one cent a share—"a ha'penny a share"—as is now being done by an "oil company" the attractive advertisements of which are published in a New York morning newspaper? And it avows that 250,000,000 shares have already been distributed to the public. Although this is fifty times the number of shares of outstanding common stock of the mighty United States Steel Corporation, this astounding oil company is offering more—at a cent a share.—New York Herald.

Bird Law Effective

Many of the press comments on the decision of the United States District Court, rendered March 20, at Topeka, Kan., holding that the Federal Migratory Bird Law is unconstitutional in the opinion of officials of the Department of Agriculture, are erroneous and are apt to mislead the public concerning the real situation in this matter.

The Kansas decision, like a former one to the same effect in the eastern district of Arkansas, is limited in its operation solely to the district in which it was rendered. Neither decision settles or nullifies the law, and the exact contrary has been held by the United States District Court for South Dakota. The Arkansas case has been appealed to, and is now pending in the United States Supreme Court.

The act of Congress protecting the migratory birds stands effective until the Supreme Court finally decides the question of its constitutionality. In the meantime, it is incumbent on every law-abiding citizen to observeits provisions and the regulations. It is the duty of the department to enforce this law, and the officials in charge will endeavor to do so as long as it is in force. Reports of violations will be carefully investigated, and when sufficient evidence is secured they will be reported for prosecution. In this connection it should not be forgotten that an offender against this, as in the case of other United States laws, is subject to prosecution any time within three years from the date of the offense is committed—Utica Herald.

CAKES MADE WITH HONEY

Are Said to Keep Longer; Boiling and Skimming Unnecessary; Recipes

Various ways in which the housewife can use honey to advantage are suggestied in a new publication of the department —Farmers' Bulletin 653, "Honey and its uses in the home." In this country honey has hitherto not been in as common use as in Europe, especially in cookery. It is, however, a comparatively simple matter to substitute it in many receipes for common sugar or for molasses, and when this is done the resulting flavor is often both novel and agreeable.

One of the great advantages in the use of honey is that cakes made with it will keep much longer than those made with sugar. A honey cake made with butter, for instance, will keep its quality until the butter grows rancid, and one made without butter will keep fresh for months. For this reason honey is especially useful in recipes that call for no butter. Icing made with honey has the same advantage, and some icing made in the experimental labortory of the Department of Agriculture was found at the end of 10 months to be as soft and in as good condition as when it was first mak.

The experiments conducted by the department indicate that many of the instructions in the old cook books for the preparation of honey are unnecessarily elaborate. For example, it used to be thought that honey had to be brought to theb oiling point and then skimmed and cooled. Since honey is extremely likely to boil over, this process requires great care. Experiments showed, however, that it appears to be quite unnecessary, and it is probable that the notion arose at a time when ordinary commercial honey contained more impurities than at present. Similarly, the older recipes say that the dough should be kept at least one day before the soda is added. No evidence to support this theory was found by the investigators On the other hand, however, they did discover that dough containing honey can be more easily kneaded if allowed to stand for several days. Again, the use of "potash" is recommended in most of the recipes in foreign cookbooks as a means of raising the dough. The properties of potash are quite similar to ordinary baking soda, and there seems no reason why the latter shoul not do just as well. Baking soda is a common kitchen commodity in America, and potassium bicarbonate, the potash of the cookery book, is almost unknown for household purposes. As a matter of fact, a little experience will enable any competent cook to substitute honey successfully for sugar in bread, cake, preserved fruits, sauces an candiess.It is safe to estimate that a cupful of honey will sweeten a dish about as much as a cupful of sugar, but since honey contains water in addition, there is less need for milk or other liquisd. For practical purposes it is accurate enough to consier that for each cupful of honey a quarter of a cupful is added to the recipe. If these facts are kept in mind special honey recipes are unnecessary.

Honey is marketed in two forms, known respectively as comb honey and extracted honey, the former being used much like jam or marmalade an the latter either in that way odr for cooking. In the past there has been some prejudice against extracted honey—or honey removed from the comb—because it was believed that this was frequently adulterated. However prevalent this practice may have in the past, recent legislation and the efforts of honey producers themselves have made it dangerous and unprofitable. There is now, it is believed, little adulterated extracted honey on the market. Comb honey is practically certain to be the pure prouct of the hive, because it can only be adulterated by processes which cost more than they save. When sold at retail there is now comparatively little difference in the costs of comb and extracted honey, but the latter can be purchased at wholesale very much cheaper. The reason for this is that the producer of comb honey makes a product which is practically ready to be delivered to the consumer. Moreover, it costs the bee keeper less to produce extracted honey, while the wholesaler who purchases extracte honey has several processes to go through with before he can sell it at retail. If the housewife is willing to do these herself, she can affect a considerable saving.

Popular way of using honey is to serve it like jam or strup with bread, pancakes, etc. When used in this way an ounce of honey may be regarded as the equivalent of an ounce of jam. When intended for sirup it is sometimes diluted with hot water, not only make it less sweet, but also easier to pour. The housewife will also find some form of tart fruit served with honey, cottage cheese, and bread and butter an attractive combin ation and an economical substitute for the much prized and very expensive Bar-le-Duc currants, which are themselves often cooked in honey and served with cream cheese and crackers. The following are typical of an almost endless number of honey recipes:

Honey and Nut Bran Muffins

½ cup honey.
1 cup flour.
From ¼ to ½ teaspoon soda.
½ teaspoon salt.
2 cups bran.
1 tablespoon melted butter.
1½ cups milk.
¾ cup finely chopped English walnuts.

Sift together the flour, soda and salt, and mix them with the bran. Add the other ingreients and bake for 25 or 30 minutes in a hot oven in gem tins. This will make about 20 muffins.

Butter Honey Cake

1½ cups honey.
½ cup butter.
3 egg yolks.
5 cups flour.
2 teaspoons ground cinnamon.
½ teaspoon salt.

A UNIVERSAL DISEASE OR A MONOGRAPH

BY I. E. HYDE FULTON N. Y.

Oh, what is the breadth, and the length, and the height, and the depth of worldly graft? It's measurements make it a monstrous disease, that infests us afore and aft. It will ransack our brain, and our soul, until we oftentimes float like a raft. It will make you itch for your brother's dough, and watch him as cats watch for mice; and if he has cash you are not satisfied with doing him once or twice; you will grasp him, and grip him, and bleed him, and then you'll get pats on the back and told you are men, because you have peeled off his slice. Yes, Graft is a fever that burns to the core. It makes brutes of many a man. Its symptoms, no civic Doc ever has cured. It's never put under a ban. And sometimes a man in delirious pain, will tell of the many men that he has slain, or ruined; as only graft can. You harp on the hoof and mouth disease. You say consumption must go. You say, the hook-worm you'll crush and squeeze; and, yellow fever —Oh, no; but you harbor rank graft, and spread its germ; you have let it make our free country squirm, and what have you gained? Do you know? I'll tell you this, proudly: When women can vote, your rotten old graft will shrink. Political music will then sound a note, so clean his conscience will slink. Did I say conscience? But, ah! he has none; just think of corruption that he has sown. Women vote? For heaven's sake, think.

War: Pathos and Humor

STORY TOLD TO MARCELLE

Paris, April 23.—Maurice Barres publishes a letter written by a workman of Paris, now at the front, to his little children at home. It tells a story of youthful heroism.

"Dear little Marcelle," it runs, "I am going to tell you of what happened to French soldiers at the front, and you must read the story to Charlie and his little friends, for thus they will know how two little children saved the lives of 28 papas.

"In a lonely farm 30 French soldiers lie resting in the cellar, awaiting the coming of the night, when they can continue their mission. In the kitchen of the farm two children, Lise and Jean, are sitting at their mother's side by the fire. They are speaking the patois of their province.

"Suddenly the mother rises and runs to the door. She sees horsemen riding down the road. 'My babies,' she says, 'I fear that the Prussians are coming. They will see that we have lodged and fed French soldiers, and they will ask us where they are. If they find them they will shoot them.'

"'We must say that they have gone the other way,' says Jean. 'No,' says his mother, 'they will find out that it is untrue, and come back to take vengeance. This is what we must do. I shall speak in patois, and whatever the Prussians ask you you must always answer in the same phrase, in patois, too.'

"The sound of horses' hoofs, the clatter of harness, comes nearer. 'Courage,' says the mother to Jean and Lise, and remember what I told you.'

"Then the door is flung open and the Prussians enter. They question the mother, who replies in patois that they do not understand. 'Question the children,' shouts an officer who knows French, "they must have learned French at the school.'

"One soldier seizes Lise roughly by the arm, another Jean. 'Where is your pap?' they ask, and where are the Frenchmen who passed through here?' The children, trembling, choking, reply in patois as their mother had told them. The Germans search the house, but do not discover the trap-door which leads to the cellar, for it is covered with a heap of straw. Then they return and threaten Jean and Lise. The children cry, but still repeat the same incomprehensible phrase.

"Meanwhile, the French soldiers in the cellar below heard everything and saw a great deal through a crack in the floor. At last the Prussians, who could not believe that two little children, with swords' points at their breasts, would have dared to keep silence, went away thinking that Jean and Lise really tnd truly had not understood what they were saying.

"And so two little children, one 8 and the other 10, by their courage and their obedience to their mamma, saved the lives of 30 men, kept 28 mammas from being widows and 47 little girls and boys from losing their fathers. And among these 47 children are my little Marcelle and my little Charlie."

IN AND OUT OF THE STRAIT

London, April 22.—A British naval officer of the fleet now bombarding the Dardanelles forts sends home the following:

"We are having a most exciting time. On Thursday, the twenty-fifth, the weather improved enough for the bombardment to begin again, so our greatly strengthened squadron moved out. The Turks returned the fire at once, not like the previous Friday, when they waited till we got close in and our ships were at anchor so as to be steadier for firing. They were more successful and hit both one of our ships and one of the Frenchmen, without, however, doing any material damage. Still our men had to pull up anchor and fire steaming about. This, as before, beat them and they scored no more hits. Our firing was excellent, especially that of one ship, the like of which I could hardly have imagined possible, and by 1 o'clock one fort had ceased firing entirely and the other had slackened down considerable. We were ordered, with another, to steam rapidly in at 14 knots to a range of about 3,000 yards and finish the forts completely. Everybody went to their station and we started. For about 20 minutes we steamed in, round and out again. The crashes of our guns sounded almost continuously and then the "cease fire" sounded and I came up again from below and looked at the forts. They had gone—men, guns and everything—just a tumbled, tangled heap of barbed wire entanglements and shapeless mounds of earth. Then the French went in with two battleships in line ahead, just as we had done, but it was quite unnecessary; the work was over and not the slightest attempt was made to interfere with them.

Followed the Mine Sweeper

Next day we went right inside the mine sweepers, who had been busy all the previous night clearing a passage, and landed demolition parties to blow up the forts. Very fine explosions they made, too, especially Seddel Bahr on the European side, the magazine of which made a splendid pyrotechnic display. On the Asiatic side the land at the point is low, but rises rapidly to a fine bold cliff, on top of which stands a remarkable series of nine windmills, all close together, with a large village behind called Yeni-Shehr. We were lying about a mile off this village, and just astern of us was one of those first-class light cruisers of ours. A seaplane had gone inland to reconnoiter and was returning over Yeni-Shehr at a height of about 2,000 feet, when, just as it passed over the windmills, some hundred or so, or possibly more. Turkish soldiers, who were hiding in or behind the windmills, fired a volley at it. Before you had time to say "By Jove" there was a deafening crash, and when the smoke had cleared away those windmills had been removed. It was an extraordinary sight. That little cruiser had sighted and hit and had completely wiped out those Turks almost before they had had time to see the result of their shots at the seaplane. Before we left that night we put a few shells into the barracks at Seddel Bahr, and they blazed away like fury all night.

Next day, Saturday, the twenty-seventh, we went in again. By the way, one of our battleships on Friday had gone up the Dardanelles about five miles, and has been under heavy fire from a battery well up on the hillside. She had been hit once (no damage), so we went in this day to find and destroy this battery. But the weather was bad and the whole hillside swathed in clouds and mist and we couldn't see, so one of the battleships sent in another demolition party, 100 strong, to find and destroy, if possible, a howitzer battery reported up behind the town of Seddel Bahr (quite a large town). This they did, and found six five-inch howitzers quite undamaged, which they blew up, and then started to retreat to the shore. The Turks came swarming down upon them, so they fired a rocket to show their exact position, and their ship opened fire on the advancing Turks, who were plainly visible on the hillside. The demolition party then made their way unhurt through the town, firing these colored lights every now and again to show their position until they emerged through the ruins of the forts on to the beach. There they made signal, "Please shell the town; it is full of soldiers," and then for about a quarter of an hour the town vanished under a pall of smoke, red, yellow and gray, and when that at length blew out to sea, red tongues of flame, and soon the place, fanned by a strong wind, was ablaze from end to end."

SPEAKER SWEET MAKES SUMMARY

Believes People Support Direct Tax—Points to Rigid Economy of Legislature

Albany, April 24.—That the legislature of 1915 has dealt intelligently and patriotically with the problems confronting it at the beginning of the session and materially improved conitions in the state Government briefly summarizes the statement made by Thaddeus C. Sweet, speaker of the Assembly on the work of the legislature.

In his statement, he says:

"We were confronted at the beginning of our labors with a condition unparleled in recent years. There was a depleted treasury and no plan had been suggested to bring order out of the financial unrest and confusion which existed. Reckless expenditures in many of the departments, carelessness in confining expenditures to appropriations and neglect to make necessary provision carrying on the state business characterized the administrations of the past four years. They seemed more intent upon providing cofortable places for political workers, without regard to public requirements, than in conducting the affairs of the state in an orderly, efficient and economical manner. The neglect to give attention to the legitimate business of the state, the failure to provide appropriations absolutely required, while incurring tremendous financial obligations, had driven the state almost to the verge of bankruptcy. We inherited a condition which demanded the exercise of great caution upon the part of the executive and legislative branches of our government. It became our first duty at the outset to determine upon policies which would correct the evils which misgovernment had given us. The legislature was fortunate in being in harmony with the Governor of the state, in his desire to establish plans which should restore good government to the people, who had declared their purpose so emphatically at the last election.

Honesty Wanted

"Those who had been responsible for the government, had absolutely overlooked the mighty interests of the state as a whole and had made it largely a personal and political government. They had failed to grasp the importance of maintaining the financial honor of the state or its commercial reputationñ or of eficiently carrying on the work of the various departments. The policy of crippling departments by withholding necessary appropriations on the pretense of economy, only postponed the final day of reckoning, when the actual conditions were sure to be made known. The honor of the commonwealth had been mortgaged.

"The people who placed us in power do not expect hasty and ill considered efforts at reforms. They were fully aware of the conditions which they condemned by their votes, and knew that these conditions could not be hurriedly changed or corrected. They will be satisfied with honest attempts to enact such laws as will bring the state back to the enjoyment of its honor and of its possibilities as the Empire State of the Union; to right the wronsk which they could clearly see, and which they knew were burdensome and dishonorable.

"There is a emand for less political theory, and more political honesty, fewer promises and better performance.

"The people will sustain us in making appropriations large enough to meet the deficiencies caused by neglect; to make provision for carrying on the goverament properly for the years to come. They will sustain us in providing for a direct tax which has been found to be necessary, and we mistake their temper if they do not keep a watchful eye upon their servants, in carrying out their purpose to pay honest obligations, and in the hope that true economy in all departments may do away with a direct tax hereafter.

People Have Confidence

"I believe we may go to our homes and find that the people will approve our efforts to advance every true interest of the state. They are doing their own thinking in these days more than ever before, and it will be well to follow their judgment and carry out their wishes.

"Responding to a general demand upon all sides the useless and expensive department of so-called efficiency and economy has been abolished—largely upon the assumption that every state department should be efficient and economical, and that it should never be necessary to organize one department to watch and direct another. A saving of many hundred thousand dollars was thereby effected.

"Another useless bureau, the fire marshal's office, has been eliminated at a great saving and provision made for carrying on its work by the department of labor.

"There has been much consideration paid to the workmen's compensation act and the department of labor, with the conclusion that the interests of the state our people will be best considered by consolidating them in a bureau of industry. This will give opportunity for a better study of labor conditions in connection with co-ordinate industries, and result in substantial economies.

"It must be conceded that the establishment of a tax department was a step in the right direction, and good results will surely follow in wide opporuntities to consider questions which will ever be of vital interest to taxpayers.

"The state board of claims has been thoroughly re-organized as a court and changes have been made which will expedite the growing amount of business which is bound to come before this court.

"The conservation commission of three is replaced by a single commissioner with a promise of careful consideration of the vast interests of the state.

"A new civil service board has been organized as a pledge that the real spirit of civil service will be carried out.

"Provision has been made by which members of the legislature will be given a library room for their exclusive use and convenience.

"However the people may ultimately decide the question, we have responded to a popular demand for the submission to the people at the next election of a constitutional amendment relating to women suffrage. Whatever the result, we have shown a purpose to deal fairly with the subject.

"Recognizing the importance of establishing a better understanding between the City of New York and the people of the state whose interests are outside the metropolis, and recognizing what seems to be the approach of a financial crisis, involving differences in values and assessments in the city and elsewhere, and with the purpose of fixing a basis by which one half the people of the state may feel that the other half is interested with it in establishing a just and equitable method of assessment and taxation, the legislature has formed a joint committee to consider all phases of a great question which involves the harmony and prosperity of all sections of the state. This affords an opportunity of rendering all our peo-

I.O.O.F. ATTENDED SERVICES SUNDAY

Made Fine Appearance in March to State Street M. E. Church

In commemoration of the 96th anniversary of the establishment in America of the I. O. O. F., Neahtawanta Lodge yesterday morning attended preaching services at the State St. M. E. church, where the Rev. H. Holmes preached a fine sermon to the followers of the three links.

In part Mr. Holmes said:

Luke, 10: 37. "Go and do."

One of the most important words in the English language are the smallest ones. Bulk is not always a source of great value, neither is the meaning of words determined by the number of letters they contain. Some times it seems that the monosyllables are the unsurmountable obstacles that stand between us and our cherished ambitions. To the majority it is much easier to understand the meaning of words that may require a lexicon to pronounce, than some of the words that go to make up the child-s vocabulary.

It was rather a strange incident that called forth from the Master the parable of "the good Samaritan." It has always seemed to me that there was a little something more than mere curiosity in the mind of the lawyer to test the knowledge of Christ, that prompted him to ask the question that he did. Some way we have come to look upon that lawyer with rather critical eyes. We are just a little inclined to impugn his motives, we have no right to do that with any man. It may be true that he had a great desire to show his own learning, and in this way uncover the ignorance of the unlearned Son of Joseph the carpenter. And yet his question is not presented in an adstract form. He did not say, "Master, what should be done, in order that eternal life may be inherited?" But this is what he did say, "Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?"

Does it not seem that there must have been some personal interest that would call forth such an inquiry.

Jesus was an adept in answering questions, and this one he answered by asking another. "What is written in the law?" Surely a lawyer will understand the law. That is his profession, so we are not surprised when he gave a verbatim answer to the question from the very best authority it. Moses, 2:27.

The lawyer did not just enjoy the manner in which this strange sort of a young man had turned upon him making him answer his own question. And so he put another to him. "Who is my neighbor, and this question brought forthe the story, that had for its foundation facts. The road that runs from Jerusalem to Jericho was one of the great thoroughfares of the eastern world. It ran through the very heart of the wilderness of Judea. It must have been a picturesque road, as it ran along the very edge of the steep ragged mountain sides, now winding in and out among the rock and caves, which afforded safe cover for the gangs of highwaymen that infested that region laying in wait for the poor traveler, whom they would rob of all he possessed and leave him to die maybe by the roadside. It is said that because of the great number of robberies and murders that were committed along this road that the old Jews gave it the name of the "bloody Road." Travelers in the East tell us that it retains its character still. It was not a strange sight to see priests and Levites as well as Samaritans traveling along that road. In this story that Jesus told the lawyer he graphically pictures one of these scenes. A man lone, robbed, dying by the roadside, the neglect of the priest, the Levite, an the hospitality of the Samaritan, and then turning to the lawyer asks him a question, which when answered called forth the words of the text, "Go and do. Let us notice where and what.

The good Samaritan wasted no needless sympathy. He shed no idle tears. There are wounds that may be dressed, he puts forth his own hands to the dressing of them. There is a life that may oe saved, he does his best to save it. He gave more than time or money, he gave personal service. "Go and do likewise."

It is not always the person who weeps the readiest over sorrow who will do the most to relieve it. Tears will fill the eye. They should fill the eye, but the hand of active help will brush them away, that the eye may see more clearly what the hand has to do.

A true man must have a sound heart. He must be pure, just, benovelent in life.

Our Redeemer came to establish a closer bond of brotherhood than the earth before had known, to knit together true hearts, in the pure fellowship of a common faith, a common hope, a common heirship of eternal life through him. But he would have us know from the beginning that this bond, so sacred, so divine, was never meant to thwart or violate that other broad universal tie, that binds the whole family of our race together, that makes each man the neighbor of every other man that tenants this earthly globe. Of all influences that have ever descended upon our earth, none has ever done as much as Christianity to break down the walls of separation that differences of country, language, race, religion, have raised between man and man. It has defused the spirit of brotherly love which overleaps all temporary fences, which diffuses itself everywhere over the broad field of humanity—tempering all, uniting all, brightening all, harmonizing discords, pouring a healing balm into all the rankling sores of life.

URGES CLEANING UP

Priest Falls Into Line With Chamber of Commerce

The words of St. Paul to the Ephesians, "Your heart shall rejoice and your joy no man shall take from you," was the foundation of a forceful sermon delivered by Rev. Father Lindsman at the Church of the Immaculate Conception yesterday. In the course of his address the priest pointed out that the only real joy and happiness of the world comes from work well performed, a clean and righteous life and a strict conformity to our duties, whatever our station in life may be.

Among the announcements of the day Father Lindsman stated that he had been requested by the Chamber of Commerce to urge the members of the congregation to join the clean-up campaign planned by the chamber. The announcement was read in every church of the city yesterday. Father Linsman spoke of the effects of a clean-up week and urged that his hearers join the movement and brighten up their premises, by cleaning their yards and painting their homes if possible. He described the proper sanitary conditions that should exist about the home particularly in the warm weather an condemned any unsanitary pratice which would endanger public health.

The young ladies Sodality met in the afternoon at the church and plans were made for a reception some time in the month of May. The meeting was attended by almost every young woman of the parish over sixteen years of age. Several applications for membership were received.

The Bible History class was requested to attend the catechism services next Saturday morning at 9.30 o'clock at which time there will also be instruction for the younger children.

SPEAKER SWEET MAKES SUMMARY

ple a signal service in solving problems of government in such a manner that all sections of the state may feel that their interests are identical in giving every citizen even and exact justice.

"We have made provision for carrying out the vote of the people in favor of a constitutional convention already organized, and have passed the necessary legislation to enable that body to perform its important work. Great interests of the people will be carefully considered by delegates who have the confidence of all citizens.

"The character of citizens whom the governor has selected to carry on the work outlined by the changes made is beyond dispute. T here is already a better atmosphere in all state departments, signs of closer attention to duty, and evidences of needed courtesy in meeting the demands of the public.

"Take it all in all, we have made changes which encourage a closer study of economic conditions looking to the curtailment of useless burdens and the increase of efficiency in all directions of the state's activities. But we must consider that, we have but laid the foundation of improvements which we hope to see in the years not far away."

It is left for the second year of the administration to complete the constructive legislation of which the work of this session is but the foundation.

TREBLE CLEFF COMING FRIDAY

Will Sing in Conjunction With Normal Glee Club in Baptist Church

An event of interest to all music lovers of the city will be presented at the First Baptist church next Friday night, on the occasion of the joint recital of the Treble Clef Club and the Glee Club of Oswego Normal school. The two clubs will make their first appearance outside of Oswego in this city Friday night, and although both clubs have had offers to appear in several larger towns of this section, the travel necessitated would conflict with the school sessions and the Fulton appearance is the only one to be permitted thus far.

The Treble Clef club is composed entirely of young ladies of the Normal to the number of fifty. Friday night the club will render the cantata, "The Lady of Shalott," the words taken from Tennyson's poem of that name. Miss Bessie Flanagan of Oswego, who has many friends in this city, is the soprano soloist and she possesses a clear, cultured voice of great charm and range. Her solos have been a pleasing feature of the recitals elsewhere. The rendering of the cantata will cover about an hour's time. Mrs. Charlotte Waterman, directress of music at the Normal, will direct and Miss Ruth Park, a student who is an especially versatile and gifted pianist, will accompany.

The Glee Club comprises fifteen young men of the school, and they will present some original numbers, short selections for the most part. Dexter Wright of Oswego is the tenor soloist and Robert Riley of Yonkers, N. Y., will sing the bass solos. Both young men have exceptionally good voices and they are accorded excellent support by the chorus. Mrs. Waterman will conduct and Miss Park will accompany.

There has been a large advance sale of tickets and indications point to a large attendance. The recital will start promptly at 8 o'clock and it is requested that the audience be seated before that time if possible.

After the recital, several Fulton students at the Normal will tender the clubs an informal reception and invitations have been extended to many young people of the city to attend. Music will be enjoyed and light refreshments served.

Five young ladies of this city who are attending Normal are members of the Treble Clef club and will participate in the recital. They are the Misses Mary Webb, Gertrude Lake, Frances Lewis, Ada Saunders and Ruthaline Gifford.

ON ARBOR DAY

Letter Writing Contest Suggested For Public Schools.

The regular monthly bulletin issued by the State Educational Department to superintendents of schools as well as principals was received in this today with a personal letter from State Commissoner John H. Finley requesting that every pupil in the State submit letters upon Arbor Day for a great Arbor Day annual to be placed in the State Library as a souvenir.

Commissioner Finley suggests that one pupil be designated from each school to write upon that school or upon how Arbor Day was celebrated in that school. In case the selection of one individual pupil is deemed ill-advised, he suggests that a competition be held among all the pupils, the one writing the best letter to the State Commissioner to receive the honor of having his epistle entered in the big volumes of the annual.

ROOSEVELT INVITED

To Make Short Address at Dr. Shaw's Meeting Monday Night.

Colonel Theodore Roosevelt has been invited to deliver a short speech on woman suffrage at the meeting which will be held thsi evening in the Hippodrome Theatre, when Dr. Anna Shaw, President of the National Woman Suffrage Association, will speak on the topic which is considered now one of the vital questions and issues of the general election to be held in November. Providing the trial in Syracuse ends early today arrangements have been made to have the Colonel motor down from Syracuse about six o'clock, and be at the theatre about eight o'clock, when the meeting is cheduled to commence. The uncertainty of the trial in Syracuse makes it impossible today to make any definite plans, but a committee of the local Woman Suffrage Club has been working out plans for the entertainment of the distinguished visitor in the event that he is able to be present.

Colonel Roosevelt and Dr. Shaw have been friends for years, and about a year ago he spoke at a meeting in the Metropolitan Opera house in New York city, at which the Doctor was the principal speaker.

As a speaker Dr. Shaw is widely different from the type of suffrage orator which the old-fashioned cartoonist has loved to epict. She is witty, sensible and direct in her appeal, and never talks about "woman's rights," or for that matter, "woman's wrongs." She seems to move in a world of practical realities and makes a good-natured thrust at what she regards as the fantastic conception of the antis. But her quiet manner mere ly empasises and brings out the extraordinary oratorical powers which she possesses.—Oswego Palladium.

VISIT VICTORIA MILLS

Thirty-five Students of Syracuse University Visit Paper Plant and Learn Methods.

Prof. E. N. Pattee of the chemistry department of Syracuse University with thirty-five students in the department came to Fulton this morning by trolley to study the practical part of tissue paper manufacture at the Victoria Paper Mills Co.

Two or three hours were spent in this work tracing the conversion of the raw materials through the various processes of manufacture to the finishing rooms where the paper is cut into sheets or toilet rolls and prepared for shipment to many customers throughout the United States.

At one o'clock the entire party were guests of the officers of the Victoria company at luncheon at the Clark House. After the repast informal talks were given by Mr. E. R. Redhead, the president of the company who is an alumnus of the university and who has been for many years a trustee of the institution an a member of the executive committee, and Prof. Pattee and others.

Some time was then spent by the party in a survey of the principal points of interest in the city and then with the conviction that Fulton is one of the busiest, most attractive and progressive places in the state, the visitors returned to their studies at the university.

ANGLER FOUGHT WITH A BEAR

Fultonian, Fishing at Wolcott, Was Saved From Beast By His Friends

A festive fishing party that set out in high spirits from this city yesterday narrowly escaped returning with a sad tale to relate. John C. Trumbull and a party of friends all of whom refused to give their names, and asked that the matter be "soft-pedalled" started early yesterday morning for Wolcott. It is rumored that several members of the party are regular church members and consequently a tale of a Sunday fishing trip which mentions their names is not ardently desired.

However, to return. Wolcott was discovered in exactly the same spot that Mr. Wolcott left it and the party disembarked from their touring cars and proceeded to unload the rods, baskets, nets and all other necessities for a real fishing trip. Mr. Trumbull's reputation as a lucky angler is well known and several of the party tried to keep their eyes upon him with the intent of trailing him to his favorite pool, the location of which he has been keeping secret. He eluded their vigilance, however, and disappeared.

The sultry morning wore on and the other members of the party were whipping the cool streams with indifferent luck and lolling about under the cool shade of the trees, when they were suddenlf startled by a cry for help. Two men had guns and grasping these they started with the rest of the party in the rear. After a run of perhaps one hundred yards the party burst through a thicket into a clearing and there a thrilling light sight met their startled gaze. Mr. Trumbell, with no weapon except his fishing pole, a steel affair, and a small hunting knife, was fighting off a full grown cinnamon bear. The beast was growling and rushing in at Mr. Trumbell, who was stepping aside from each rush, at the same time beating the bear over the head with his pole. At the appearance of the rest of the party the bear turned with a howl of rage and dashed away into the dense thicket that surrounds Squire Turner's farm in that vicinity. Mr. Trumbell was almost exhausted and it was some time before he could tell his companions the whole affair.

He had just succeeded in bringing a three-pound trout to the bank when he looked over his shoulder and saw the bear placidly eating his string of fish which were hanging on the bank. Non-plussed for a moment, Mr. Trumbell stood still, but amazed at the presence of the bear, and enraged at the loss of his fine catch he ran upon the bear and beat the beast over the head, anticipating that it would turn and run. The bear showed fight however, and the Fultonians was getting into a tight place when help arrived.

It was learned last evening that the bear had escaped from an intinerant circus which showed one day last week at Scriba. A party of Wolcott citizens armed themselves last night and started a hunt for the animal. Losses of stock have been reported by several farmers in that vicinity recently and the farmers believe that the bear is the guilty party. He will be given short shrift if the men sight him.

Mr. Trumbell had recovered this morning from his harrowing experience and made light of his bravery in the encounter.

GOVERNMENT TO HELP WIVES

Farm Housewife Asks Department for Help; Bulletins Published

The replies to the letter addressed by the Secretary of Agriculture some time ago to the housewives of 55,000 crop corresponents of the department in which he asked them to suggest ways in which the department could render more direct service to the farm women of the country, have now been published in four bulletins. The replies cover a wide variety of subjects, but may be divided into four general groups dealing, respectively, with (1) the social and labor nees of farm women, (2) their domestic needs, (3) their educational needs, and (4) their economic needs. In publishing these bulletins the department has not attempted to edit the letters nor to express any opinion upon the views contained in them. The purpose of the inquiry was to afford the women of the country an apportunity to express their own opinions and the result is a collection of information on many different aspects of rural life.

In all something over 2,000 letters were received and these have been published in whole or in part, although a few which expressed views practically identical with those in other letters have been omitted for this reason. The letters come from every State in the Union and were written by persons of widely different circumstances. Pratically all, however, entered into the spirit of the inquiry and discussed with sincerity the problems that confronted them and the aid which they hoped to obtain from the Government. The few exceptions only served to make more impressive the widespread interest in and desire for a richer and fuller life.

Since no direct questions were asked and no definite replies expected, it is not possible to state that the women of the country have voted in favor of the department's undertaking this or that form of work. It is, however, most evident that the women do expect the department to furnish them with practical information which will lighten and at the same time make more effective their daily tasks. This desire for information and instruction is perhaps the dominant note in the corresponence. Many odmen call attention to the fact that much more has been done to introuce modern scientific methhomes of the agriculturists. Farms, into agriculture than into the it is said, on which the most advanced machinery can be found in successful operation are utterly lacking in household conveniences and comforts. Men who have been taught that it is good business to invest in labor-saving devices for the field and stable decline to regard similar devices indoors as anything but a useless waste of money. Many of the writers, moreover, admit that they themselves are ignorant of the best ways and means of accomplishing their desired results. What they ask from the department, therefore, is largely instruction in household matters similar to that which has been furnished in the production of crops and live stock.

This information, it is pointed out, should not be confined entirely to the printed page, but there should be personal demonstrations, lectures, exhibitions—in fact, every educational weapon should be utilized. Many of the correspondents also express the earnest wish that this demonstration work could be amplified to include the better organization of rural communities for social life. One of the great objects in striving for a more efficient administration of the household is to secure time and opportunity for self-develo nent. The need for a more active, intellectual life is voiced with as much earnestness as the nee for easier material conditions.

This desire is particularly noticeable in those letters which discuss the problem of bringing up children on the farm. Practically all of the writers attach the greatest importance to keeping their children in the country. They have no wish to see their boys and girls leave the farm for the city, but they by no means blind themselves to the many reasons which may cause them to o so. They urge, therefore, the improvement and extension of educatinal facilities in the country and in particular the establishment of agricultural schools, which, as more than one writer puts it, "will not educate their children away from the farm."

Another matter which occupies the attention of many writers is the difficulty of obtaining labor. This, it is said, is fully as important in the house as in the field. In many sections it is said to be an aboslute impossibiliity to secure adequate assistance no matter how pressing the perpetual and heartbreaking struggle to catch up with the multitude of things that are always still to be one about the house. Suggestions are made, therefore, for employment bureaus and the diversion of the stream of immigration from cities to the farm, but in general the writers do not look for legislation or Government action to provide a direct remedy. Instead they trust that a general improvement of conditions, brought about by increased knowledge and by the introduction of simple water, heating, and lighting systems, will result in making country life sufficiently attractive to bring to the farm the required help. In this connection it is noteworthy that many correspondents are confident that the way to make girls interested in domestice work is to teach them how to do it properly.

AUTO CLUB WILL PARADE

Cars Will Form Line at City Hall, Wednesday Night at 7:30

The committee in charge of the dinner of the Fulton Automobile club Wednesday evening at the City Hall announced this morning that another important feature has been decided on in connection with the affair. E. J. Penfield, one of the members of the club made the suggestion Saturday that a parade of all the automobiles in the city precede the dinner, the parade to start at 7.30 o'clock from the City Hall. The suggestion was approved and accordingly every auto owner is invited to be on hand with his machine at the time and place appointed. The dinner proper will not start until 8 o'clock and there will be plenty of time for a parade of the principal streets of the city. It is hoped that there will be a big showing of cars. The course of the parade has not yet been decided upon

John F. Perchway, of the McDonald company, will have charge of the decorations of the hall and he will put a number of men at work tomorrow evening. The club colors will predominate in the decorations.

T. M. Ripley, the state engineer, who will speak on the road work throughout the state has written President McCully of the local club that he will be on hand at the time appointed and it is expected that his address will interest everyone in attendance, whether auto owners or not.

Caterer Hall of the Lewis House, in charge of the dinner, has not decided yet upon all the details, but those familiar with his knowledge of the culinary art, predict that the menu will satisfy the most fastidious. The dinner will be an informal get-together affair, arranged by the club for the purpose of uniting the auto owners of the city and to launch the 1915 season of the club in the proper manner. Road runs and other events of interest to all autoists will be discussed and planned at the dinner.

BRITONS IN FEAR OF PROHIBITION BURY DRINKS IN BACK GARDENS

King George's Palaces Go "Dry," and War Alters Whole Mode of Table Life In Europe.

Bachelors In Vienna Limited to Six Slices of Bread a Day, and Poor Have to Eat Straw.

KING GEORGE'S palaces are now "dry." The royal command forbidding the consumption of any wines, spirits or beer in the homes of the British monarch went into effect April 6.

It is estimated that already about 120,000 other homes in Great Britain, and mostly among the well to do, have followed the example set by the king and Lord Kitchener in mounting the water wagon. "I Don't Booze" buttons are being prepared similar to those with the motto "No Drinks Between Meals" that were worn for awhile in England a few years ago.

How far the "stop drinking" movement is likely to spread among the working classes, whom it is intended to affect, cannot yet be foreseen. At present it does not appear to have found any warm welcome among the workers. The Labor party has suddenly come out with a strong demand for an early peace, but the leaders deny that they are actuated by the invasion of the laborer's liberty as a drinker.

The brewers and distillers are up in arms. They believe that the voluntary campaign will fail and fear that total prohibition for the entire nation is not far off. They know that if Kitchener gives the word not another tap will be turned nor cork drawn, and they are exerting all their enormous influence to prevent the word being spoken.

Which Is Harder Task?

While Great Britain is trying to enforce an embargo on food for the Germans, she is endeavoring to put an embargo on drink for her own people. Experts are uncertain as to which she will find the harder task.

Meanwhile some of the effects of these efforts are remarkable. They are no less striking in Germany and Austria than in England.

In Vienna, for instance, the government has figured it out that a bachelor can live on six slices of bread a day. He will be allowed to eat other things, but his bread may not exceed this quantity, which weighs 7.4 ounces, or about 1.2 ounces for each slice. For each slice the bachelor will have his card punched, or clipped if in coupon form. It is estimated that he can eat two slices for breakfast, one for luncheon, one for the afternoon coffee and two for dinner.

These new food rules for bachelors are also to apply to persons living alone without a household, and they were dated to go into effect on April 11. Until that day no Viennese householder was to be permitted to use more than 3.53 ounces of flour a day for each member of the family.

In England they are counting the cost of the battle against drink because the government has stated that if it has to close up all the breweries and distilleries it will pay full compensation. The sort of sum this is likely to jump into may be estimated from the fact that the average expenditure even now per head of the population on drink is more than $100 a year, counting men, women and babies.

Drink $833,405,000 a Year.

The drink bill for the United Kingdom for 1913, the figures for which year are the latest issued, amounted to no less than the astounding sum of $833,405,000. In 1912 the British nation's drink bill was $807,706,650. It is believed that that for 1914 was correspondingly higher than that of 1913.

Thus the money spent on drink by the British people amounts to more than double the combined expenditures of the nation for its army and navy in times of peace.

From these figures it will be seen that if prohibition of the sale of liquor comes in Great Britain it will cause the biggest shock ever felt in that country. The brewers are pleading that British ale is a necessary part of a Briton's food. Some are saying the men could not work without drink. Others declare that unless the men drank and fuddled their minds so that they do not recognize their conditions they would not bear them.

Probably the early British cave man had his cocktail, crude but comforting. It is a matter of historic record that the English were making merry on mead before the custom of staining one's self bright blue with woad began to be considered the classy dress for the smart society people of those days.

The sudden shutting off of the sale of drink is certain to be dramatic. It is likely that it will be done at night by the police and the inland revenue officers, as happened in Russia. The general opinion is that such a method might do for the simple Slavs, but would not "go" in England. But it is unlikely that the saloon keepers of Britain will be caught napping.

At any rate, in preparation for the dread dry days wine and beer are already being hidden on an extensive scale. Beer is being buried in back yards, hidden in attics, stowed under cellared coals and pushed up into unused chimneys. The suburban builder is suggesting plans for latrines deep and utilizing the moon for vesperal trenching.

"I am a poor man," said a London bartender the other day, "but I can see what is coming, and I have mortgaged our home and laid in three gross of bottled whisky and half a dozen sacks of Portland cement. I have hired a wagon, and we are going to drive down Easter Monday to a cottage in Kent where my missus' sister Emma lives. After we have buried the stuff I am going to lay a concrete bed over it in case of accidents."

"Zeppelin bombs?" he was asked.

"No; sister-in-law's husband," he answered.

May Exempt Ireland.

There is some authority for a belief that Ireland will be exempt from prohibition, nominally because it is producing no munitions of war. The result certainly would be the discovery on an unprecedented scale of the superority of Irish scenery and air and the salubrity and general suitability of Ireland for vacations.

"We shall have to change the war song," said the manager of a tourist agency. "Believe me, the morning that John Bull awakens to find prohibition gripping the land the nation will be singing, 'It's a short way to Tipperary.'"

Throughout the Easter holidays not only the church people, but business men and employers of labor, spent their vacation circulating petitions reading:

"I am entirely in favor of the suspension of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors during the war, which I consider imperative for a quick and successful termination of the war. I shall heartily support the government in any such measure."

Under the defense of the realm act the British government has power to enforce prohibition merely by an order of the king in council without any further appeal to parliament.

Sir Thomas Dewar, the whisky man, in defending the trade has declared prohibition an absolute failure in America. Sir William M. Ramsay, the scientist, denying this, says in a published statement that his experience in America converted him to the prohibition cause and asserts that, despite "blind tigers" and other ways of evasion, the effect is most beneficial.

Germans Find New Foods.

But, while the British are worrying about a possible total lack of drink, the Germans and Austrians are no less anxious about their food.

Germany's newest food material is straw soup. It is the result of investigation by Hans Friedenthal, M. D., lecturer in the University of Berlin. The straw is reduced to flour by a special process. The indigestible and unpalatable cell walls are eliminated and the nutritive matter retained. It is served in a soup not unlike green rye soup and is even fit for baby food.

According to Vorwarts, all non-poisonous substances, including skins, peelings and the bark of trees, may be converted into wholesome eating matter for man if thoroughly disintegrated and properly treated.

The war has taught the people of Vienna and the whole of Austria that maize is an article by no means to be despised. Even the poor women of the people, with scant purses, would at first refuse maize. "Fit for cattle and hogs only," they would say. But they had to eat it, and they quickly learned how.

Next potato flakes, shaved and dried, were mingled with the flour. They managed to eat that too. "Nothing like trying after all," said an old man after his first meal of such bread.

But it took a lot of talking, printing, placarding of walls with mayoralty decrees, of lecturing, to work this change. The National Austrian Women's association took in hand the matter of lecturing. A thousand or more cooking and baking courses were established all over the empire, even in small towns and villages. Women of the highest aristocracy, like Archduchess Zita, Countess Hoyos and Countess Zamoyska, took part.

This has altered the whole mode of table life of the Austrians, who are by natural bent rather careless and thoughtless. Nothing now is wasted in foodstuff, no matter how little or how coarse.

OLYMPIC HERO DIES IN WAR.

Famous Quarter Mile Champion Succumbs to Wounds.

The latest British casualty list includes Lieutenant Halswelle of the Highland Light infantry, who died of wounds at the front. He was the famous quarter mile runner who won for Great Britain at the Olympic games at the stadium at Shepherd's Bush, London.

His victory was both unfortunate and sensational. In the second heat, it was alleged, he was bored off the track by the American, Carpenter, and the latter was disqualified.

TERRA COTTA.

The Ancient Greeks Used It, as Did Also Michaelangelo.

Terra cotta means literally baked earth. It is usually employed as though it meant only architectural ornaments made of baked clay. Yet Michelangelo made statues of it, the Japanese use it cleverly painted as "imitation bronze" for busts, tea jars and bowls, and the ancient Greek children had terra cotta dolls with movable legs fastened by wooden pegs.

In the trade today pieces of clay work for architectural ornament over eight inches square are called terra cotta. Under that size they are called ornamental brick.

The famous Della Robbia ware of Italy was of terra cotta covered with opaque enamel and painted. England used it much. From the time of Henry VIII. it was popular in large buildings, and since Queen Anne's day it has been used for ornamenting smaller houses.

Terra cotta can be produced in a variety of colors, and, while rains leave stone surfaces dingier, they brighten surfaces made of the clay. It is as durable as stone; it can be produced in more shades and colors; it can be molded into a great variety of designs; it can be given more delicate outlines than stone; it is lighter than stone.—New York Telegram.

CONDORS ROOST HIGH.

They Perch at an Altitude of 15,000 Feet Above the Sea.

There is a splendid specimen of the male condor in a glass case in the bird-room of the Children's museum in Brooklyn. Though he stands three and one-half feet high, the spread of his wings is nine feet.

"The condors live throughout the Andes, principally in Chile and Peru. Their favorite haunts are the level of perpetual snow," writes Miss Anna B. Gallup in the Museum News. "During a portion of the year condors roost in the trees on the lower mountain slopes, but in the breeding season (the summer months of November and December) they retire to the most broken and terrific precipices, 10,000 to 15,000 feet above the sea level, where no other creature can dwell. There on a ledge or shelf of rock the female lays two white eggs nearly four inches in length. Sometimes she places a few sticks around them, perhaps to keep them from rolling out of place.

"After about seven weeks, in February or early in March, the young hatch, entirely covered with soft white down, that afterward turns to a brown color.

Trapping Baboons.

Hagenbeck in his book says that baboons are caught in traps made much like the huts of savages. Food is put into the huts, and once the baboons go inside a trapdoor closes behind them. Outside, baboons make a great to do and urge the prisoners to escape. When the trappers come the captured baboons are terror stricken and try to force their heads through the walls of the huts. One baboon was caught three times in the same trap, and several when turned loose got back into the same trap a second time. When the baboons are carried away all their comrades thereabout climb into trees and scream out to the prisoners, who answer in sad, mournful voices. On one occasion some big Arabian baboons were trapped, when 2,000 or 3,000 baboons hurled themselves upon the trappers, who had hard work to save themselves with firearms and clubs. As the trappers were forced back the victorious baboons tore up the trap and turned loose the captured baboons.

Raindrops.

Drops of rain vary in their size perhaps from a twenty-fifth to a quarter of an inch in diameter. In parting from the clouds they precipitate their descent till the increasing resistance opposed by the air becomes equal to their weight, when they continue to fall with uniform velocity. This velocity is therefore in a certain ratio to the diameter of the drops; hence thunder and other showers in which the drops are large pour down faster than a drizzling rain. A drop of the twenty-fifth part of an inch in falling through the air would, when it had arrived at its uniform velocity, acquire a celerity of only eleven and a half feet per second, while one of a quarter of an inch would have a velocity of thirty-three and a half feet.

Wily Talleyrand.

Louis XVIII., complimenting Talleyrand one day upon his abilities, asked him how he had contrived first to overturn the directory and finally Bonaparte.

The wily diplomat replied, with charming simplicity: "Really, sire, I have had nothing to do with this. There is something inexplicable about me which brings ill luck on the governments that neglect me."

THE VILLAGE POSTMASTER

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

At fust it used to make me nervous and give me trouble, but it's bin goin' on so long that I'm gettin' used to do it. As regular as clockwork every Monday mornin' Peter Jones calls at the postoffice and leads me into a corner and whispers:

"Jube Pike, you are postmaster of Podunk and in touch with the government. Anything comin' from you goes. D'you know what's on foot to smash the United States all to splinters?"

"No."

"You'd never dream it, Jube. You'd never suspect it. I only caught on by the merest accident. Come closer. D'you know what Abner Joslyn is goin' to do if he don't git nominated fur the legislature? I've got it as straight as a ten foot pole. He's goin' to bolt, sir; goin' over to the other party and take Silas Comfort and Joe Harrison with him. Yes, sir; that's the plot and plan, and you kin judge what the results will be. We'll be knocked colder'n a wedge. Move, sir; move without a moment's delay. Jest sit right down and get a letter off to Washington and tell them what's up. Tell them not to take chances or waste time. I think Silas and Joe can be bought off, but the squar' must be arrested and chained hand and foot till the danger is over."

Tuesday is Deacon Taylor's day. Along about 11 o'clock he comes in and inquires if clotheslines are still bein' made the usual length and then raps on the counter and says:

"Jube Pike, this government is standin' on the verge of a chasm and don't know it. It's fur you to save us from a gigantic catastrophe."

"What's wrong, deacon?" I asks.

"Don't talk so loud. The town of Podunk is full of spies. Jube, you know Moses Carter, of course. You know that when he didn't get the nominashun fur constable two years ago he went out of politics and didn't give a red cent who was elected or defeated. He's bin layin' low, sir; bin playin' possum and thinks the time has come now. He's bin readin' up and gettin' figgers together, and he's comin' out with a statement that the tariff rates hev shut up seven different cooper shops in this county alone in the last four years. Think of that, Jube, fur a thunderclap!"

"But what we goin' to do?"

"It depends upon you, sir, and if I was in your boots, holdin' down a postoffice at $26.50 a year and in touch with the government, it wouldn't take me ten minutes to get a dispatch to Washington. They ought to be notified at once. It ought to be put to them mighty strong. Remember it's up to you," he said as he went out.

Wednesday I can silus look for Jacob Warner. Jacob had a brother scalped by Indians in 1868, and he wrote a letter to General Grant in 1872, and he's accounted a purty big man about Podunk. He's allus been wantin' to run for supervisor, but has somehow allus got left. He's still wantin' and comes in on Wednesdays and hangs around fur a spell and then says:

"Jube, I've known you goin' on twenty-eight years, and I'm the last one to take the bread out of your mouth."

"Anything up?" I asks.

"Thar is, sir, and don't you forgit it. Yes, sir, thar's sumthin' up, and Washington can't hear of it any too soon! I'll talk to you as I would to no other man in Podunk, because I feel as if I kin trust you. Jube, do you know that thar is one man in this town that can bust the whole United States higher than Gilderoy's kite just makin' one speech?"

"No, is it possible?" says I.

"It's just this way," he says, as he drops his voice to a whisper. "You write to Washington and tell them thar's danger ahead, and the awfulest kind of danger. Tell them that thar's a man in Podunk who has worked fur the party night and day fur the last twenty years and has got no thanks fur it. That man has contributed every liberty pole for the last ten years. He's argued and jawed and fit fur the party. He's even called his own brother a liar fur sayin' that taxes was too high. Jube, such faithfulness deserves a reward—virtue is goin' to triumph as usual, but if not"—

"Don't get excited, Jacob."

"I'm not gittin' excited, Jube, but if you and the rest of the government wants to avert a catastrophe you'll get your heads together mighty quick and see that the right thing is done."

Next day I count on Philetus Bluefields showin' up. Philetus had a great-grandfather killed in Havana by the fall of a hogshead of sugar, and since he's become of age he's been pressin' a claim for $10,000 damages. He says:

"Look here, sir. I'm either goin' to have that money or thar'll be the awfulest row in this kentry anybody ever heard of! I'm as quiet as a hen up to a certain point, but when you wake me up I'm fur blood and slaughter. I've stood it as long as I propose to, and you'd better see to things. Jest say as much in a letter to Washington. Say it's a case of bust or make fur these United States, and put a scratch under every word and sign your name in red ink. I will be in next week and hear what they write back. If the money is to come I'll go along humbly; if not, I'll proceed to rip things up the back and ditch candydates till North America won't hev a leg to stand on!"

HER ABSENT BOY.

When a Mother's Lot Is One of Wistful, Weary Waiting.

It's mighty hard to be a mother of sons in Homeburg. I worked in the postoffice for a year once, handed out mail—and I got to know just exactly what most of the mothers in town wanted. I could please them with a new magazine and mystify them with a circular or a business letter.

But if I wanted to light them up until they took the shadows out of the corners as they went out I would give them a letter from a son way off somewhere making good. The best of them didn't write any too often. Once a week is pretty regular, I suppose, from the other end, but you should see the mother begin to come in hungry again the second day after her letter came.

And when a boy came home successful and prosperous and his proud mother towed him down Main street it used to go to my heart to see the wistful looks of the woman friends.

There is hardly a family in Homeburg of the right age which hasn't a grownup son off at war somewhere—fighting failure. It's grand when they win, but I hate to think of some boys who haven't come back.—George Fitch in American Magazine.

Just Like Eve's Apple.

A fruit supposed to bear the mark of Eve's teeth is one of the many botanical curiosities of Ceylon. The tree on which it grows is known by the significant name of "the forbidden fruit," or "Eve's apple tree." The blossom has a very pleasant scent, but the really remarkable feature of the tree, the one to which it owes its name, is the fruit. It is beautiful and hangs from the tree in a peculiar manner. Orange on the outside and deep crimson within, each fruit has the appearance of having had a piece bitten out of it. This fact, together with its poisonous quality, led the Mohammedans to represent it as the forbidden fruit of the garden of Eden and to warn men against its noxious properties. The mask upon the fruit is attributed to Eve.

The Elgin Marbles.

The adventures of the Elgin marbles, now in the British museum, began in 1803, when they were wrecked at Cerigo on their way from Greece to England. It took the divers three years and a vast sum of money to fish up the Parthenon relics. It is believed that Lord Elgin spent over £74,000 in procuring these priceless fragments left by Turkish vandals, who would probably have made an end of even these had the earl not rescued them in time. The house of commons voted £36,000 for their purchase, so that the enterprising peer lost heavily in cash and suffered from a public agitation against his alleged "vandalism, rapacity and dishonesty," as well as from Byron's "Curse of Minerva."—London Chronicle.

Grip of the Bulldog.

It is a commonly accepted belief that nothing short of being pried loose will induce a bulldog to give up his grip on another dog or on an intruder, but this is a mistake. A little household ammonia poured on him as near his nose as circumstances will allow will make him let go immediately. The fumes of ammonia are so overpowering that a dog cannot possibly maintain his grip and his breath at the same time.

TWINS ARE PROBLEM IN U. S. MARINE CORPS.

But if Hallie Profits In Service Leslie Puts It Over Him In Love.

The Woodcock twins, Leslie F. and Hallie, twenty years old, who on enlisting obtained the promise that they should always serve in the same company, have become one of the chief problems of the United States marine corps. The entire corps at League island, Philadelphia, is amused by the continued complications which have arisen.

Both men are exactly alike in build, pose, action and expression, and as a result all sorts of punishments, rewards, commands and warnings meant for one are received by the other brother.

Leslie F. was found the other day in a state of well founded indignation over what he termed his brother's "outrageous conduct." He was engaged in painting a ceiling green, he explained, as a punishment for not reporting for drill, although he had been at the drill, and his brother, then absent upon a pilfered "shore leave," had not reported.

"Sometimes," said Leslie F., "I get a chance to put over a little matter on Hallie, and, believe me, when those chances come I'm about due to get away with it. It seems to me that I've been doing that boy's work ever since we started toddling.

"Down in Norfolk a little while after our enlistment Hallie got himself a girl. One day he didn't have enough to take a car out to his girl's house. He asked me for a loan, and I said 'Never!' Then I got all dressed up and just dropped out to see the young lady myself.

"Well, it sure was fun. It was 'Hallie' this and 'Hallie' that, and I never was petted so in my life.

"That's only one of four times I have outlucked Hallie in the romance market, but he gets back and then some. Here in the barracks he has it all over me all the time."

Scientist Gets Seeds of Trees That Grow 400 Feet High.

Seeds which are expected to grow trees more than 400 feet high have been received from Australia by Professor Henry G. Walters at the Plant Research and Botanical institute, Langhorne, Pa. The trees which Professor Walters will endeavor to grow are a part of the glory of Australia, but so far as he knows, none has ever been grown in America.

"From the cells of these huge trees, eighty-one feet in circumference, it is possible to distil a liquid hydrocarbon similar to that distilled by Edison from coal gas," Professor Walters says.

BEAR CLOSES UP TOWN.

Redding (Conn.) Citizens Take to Attics When Horse Is Eaten.

Redding, Conn., was closed up by a real, live, honest-to-goodness bear. The village board of strategy planned to attack so soon as it had a sufficient supply of ammunition and meanwhile used the telephone in arranging tactics.

Citizens were laughed at when they declared they had seen a bear. Everybody said it was all bunk that there could be a bear within fifty miles of New York city, but when one of Farmer James Green's horses was found half eaten everybody took to their bear proof cellars and attics.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, April 24.—Believing that the loss of life from drowning may be lessened along the course of the canals, State Superintendent Wotherspoon, of the State department of public works, has made preparations for a life saving corps. It is the plan of Superintendent Wotherspoon to divide his corps so that at each important lock there will be two or more life-savers within call at all times.

Superintendent Wotherspoon believes that with trained swimmers on hand lives that might be lost can be saved in case of accidents along the canal. He has taken the matter up with the authorities and has, it is understood, been authorized to form his life-saving corps. Already a number of the employes of the department of public works have signified their intentions of becoming members.

In the past there have been a number of drowning accidents due to many causes. The records of the department of public works show that there have also been a number of rescues. Employes of canal boats have more than once brought safely to shore those who through dispondency or some other reason, have been found struggling in the arificial waterway.

In a short time all of Superintendent Wotherspoon's volunteers will be equipped with the proper facilities which go with life-savings corps. While under the general supervision of the United States, they will work separately and will not be directly connected with the feerald government.

The fact that all of the life savers will be equipped with "first aid to the injured" kits will make their services doubly valuable. In addition to aiding those who perchance find themselves in the water, they will assist injured unfortunates, providing that they are injured on canal lands.

Superintendent Wotherspoon has not yet made public his entire plan as to numbers or when his volunteers will begin work. It has been his hope that the whole matter would be kept a secret until the proposed life-saving corps was organized and thoroughly trained. The idea was so novel and at the same time so excellent that when the matter was first suggested by him it became noised about all along the canal system.

Merit will be recognized by Superintendent Wotherspoon as will heroism; for he has promised that when unusual deeds of bravery are performed that he will award medals.

The scheme of decorations for valor has not been disclosed in its entirety, yet it is said that each year a badge for courage will be given for the most worthy rescue or the most notable act of courage.

As a retired officer of the United States army, having at one time been chief of staff, Superintendent Wotherspoon, or General Wotherspoon, as he is more frequently called, will enforce the strictest discipline in the ranks of his life-savers. The several corps will be no sham or gaily dressed dody, but on the other hand will ben an efficient, well trained organization.

It is understood that lifeboats will be supplied the members of the volunteers who will be on duty along the canalized portions of the Hudson and Mohawk rivers. The lock operators, assistant lock operators, lockmasters and in fact all who are employed at mechanical work will be invited to join in the life-saving movement.

In the Spring

The days of cleaning house have come,
The maddest of the year,
When everything is upside down
And scattered far and near.
My meals are but a mere excuse;
My wife has grown a shrew.
The clothes I want are on the line;
My books the basement strew.

Each day, each week throughout the year
This house is garnished bright,
But when spring comes my wife declares
The dirt germs are a fright.
And then she gets her pails and mops,
Her brooms and soap galore,
And life becomes for days untold
A nightmare and a bore!

BARNES BATTLES AGAINST COLONEL

Leader Will Depend Upon His Own Testimony and Diary

Theodore Roosevelt resumed the witness stand today and the fight was continued to force the admission as evience the series of letters which passed between Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Barnes and Mr. Roosevelt and Herbert Parsons in 1908 and 1910.

This correspondence, which was voluminous, is erpected to reveal that while Mr. Roosevelt was a partisan of Governor Hughes in 1908 he had turned on him in 1910. At the time there was some talk of nominating Mr. Hughes fro a third term.

As Mr. Roosevelt has based a good deal of his case so far on the contention that William Barnes persistnetly stood in the way of reforms advocated by Governor Hughes, it is proposed to show if possible that Mr. Roosevelt was like wise an opponent of Governor Hughes and was fighting to block his renomination when President Taft ended the controversy by appointing him to the United States Supreme Court Bench.

Included in these letters also are several that passed between Mr. Roosevelt and Francis Hendricks, the veteran leader of this county. All of the Roosevelt letters of this period are said to contain spicy comments on public men which have not hitherto been published. In 1912, when Mr. Roosevelt was engaged in a controversy with an independtn political leader, there was a threat by the leader to publish a number of letters written by Mr. Roosevelt. The latter challenged his opponent to pront the letters, asserting that he had neved written anything in his life that he was ashamed of. The letters were not printed at the time, and are said to be ones which are now in the possession of Mr. Ivins. Justice Andrews will decide in the morning whether to admit the letters, as he has had the matter under consideration since Friday night.

Mr. Ivins will take up the famous Tennessee Coal and Iron absorption by the United States Steel Corporation in 1907 and show Mr. Roosevelt's connection with that much criticised purchase. It was during teh panic of that year that Judge Gary and other officials of the Steel Corporation went to Washington nad, it is alleged, received the assurance of Mr. Roosevelt, then President, that the purchase of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company was not illegel under the anti-trust lawss and that, if made, it would not be subjected to an investigation by the Attorney General.

Perry Belmon, president of the Nation Campaign Publicity Association, yesterday sent a telegram to William M. Ivins, counsel for William Barnes in the Bornes-Roosevelt libel action now in progress in Syracuse, taking issue with Theodore Roosevelt's testimony relating to the passing by Congress of a campaign publicity law.

Here is the telegram, inpart:—The published report of Mr. Roosevelt's testimony before Judge Andrews contains the following statement in reply to a question from you, 't was during the last years of my presidency that the campaign publicity legislation was passed, prior to 1908.'

"You then asked, 'If that is so, what was the necessity of your having sent a special message on that subject in 1908?'

"Mr. Roosevelt replied, "Because the publicity of campaign expenditures was only a feature, and only a small feature, of the evils against which I was warring.'

Mr. Rooseveit could hardly be expected to be accurate under the circumstances. Congress did not enact the first campaign publicity law until June 25, 1910. During Mr. Roosevelt's Presiental term the Executive Committee of the National Campaign Publicity Association, responsible for the initiation, in 1905, of this legislaton, the movement having started in New York at the close of the Parker-Roosevelt campaign of 1904, became convinred that Mr. Roosevelt did nothing to promote this legislation. In response to publiu sentiment he did send a message to Congress referring to the subject, and that was all. He now says it is a small feature, which doubtless is his opinion."

Not New, But Impressive

These are old stories that are being retailed at Syracuse. There is very little indeed that is new in them, unless it is a few details. The episodes that are being thrown on the film at this particular entetrainment have been shown on other occasions. Mr. Roosevelt himself has presented some of them from the platform. They have been explained in the columns of newspapers. They have been "common knowlege" among politicians these many years. Sometimes they have come forward as rumors, the details being censored out and the salient features alone remaining on view. At other times they have leaped boldly out on the canvass, have been charged by independent newspapers and correspondens, have been used as the basis for the formation of new parties and movements, have been alleged and declared by candidates who got out of harmony with the machines and have attempted to make independent canvass by themselves. Always they have been suspected in the minds of most men who take account of the inner workings of politics, and who have the sense and disposition not to be misled by party names and cast their votes for an organization whose leaders were hand-in-glove with the leaders of the oppisition.

Years and years ago, in a celebrated libel suit that was tried in this country and in which this paper was the defendant, the existence of an arrangement between opposition party leaders was proven in court to the complete satisfaction of a jury and of all those who heard the testimony that was produced upon that occasion. While that was an "understanding" between local machines and it reflected a condition that existed in the larger operations of State machines an bosses, and which has been known and recognized by all men. Like bribery in elections, it has been a difficult matter to prove, as the prinicipals have stood together and have not come forward with facts, times, incidents, occasions, transactions, letters, circumstances, conversations and persons after the manner that is now being done upon the witness stand and under oath.

So, while there is nothing new in the revelations that are being made in the celebrated case of Barnes vs. Roosevelt—which, by-the-way, should be preserved in permanent form thru its issuance in a volume which might become a "popular seller"—there is no doubt watever about the impressiveness of this revlation that is being made in the courtroom. Nor is there doubt concerning its importance to the people of this State. For we have come upon a time in which there appears to be no relief for the taxpayer, no matter which of the two machines he may favor with his vote in the attempt to give it the administration of power.—Utica Observer.

MACHINE GUNS DROVE BACK HEAVY ATTACK

"Prior to this the close proximity of the contending sides had led to a slackening in the bombardment; but it then broke out afresh, and with almost as great intensiyt as on the preceding evening. Our position, however, now was more secure, and, although the shelling and bombarding never ceased altogether, the night may be said to have in comparative quiet."

The narrative says the bombardment was maintained Monday, April 19, and that the Germans extended their shelling to the entire Ypres area, including the town itself, in which, it is asserted, fifteen children were killed. Toward evening the Germans made another attack on Hill No. 60, but the "eye witness" asserts, "again did our machine guns do tremendous damage and the attack was beaten off."

"Another attack at eight o'clock in the evening," the report continues, "sugered the same fate. Still the Germans would not admit defeat, and all night long parties armed with hand grenades made repeated egorts to drive us ox the hill, their attacks alternating with bombardments from artillery of all kinds and also trench mortars."

By Wednesday, the report says, the British had firmly established themselves on the hill.

"The attack upon and the defence of Hill No. 60," the narrative declares, "will go in history as one of the finest exploits of the British troops during the war. Officers who experienced the bombardment prior to the attack of the Prussian Guard on April 11 and also underwent that directed against Hill No. 60 say the latter by far was the worse of the two.

"What our troops withstood can in some degree be realized if it be remembered that the space fough over during four and one-half days was only two hundred and fifty yards in length by about two hundred yards in depth.

"Upon that small area the enemy for hours hurled tons of metal and hihg explosives, and at times the hilltop was wreathed in clouds of poisonous fumes, and yet our gallant infantry did not give way. They stood firm under a fire which swept away wholle sections at a time, filled the trenches with dead bodies and so cumbered the approach to the front line that reinforcements could not reach it without having to climb over the prostrate forms of their fallen comrades.

"In these circumstances our losses naturally were heavy. Nevertheless they have not depressd the men, all of whom, including the wounded, are extremely cherful, for they know the fight for Hill No. 60 has cost the Germans more than it has cost us."

The desperate efforts of the Germans to recapture the hill, the narrative says, "probably were due not only to the intrinsic value of the position but the fear of personal consequences to the general concerned if they failed to hold it."

He adds that the Bavarian generals who were responsible for the unsuccessful action of St. Eloi were placed on the retired list.

The troops who opposed the British on Hill No. 60, the "eye witness" says, were composed of Saxons and men recruited from all parts of Germany.

INCOMPARABLE T. R.

The most biased opponent of Colonel Roosevelt must admire the resourcefulness be demonstrated as his own witness. He managed for a day or two to make it appear that Barnes, not he, was on trial. In spite of court admonishment he broke over the rules and got his stuff before the jury. In the most plausible way he linked the stories which came to him and made them appear as sufficient foundation for his conclusions. He frankly told of his intimate social and political relations with Barnes and argued there was no inconsistency in his continued confidence in Barnes for he did not regard Barnes as other than personally honest. Then he proceeded to build a case which fitted no honest man. He exhibited personal letters from Barnes to show that Barnes objected to official action which would mean financial loss to him, yet not until fifteen years later did he regard Barnes's request as indicating a mercenary spirit. He surely made a strong case for Mr. Ivins to combat, a case so strong that a great deal of it will stick in the jurors' minds, since jurors are but human.

It is gratifying to those who have supreme confidence in the judiciary that the doors have been opened wide so that no element of the colonel's case is barred by technicalities. The same ruling will enable Barnes to get before the jury matter which ordinarily would not be admitted in an action confined to pleadings.

It appears from the colonel's own evidence that he sought Barnes's help for the race track people against Governor Hughes. He admits that Barnes told him that the bill was right, that bill was right, that the people wanted it and that it should pass. Barnes saw Belmont as the colonel requested. Barnes changed his position and was a target. He wrote the colonel complaining that he was being hammered, but like a good soldier declare he would take the clubbing as long as he could keep his head above the water. The colonel replied in an appreciative and encouraging way, wishing him good luck. That racing incident made the break between Barnes and Hughes, yet the colonel proceeded to blame Barnes for the organization's attitude toward Hughes thereafter. The colonel admitted the initial action, offered evidence to prove Barnes was influenced by him to oppose the racing measure and proceeded to lambast Barnes. The story reads as though he got away with it. We think he did. He is a marvelous witness as well as a marvel in other lines. In an English court he would not have a chance. At Syracuse it doesn't seem from a study of the evidence as reported that he can lose. The New York Evening Sun concludes a comparison of Roosevelt and Barnes in this manner:

It is not levity in the Colonel; it is genius. He is the master mind, the oversoul, all things to all men and far above the obligation of steadfastness or even consistency. Every new revelation of the workings of his sublime complexity adds to the fascination, even to the admiration, which he commands from common men.

We await with eagerness the light which Mr. Barnes will throw from the wold outside upon this commanding figure.—Herald-Gazette.

SHORT BALLOT IN THE WEST

Six years' experience with long primary ballot said to have prepared people for change. Governor Dunne strongly in sympathy. Bills to be introduced this year for making state board of equalization and municipal court at Chicago appointive.

Crime Wave Strikes City; 2 Robberies In a Few Hours

A wave of crime, without parallel in the annals of the city swept over Fulton late yesterday and last night. From early in the day until two o'clock this morning the police force was busy, and there were several calls for the patrol.

An unusual number of arrests for drunkenness were reported and Judge Wilson meted out severe sentences to several old offenders in City Court this morning. The most important case on the docket evolved from an assault perpetrated on Rev. Wayland G. Bassett, of Cayuga st., a retired clergyman, well advanced in years. The assault was committeed yesterday afternoon at Mr. Bassett's home by two young men who have been loitering about the city for the past two weeks. These strangers presented themselves as repair men and announced that they would clean and repair carpet-sweepers, furniture, etc. This subterfuge is sometimes used to affect an entrance into the houses of the city, and then if chances were favorable, the crooks pocket any articles of value which might be in sight.

Mr. Bassett was working in his garden yesterday afternoon when one of the young men came into the yard and asked him into the house saying that he would like to fix his carpet sweeper and also look at any other of his household articles which needed repairs. Mr. Bassett, never suspecting the man for a moment, led the way into the house and when he stepped into the room he found the other man there. While one man blocked his exit, the other asked him for $5 with which to get out of town. Mr. Bassett, amazed at their nerve, said that he did not have $5 and told them that he would not give it to them if he did. They then jumped upon him and held him down on a couch and beat him almost into a state of insensibility. Fighting against odds, Mr. Bassett finally forced his way to the door and after opening it fell out on the porch on his back, crying for help. Fred Blodgett and Irving Galusha, residents of the neighborhood, heard his cries and came running to his assistance. The two men attempted to escape but Mr. Galusha and Mr. Blodgett collared one as he attempted to make his getaway through the front door and as the place was by that time entirely surrounded, the other man affected a bold front and walked into a neighbor's house to telephone the police. Mr. Blodgett had already called the police and when they arrived the men and Mr. Bassett, with the witnesses, were taken at once to the City Court.

Judge Wilson called court immediately and the men were arraigned. After Mr. Bassett told his story, the accused, in rebuttal, said that Mr. Bassett had attempted an assault upon them. This did not seem logical in view of the fact that the clergyman is old and bears an excellent reputation in the neighborhood. After hearing both sides of the story, Judge Wilson told Mr. Bassett that he would hold the men if Mr. Bassett would make a complaint against them and appear before the Grand Jury. Mr. Bassett, was by that time a nervous wreck, unable to talk coherently, and suffering from the severe shock of his experiences, and he stated that he did not believe himself equal to the task. Accordingly Judge Wilson gave the men 15 minutes in which to leave town and they left. At the hearing they could produce no references of character, except from keepers of Dannemora prison, and it is rumored that they have both served terms. Judge Wilson was unable to hold the men, unless Mr. Bassett would make a complaint.

Intoxicated men livened up things in the evening hours, but it was about the hour of midnight, that two more crimes were committed. The Wolever poolroom on 1st st. only a stone's throw from Police Headquarters was entered and robbd of cigars, tobacco and candy, amounting to perhaps $50, some time after midnight. The thief left tracks on the canal banks in the rear of the building and from the similarity in the tracks it is assumed that one man did the job. After climbing the wall, aided by a wooden support that was built under an addition to the building, the robber broke the lock on a window and entered the pool-rooms proper. There was no light in the place and coming to the front of the store, he rifled the cash box and stole cartons of cigarettes, tobacco and several boxes of candy. The door leading to the cellar shows marks of a chisel around the lock and it is supposed that he first attempted to effect an entrance that way. The robbery was discovered by the police later in the morning and Mr. Wolever was notified. The police have a clue to the thief and it is expected that his arrest will be effected. within forty-eight hours.

Shortly before the Wolever robbery, two men attempted to enter garage of Lawrence J. McQuade, proprietor of the Clark house. The garage is located behind the Quirk theatre and the marauders were hard at work when they were frightened away by employes of the Onyx. They ran up Rochester st. hill but a good description of them was reported. Mr. McQuade would not say this morning whether or not he would enter a complaint against the guilty parties but meanwhile the police are keeping an eye on the men and they will be arrested if they attempt to leave town. No damage was done at the garage.

Judd Donovan, a barber, who almost severed his finger with a razor Monday while at work in the Clark House shop, was held up in the "Flats" section last night about 11 o'clock, beaten and robbed of about $2 in cash. He does not know his assailant but he was able to furnish the police with a good description of the foot-pads and a warrant has been issued for their arrest.

Clean Up and Paint Up

Between now and May 15th, the city administration, the Board of Health, the Chamber of Commerce, and all good citizens who want to see Fulton a cleaner city are going to co-operate in a general clean up.

WILL YOU HELP?

RUBBISH and PAPER are a FIRE HABARD—get rid of them, and avoid the risk.

FILTH and STAGNANT WATER breed DISEASE. Are you raising the mosquitos and flies that plague you? If so cover up your garbage cans, and drain your stagnant pools.

ASHES and REFUSE left in yards are not only unsightly and unsanitary but are there in violation of the law

NOW is the time to get rid of them all.

Yours for—

Better Health—Fewer Fires—Cleaner Fulton.

Dr. G. G. Whitaker, Health Officer;

Ex-Mayor Conners, Member Fulton Board of Education, Urges the Early Purchase of Falley Seminary Property as Site for Fulton High School.

As chairman of the Education Committee of the new Chamber of Commerce, I have appointed the following committee to take the steps necessary to petition the Board of Education to pass a resolution asking the Common Council to call a special election to again vote on securing of the "Falley Seminary" property as a site for a new high school: G. B. Deuel, chairman; Miss Ada Thayer, F. A. Miller, Rev. M. G. Buck and T. H. Marvin.

For three years I was a member of the Board of Education and became thoroughly convinced that a high school building must soon be built and that this "Falley Seminary" property was by far the best site for the purpose; was the cheapest desirable site that could be secured; and that the city was making a mistake by not getting possession of it while it was available.

For the past seven years, the Board of Education has had an option on the property for $16,000. During these seven years the option has been renewed several times at the same price. The present option expires on June 30 and if the property is not then taken by the city, it will be offered on the open market for $18,000 and if not sold in that way may be divided into building lots.

The property has over one acre and a half of land, is centrally located in a very desirable section of the city, faces the public park, is on high land, and is in a quiet part of the city—all of these add much to its value as a high school site.

At present the whole property is leased by the Board of Education at an annual rental of $1,000. The rear of the property is used by the public school pupils for baseball, basket ball, and football. The part between the baseball ground and the seminary building was used last summer as a public play ground. The building itself now has on the south side the "open air" school and on the north side four school rooms housing abut 130 school pupils and has toilet rooms, furnaces, etc.; installed by the Board of Education.

I do not know what arrangements could be made for the school children even next September if this property is not secured by the city.

If $1,000 were added yearly to the $1,000 now paid for rental the property would be paid for in eight or ten years and no taxpayer would feel the extra tax.

There is no question but that the old building now on the front of this site could be demolished for the material in it and by far the best site that we can ever hope to secure for the city will be left on which to build a modern high school as soon as the city is able to handle this proposition. In the meantime the city school children will be taken care of in the old building as they are at present.

JOSEPH M. CONNERS.

Chamber of Commerce Enlists for the Best Only In City's School System

Three committees of the Chamber of Commerce met yesterday. The City Government committee met at the Citizen's club at noon and several affairs of importance were discussed. Almost all the committee members were present. At 5 o'clock the Committee on Education met and the question of the site for the new high school was discussed along with several other topics of interest pertaining to improvements in the school system.

At 8 o'clock the committee on Agriculture met with a large attendance in the headquarters of the chamber. It was announced at this meeting, somewhat to the surprise of the committee members, that the directors of the chamber would handle the market question instead of the agriculture committee as first planned. No minutes of the meetings could be procured today on account of the severe illness of Secretary Heydecker who is confined to his bed.

OFFICIAL WAR BULLETINS

RUSSIA

Petrograd—near Ossowetz, Poland, there has been an intermitten artillery duel. On the left bank of the Vistula, southwest of Radosczice skirmishes on April 25th ended in our favor.

In the Carpathians on the 25th the enemy, after long artillery preparations, assaulted the heights to the northeast of Oroszepata. The storming parties got as far as the barbed wire entanglements, where they were mowed down by our fire. On the night of April 25th-26th, the enemy delivered fruitless attacks in the region to the northwest and to the east of Uzsok passs.

In the direction of Stry stubborn fighting continues. A complete Austrian battalion surrendered yesterday.

Our aircraft have successfully dropped bombs on German aeroplanes at an aerodrome near the village o Sauniki. During the day we damaged and captured two German and Austrian aeroplanes.

FRANCE

Paris—To the north of Ypres our progress continues, as well as that of the British army. We have taken a number of prisoners and have captured a quantity of material including bomb throwers and machine guns.

On the front of Les Eparges—St. Remy trench of Calonne, the German attacks have been completely repulsed. At one point of the front alone an officer estimates the killed at nearly a thousand. We have taken the offensive and are making progress.

At Hartmanns-Weilerkopf, after having retaken the summit, we advanced for a distance of two hundred meters down the eastern slopes.

AUSTRIA

Vienna—Nowhere over the whole front have events of any special importance been reported. In several sectors there were violent artillery duels.

In the Carpathians the Russians suspended their attacks against our positions after suffering severe losses.

GERMANY

Berlin—In the western theatre: The British attacked in Flanders with very strong forces the new line of our positions north and northeast of Ypres, which runs from three to four kilometers south of the previous line from close to the north of Dechoudt Farm, on the Yser canal, by way of St. Julien, in the direction of Grafenstafel.

"These assaults, which party were attacked in the rear by German artillery southwest of Ypres, completely broke down under our fire with extraordinarily heavy losses.

"The enemy's fire completely demolished the houses in Lizerne which were vacated by us during last night. The bridge head situated on the left bank of the canal, immediately to the east of Lizerne, still is being held by us.

In the engagements hitherto fought at Ypres our troops took fifty machine guns.

We have commenced to bombard the important railway junction and military headquarters at Roeseringhe, about twelve kilometers west of Ypres, with appreciable success.

"In the forest of Argonne a French night attack to the Northeast of Vienne-le-Chateau was repulsed.

In the Meuse hills we also secured further advantages yesterday. Although the French brough up new forces, the attacks made by the enemy against our positions at Combres failed.

TURKEY

Constantinople—Under the protection of warships the enemy attempted to land troops Sunday at four points on the west coast of Gallipoli, namely, at the mouth of Sighinders, on the coast in the district of Aviburn to the west of Kabatepeh, on the coast at Tekeburum and in the enighborhood of Kum Kale.

The troops of the enemy which landed at Tekeburum were forced to retreat at the point of the bayonet and were pushed back to the coast. Part of these forces on Monday night were obliged hastily to return to their ships. The Turkish attacks at all points are progressing successfully.

Simultaneously a fleet approached the Dardanelles in order to force the straits from the sea but it was obliged to retreat before our fire.

The forces of the enemy which landed at Kum Koleh advanced under the protection of warships but despite a heavy bombardment from all sides our troops drove them back to the coast.

The enemy lost 400 men killed and two hundred taken prisoners. Our losses were insignificant.

A party of Moslem soldiers who landed with the French troops at this point of the coast deserted the French and joined our forces.

Before Kum Kaleh we captured a number of English and Austrian soldiers, among them a captain and a lieutenant.

LONDON

London—Yesterday all German attacks northeast of Ypres were repulsed. In the afternoon our troops took the offensive and made progress near St. Julien, and to the west of that place.

The French co-operated on our left, and further to the North they re-took Het Sas.

During yesterday's fighting our ar-

THE AUTO CLUB DINNER

Tonight's dinner under the auspices of the Fulton Automobile Club attains a lot of prominence from the fact that it is the first affair of its kind ever held in this city. The presence of an engineer of considerable reputation, T. M. Ripley, of Watertown, brings to the dinner additional notice—more, perhaps, than would otherwise be occasioned, as Mr. Ripley while located here in the service of the State, made of himself a potent factor in the general welfare of civic life.

From every viewpoint, the Automobile Club is to be congratulated upon bringing out the strength of the organization, as the attendance will be in every way up to expectations, and the weather conditions and general surroundings are conducive to an evening of profitable enjoyment.

The Evening Times feels a large amount of interest in tonight's dinner, from the fact that it is a lambkin organization too, having only 111 numbers to its credit and, in addition, its ability to serve automobile dealers in this vicinity by presenting to probable and possible purchasers of the steed of steel a splendid array of advertising matter.

If a reader of this issue of The Evening Times should receive in the folds of the paper a spider, he is reminded of Mark Twain's information given to a subscriber for his Missouri weekly paper, which was, that a spider found in the paper did not mean good or bad luck. Spiders sometimes look over newspapers to see which merchant is not advertising, so that he can go to that store, spin his web across the door and lead a life of undisturbed peace ever afterward.

The advertising columns of this issue do not indicate that Fulton's merchants and automobile dealers anticipate the arrival of a spider upon a single page of a single paper printed at headquarters, 66 East First st., Fulton, N. Y.

Opinions

Cattle Sales Day

The Watertown chamber of commerce is to be commended in its efforts to arrange a dispersal sale of cattle for this city. The chamber has taken active steps to bring a sale here similar to that which has attracted wide attention in Syracuse during the past year or more. If the plan works out as now seems probable breeders of blooded stock will consign their cattle for sale in Watertown. There will be a general sales day and farmers and others from all parts of the state desiring to purchase stock will come here.

The carrying out of this plan is desirable for many reasons. In the first place we are a great dairying country up here, one of the greatest in the country. Our dairymen should always be ambitious to improve their herds. In this ambition rests the continued development of the dairying industry in this section. Sales days of blooded stock will bring to the farmers' doors the opportunity to make selections without inconvenience. It will mean that hundreds of blooded cattle will be added to the herds here, which would otherwise go elsewhere.

Again the sales days will mean much to the town in bringing crowds of people here. That is always desirable, for it opens up unexpected trade advantages to any community. There is no reason why our farmers should find it necessary to travel a hundred miles or more to attend cattle sales, when the sales can be brought to them.

The chamber of commerce is to be commended in taking up vigorously this sales day plan.—Watertown Times.

Veto the Direct Tax Bill!

All the talk about Governor Whitman's exercising great care in pruning the appropriation bills is beside the mark, so far as any bene to this city is concerned. If he wants to help New York city and reduce the next budget $14,000,000 he must veto the direct tax bill.

The appropriation bills should be pruned. If they at all resemble every other set of appropriation bills sent to the Executive by greedy, log-rolling legislators, they are full of "pork"—of items grabbing state money for purely local purposes in upstate counties and towns—all for the glory of the lawmakers who are thus able to foist local expenditures on to the state treasury. There is no right, no justice in that. Such items should be deleted.

The Governor undoubtedly will find great opportunity for the exercise of vigilance in guarding against salary raises and undue department expenditures provided for in items adroitly slipped into the bills. These attempts to squander the state's money should be defeated by him, obviously, and such vigilance will help New York city to just the extent that it diminishes state expenses generally and tends to reduce taxation in future.

All this, however, will not be one cent's worth of benefit to the metropolis in 1916. For such aid only the death of the direct tax bill will suffice. If it be not vetoed, New Yorkers will have their next tax rate raised 17.5 points by that alone, and they will know where to visit their resentment. —N. Y. Tribune.

On the Rialto

A New Jersey judge fined the New Jersey Central Railroad $200,000 for rebating. He could have imposed a fine of $600,000, but he probably recalled that Standard Oil fine of $29,000,000 and its near-payment and offered the Jersey Central a suitable discount for cash. (No more statistics,—we've used up all the zeroes).

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By Frederic T. Cardoze.

Albany, Arpil 28.—Among the thirty day bills which Governor Whitman has before him, is the measure by Assemblyman MacDonald, chairman of the Assembly ways and means committee, which provides for the submission to the people of the State this fall the proposition of issuing bonds to the amount of $27,000,000 for the improvement of the Oswego and the Champlain canals.

An attempt was made last session to have this bill enacted into law, but it failed to get upon the statute books. The need of the canal improvement was set forth in debate in both houses, yet to no avail. This year the governor will decide whether the bill is a proper one or veto it upon the ground that the burden of taxation is too great this year to give the voters an opportunity of authorizing an additional bond issue of $27,000,000.

If the MacDonald bill is approved b ythe executive and the people in turn ratify itsp fovisions the bonds will bear interest at four and one-half per cent. They will be issued for a term of not more than fifty years from their respective dates of issue and they will be sold for not less than par.

It is planned to sell the bonds in blocks and not at one time, if the MacDonald bill is signed and accepted by the people, so that partial payment may be made as fast as the work of improving the two canals has been done. If the bill and law, created by the signature of Governor Whitman, is received favorably by the people, it will then be decided just how much of the whole issue will be sold at separate sales. The State Comptroller will of course make these arrangements under the direction of the commissioners of the canal fund. The interest on the bonds will be paid semi-monthly in the city of New York.

In order that those who buy the bonds may receive interest upon their money so invested, a direct tax will be imposed of five one hundredths of a mill on each dollar valuation of real and personal property subject to taxation throughout the entire State, for every one million dollars or fraction in par value of the bonds issued, during the fiscal year which the amount of such tax is computed.

The attitude of the people of the State has been in the past, speaking generally, favorable toward referendum proposition dealing with proposed public improvements. Based upon this fact, and providing that the governor signs the bill, the first issue of the bonds is likely to be advertised in the spring of 1916.

Considerable doubt is being expressed relative to the liklihood of the governor approving of the MacDonald bill at this time. Some argue that the Constitutional Convention being on, that canal matters will form a large share of the arguments of the delegates and that a position may be taken by the delegates which might not be in accord with the views of the governor with reference to the bill in question. This talk, however, is but gossip.

George Clinton, the well known advocate of the canal system, who is chairman of the committee on canals of the Constitutional Convention, has as yet made no statement as to what canal subjects his committee is likely to handle or what his own attitude is upon amendments to the law regulating the canals of the State.

ENAMELLING BY ELECTRIC POWER

Overland Company Uses Largest Industrial Electric Plant Anywhere

An improvement of much importance to the automobile industry has been installed at the big Overland factory. The Willys-Overland Company, which ranks as a leader in manufacturing efficiency, recently closed what is probably the largest industrial contract for electric power ever given to a central station.

The contract calls for the electrification of sixteen large enamelling furnaces having a volume of 48,000 cubic feet and a capacity of 140 tons of enamelled product every ten hours. The work put through the oven consists of various sizes and shapes of steel parts. With the 4500 horsepower previously required from the same station, the new furnaces will make the total now used by the Overland Company approximately 10,000 horsepower load. According to electrical engineers, this is fully as great as the total power required for lighting a city larger than Toledo.

One of the ovens which has been in operation for several months has given results far superior to any previously obtained by the Overland Co., which formerly used gas in the place of electricity, as practically all other automobile manufacturers are doing.

The equipment of the ovens makes them almost entirely automatic in operation. When the oven is loaded the closing of its door automatically throws a switch which turns on the current. A pyrometer, which can be adjusted to operate at any desired temperature, rings a bell when the proper degree of heat is reached, thus notifying the attendant, and also automatically turning off the current.

With the elimination of flue gases usually found in enamelling ovens, the work is made cleaner, smoother and a brighter finish is given to the materials. Dirt and spots attendant upon the gases have disappeared and the necessity for ventilation has been reduced to a minimum, reducing air currents and the possibility of picking up dust which may find its way into the ovens and cause a slight flaw in the work.

The volume of work which can be accomplished with the new installation is almost half again as great as was possible with the old equipment. This makes possible a proportionate reduction in the cost of enamelling each unit.

The installation of electrically heated ovens is said not only to increase the manufacturing efficiency of the Overland plant but also to do away with all of the hazards attendant upon the work. The fire danger is entirely eliminated, explosions are done away with and the safety of the attendant is assured. The non-oxidizing heat cannot scald the operator and the heat of the surrounding atmosphere is materially decreased, making the working quarters entirely comfortable. These better conditions are reflected in a higher grade of work on the part of the factory employes.

HEAT PROSTRATION

Thermometers Close to the Hundred Mark in Sun.

New York, April 28.—Street thermometers were flirting with the hundred degree mark in New York today under the rays of a midsummer sun. Some climbed to 97, but the official thermometer of the Weather Bureau was content too stop at 90.9 degrees at 3:45 p.m., setting, however, a new high record for April temperature in this vicinity. The previous maximum April temperature was established on April 18, 1896, at 89.9 degrees.

There were several heat prostrations. Summer clothing, including an occasional straw hat was in evidence.

BIG IMPROVEMENT IN IRON ANT STEEL SEEN

New York, April 28.—Decided improvemetn in the steel and iron industry is seen in the financial statement of the United Steel Corporation for the first quarter of the calendar year, issued today. Taking the report by months it shows that March earnings were fi8,004,136, as against $4,511,058 in February and $2,567,176 in anuary.

Total earnings were $12,457,809, a gain of $1,524,639 over the proceding quarter, the net income showing an increase of $339,315. This left the small balance of $915,058 applicable to palment of the preferred dividend which required an outlay of $6,304,919. To meet this deficit it was necessary to draw on last December's undivided surplus to the extent of $5,389, 861.

Contrary to his usual custom, Chair man Gary refrained from any public discussion of trade conditions, but it was said that the mills of the companw now are operating from *5 to 70 per cent. of capacity. The corporation's foreign business is said to show a marked gain over the last quarter of last year.

SEEKING PARDON FOR LEO FRANK

Condemned Man's Only Hope Is Executive Clemency.

COURT SAYS TRIAL WAS FAIR

Manager of Pencil Factory, Convicted of Murder of Fourteen-year-old Employee, Exhausts All Legal Actions Without Avail, but Still Remains Hopeful—Nation Watching Case.

Atlanta, Ga.—Although the highest court in the land has decreed that he must pay the death penalty for the murder of little Mary Phagan, Leo Frank has not given up his fight. His attorneys are now busy on new plans, and the young man, condemned to the gallows, is still hopeful. The supreme court of the United States in deciding that his trial had been fair, that the jury had not been influenced by public sentiment, apparently blasted his last hope.

There was one ray of light, however. He could appeal to the governor of Georgia for clemency, but there was no further legal action apparent.

All the nation watched this case closely. Friends of Frank held that race prejudice entered into the trial. Frank is a Jew. Hundreds of letters are pouring into the office of the governor of Georgia asking for a pardon or for commutation of the sentence to life imprisonment.

Frank was manager and also a shareholder in a pencil factory at Atlanta.

LEO FRANK.

Mary Phagan, fourteen years of age, was employed in the factory. She called on a holiday to collect her wages and failing to reappear at her home, search was instituted and at 8 o'clock the following morning her body was found in a remote part of the plant, showing evidence of murder and assault.

Suspects were taken in by the police, and then suspicion attached to Frank. He was convicted mainly on the testimony of Jim Conley, a negro, who said he had helped Frank to dispose of the body after the murder. Local sentiment was against the prisoner almost from the start. Remarkable stories of his alleged immorality were told.

The defense tried to fasten the crime on Conley, the negro, who was an employee of the factory. A note which purported to have been written by the murdered girl just before her death was a link in the testimony. It was found torn in scraps near her body and purported to be addressed to her mother, in which she charged the crime on a negro without naming him.

The handwriting bore a slight resemblance to Frank's writing, but Conley after first denying that he wrote the note or that he was in the factory on the day of the murder, finally confessed that he wrote the note, but at the direction of Frank.

Leo M. Frank is a native of Brooklyn, a graduate of the Brooklyn high school, who won a scholarship in Cornell university and is also well educated along technical lines. He has a family in Atlanta and up to the time of the murder had a reputation generally in the community of being a successful business man of good moral reputation.

The courtroom was crowded in anticipation of a decision in the Frank case and many people stood in line outside unable to gain admission. Since the case has been before the supreme court a nation wide agitation has been carried on in favor of the prisoner, and it was evident that his friends were many and influential and that money was not being spared in an effort to influence public sentiment in favor of the prisoner.

STATE STREET WON

Phillips Street School Team Gave Way to Superior Playing Yesterday.

The State Sstreet school baseball team proved its general superiority over the Phillips Street team at the Athletic field yesterday afternoon. The East Side boys led the scoring all the afternoon and finished victors by a 21 to 10 score.

The second inning was the Waterloo of the Phillips Street team, the State Street hitters finding the delivery of Fitten for eleven runs. Draper, the State Street pitcher, was the most consistent hitter. He came up to bat five times, and made five runs, hitting the ball for one three-bagger(two two-baggers and two singles.

The West Side team failed to show its usual brand of inside baseball and a number of errors were chalked up against them.

RAKES COLONEL'S RECORD HARD

Steel Corporation's Absorption of Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. Approved by Him

The Colonel is in fine fettle. William Ivins, chief counsel for William Barnes, was again the inquisitor and Gave Mr. Roosevelt more rope than inthe hands of Mr. Barnum, who read the Platt letters. However, Mr. Ivins relentlessly raked the record of Colonel Roosevelt.

First, a letter was introduced showing that Mr. Roosevelt, when President, had approved Barnes' course in the race track bills, a course which succeeded in defeating them at the regular session.

In his answer to the complaint Mr. Roosevelt sets forth specifically that Barnes' action on the race track bills was one thing of which he emphatically did not approve.

Next, Mr. Ivins reminded the witness that H. C. Frick and George W. Perkins, of the United States Steel Corporation, had contributed to his presidential campaign in 1904.

Ivins secured the admission that Mr. Roosevelt, while president, had nevee instructed his attorney-general to prosecute that corporation. After that the cross-examiner went into the matter of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company, whose purchase by the steel corporation was authorized by President Roosevelt. Again the witness admitted that no action under the Sherman law had been set on foot as the result of this alleged violation of that statute.

Probeing for a like stote of affairs regarding the New York, New Haven and Hartford, Ivins fell foul of a sharp answer.

"I did," the Colonel exploded, when the lawyer asked him if he had ordered any investigation into the affairs of that railroad.

How far Ivins proposes to go into the Colonel's relations with corporations he did not reveal.

Although the Colonel was on the stand for the five and a half hours of the trial, he talked but little. He had recovered from his irritation at Barnum, the Syracuse lawyer, who read the Platt-Roosevelt correspondence and pestered him about it this morning, as he had done yesterday. And Barnum, without the power to arouse indignation, became far less ecective than formerly.

In the afternoon he listened with an air of good natured tolerance to a long correspondence between himself and Barnes, matters now stale, then when Mr. Ivins sought to insinuate that the letters implied unqualified approval of everything Barnes had done. Once when, as a memory tester, he wasasked if he remembered when he was elected president of the United States, he replied, wearily: "I do not."

He cheered up noticeably when Mr. Ivins read a number of his speeches and interviews sailing into Barnes at the time of the Chicago convention. The old fighting spirit that carried him within an inch and a half of victory at that modern Armaggedom seemed to come back to him.

Addresses in which he bracketed Barnes with Penrose, Guggenheim and Lorimer he verified eagerly.

One sentence from these which brought the Roosevelt teeth in view was:

"Among all the bosses of the United States; among all the men representing privilege in politics, there is none more fit to do the boss's work than William Barnes."

Mr. Roosevelt's counsel, while severely jolted by the production of the Platt-Roosevelt correpsondence, are building high hopes on the re-direct examination and the testimony of these witnesses.

"They have not heard anything, not a single thing," said one of the Roosevelt people tonight. "We can destroy all that evidence on the re-direct examination—biff! Just like that." And bringing his hand down on the arm of his chair he flattened an unsuspecting fly to the thinness of a wafer.

CICERO FARMER'S CATTLE KILLED; WERE INFECTED

A government inspector killed 28 cattle belonging to Harry Murray, a farmer of Cicero, yesterday afternoon. It was the fortieth case of hoof and mouth disease reported in the counties of Onondaga and Oswego. An examination made Monday revealed the presence of the dread disease in the herd and in order to avoid further infection the inspector decided to kill the animals immediately.

Since the outbreak of the plague in this county it is estimated that $100,000 worth of cattle have been destroyed in order that the majority might be saved from infection. The Federal Government reimburses the owners for one-half of the value of the cattle and the state assumes the other half of the amount. Thus far no action by the state has been taken in this vicinity, although the government has announced that it is ready to receive the claims.

Prompt action by inspectors thruout the county has done much to prevent the spread of the disease and it is thought that this case is almost the last. The agents announced yesterday, that, in their opinion the disease was almost stamped out and no furthermeasures, except the ordinary preventatives, are considered necessary.

FACTS ABOUT ALLEN MOTORS

Its Designers Claim That It Is In a Class By Itself for Power

The motor is the heart of an automobile.

No matter how beautiful a car may be, no matter how strongly it is built, no matter how expensive its equipment, or how luxurious its fittings, it cannot be a good car if it has an inferior motor.

An automobile is, in a sense, like a man. He may be big, handsome and dignified in appearance, but if his heart is weak he is severely handicapped. He cannot stand the strain that is necessary to high achievement.

The Allen car is not handicapped by a weak heart. There are no leaky valves under the Allen hood.

One of the strong features of every car we make is the Allen Motor. A better motor than the Allen has never been put into an automobile.

It has durability, simplicity of construction, great power and every point of excellence that you will find in motors that go into the most expensive cars on the market.

Speaking of the organization of the Allen Motor Company, E. W. Allen, president of the Allen Motor Co., says:

"We have gone into the automobile business, not for the purpose of driving others out of it, but to provide for the man of average means, the car he wants at the price he is able to pay. Such parts as we can make better and more economically in our own shops than they can be produced elsewhere are manufactured by ourselves. Those parts that can be made as well or better elsewhere and more cheaply than we can make them, we buy.

"Our aim always is to make Allen cars as good as it is possible to make automobiles at the prices we ask for them.

"We make no pretenses that are not warranted by conditions. We recognize and admit the fact that there are various parts which other manufacturers can produce more economically and perhaps better than we could make them. Such parts are made in immense quantities where they are special facilities and special machinery for their production.

"We buy such parts, subject them to the moste ritical tests and inspection before incorporating them in our cars. This plan is pursued for the purpose of securing economy in construction wherever it does not interfere with quality of efficiency.

"One of the things of which we are proudest is the Allen motor. This we make in our own shops. We do not believe there is a better motor in the world than the Allen."

WHITMAN QUITE SATISFIED

Doesn't Think Last Legislature Was Unduly Extravagant.

New York, April 28.—Governor Whitman, here on a short visit, was asked today, through Major Moore, his military secretary, if he cared to comment upon the expenditures of the Legisloture which had just adjourned.

He replied: "I do not believe the Legislature has been unduly extravagant. I believe Senator Sage and his conferec have done all the pruning possible. However, the bills for appropriation are now officially before me and I am going to study them closely."

As to the proposed direct tax, Governor Whitman had this to say: "The state owes money. It must be paid. Why put off the evil day?"

Y., April 27.—Volunteer fire ghters had under control today a fire which started in the village late yesterday, burned five buildings, and spread to the forest on Carpenter's Mountain, or a time many cottages in the Methodist Camp meeting ground were threatened, but all escaped damage. The buildings destroyed weer the bottling works, ice house and barn of the Riverside Distributing Company, and the residence of William J., and Jeremish McCarty, principal owners of the corporation. The loss estimated at $50,000 is covered by insurance. More than fifty acres of standing timber and large quantities of cord wood on the mountain were burned.

The Ford—a great utility because it serves all the people. The popular choice, because it gives better service at a lower cost. Popular again, because it is simple and easily understood by everybody. And with all the refinements, it is still the same dependable Ford, and sells for $60 less than last year—besides the plan of sharing profits with the buyers.

Buyers will share in profits if we sell at retail 300,000 new Ford cars between August 1914 and August 1915.

Touring Car $490; Runabout $440; Town Car $690; Couelet $750; Sedan $975; f. o. b. Detroit with all equipment.

To The Auto Buyer:

At present we are unable to supply the demand for Ford cars. The company will give a rebate to every Ford purchaser if 300,000 cars are sold before August 1. In order to share this offer, you must have your order in before that time. You cannot get a Ford in a day and every carload that arrives here is sold before the doors are opened. Moral—order your car now.

Our Ford sales for APRIL follow:

Jacob T. Dreher, William H. Osborne, Lyle Boyce, Elmer E. Taylor, A. M. Druse, William Middleton, J. V. Clute, Fred Blake, Roy Lyboldt (2), Conrad Eckerd, Elmer White, Ernest Arnold, Dan Stewart, Lyman Land; B. H. Pingree, M. F. Brackett, Clinton Nichols, F. W. Austin.

Ford economy is not alone in low price, but in the low cost to operate and maintain. For an average cost of two cents a mile, they serve and save; add luxury to pleasure and bring profit to business. Over 700,000 owners have found the Ford dependable, economical and easy to operate. And in any contingency, there's a Ford agent close at hand—with a complete stock of parts. That's "Ford After-Service for Ford Owners."

REO

The New REO, The Fifth
The Incomparable Four

$1,050
F. O. B. LANSING, Mich.

Have You Ordered That REO Of Yours?

WE DON'T LIKE to keep dinning at you. Seems inconsistent too when all the world knows that we don't need to worry about selling all the REOS the factory can give us.

IN FACT THE DEMAND is, according to advices from Lansing, where the REOS are made, more than four times the possible supply.

HERE'S A 25-ACRE PLANT running full force and over-time trying to meet the demand for automobiles—and orders every day more than four times the possible output.

OF COURSE WE CAN'T SAY that all automobiles enjoy such demand. REO is unique among motor cars for many reasons. REO cars have always been good cars—honest cars—dependable cars—and cars of such low upkeep cost that every REO owner insists on his friends buying REOS in preference to any others.

THERE NEVER HAS BEEN a time since the first REO was made that the big REO plants could supply enough cars for all who wanted REOS.

THERE IS SOME SIGNIFICANCE ATTACHED to the fact that there has been over 50 per cent more REO cars sold so far this year in Oswego County than any other strictly high grade automobile. Must be some unusual vaule in the REO to merit such a popular demand.

SO—THIS IS FAIR WARNING— orders that come at once can be filled, and with fairly early deliveries, while those who delay ordering will surely be disappointed.

THERE ARE TWO REOS this season—and one of them is the most popular automobile in America. We can't for the life of us tell which at this juncture.

SUFFICE IT TO SAY the demand for the New REO SIX is more than four times as great as the factory capacity—and for REO the FIFTH it is also hopelessly in excess of our ability to produce.

AND NO WONDER: The new (1915) REO the FIFTH, "the Incomparable Four" at $1,050; and the New REO SIX, "the Six of Sixty Superiorities" at $1,385, represent, each in its power and price class—the greatest automobile value the world has ever seen.

ORDER YOURS NOW—that's the only way to be sure.

REO BUSINESS IS BOOMING

Reo Under Jordan's Management Pushes Its Way Into Co.'s Nooks and Corners

General Sales Manager P. C. Reanschaw of the Reo Motor Car Company of Lansing, Mich., writes W. E. Jordan, who is manager for the Oswego County Auto Company, that even with an increased output of 50 per cent. over that of last year, it is almost impossible for the factory to keep up with the demand. Orders for Reo cars are far in excess of the present output of the factory, which from now on will be forced to work more than full time to fill orders in hand. The sales manager adds in his letter that persons who want Reo cars this year and who live in territory where the dealers are protected by contracts for a certain number of cars to be delivered each month are extremely fortunate.

The Reo car has come to be recognized as the car of service to the man who cannot afford the luxury of an automobile. This is especially true since the auto is no longer looked upon as a means of enjoyment, but as an article of diversified uses. Indeed, the auto of today is in fact an important part of a man's business equipment.

To the man who has tried to use a car for pleasure or for enjoyment, the result is invariably the same—he is at once a fiend upon the subject. He realizes the increased efficiency obtained by running the car to and from business; from business to the scene where he would make sales or do collecting; adding to all this the pleasure given his family by having around the premises a machine that will afford pleasure and healthful recreation to all.

One of the best evidences of the popularity of the Reo car in Oswego county lies in the fact that Manager Jordan of the Oswego County Auto Company has made more sales this year than ever before. Here are a few of the recnt sales made by the county company:

Clinton D. Vickery, W. C. Warittg, and Gilbert Dreer, of Phoenix; Mrs. D. Cox, milliner, of Oswego; Henry Pullen, merchant; Dr. F. D. Sinclair, also A. Callison, president of the Peoples Fuel and Oil Co., of Oswego; A. C. Halleran and Frand Crandall, farmer, of Hannibal; T. H. Marvin, coal dealer, Fulton; Albert Quinn, real estate; Wm. Howard, yardmaster for the O. W. R. R., Fulton; E. H. Putnam, druggist, Chas. Brown, builder, and Dr. W. W. Kennedy of Fulton; M. App's son, merchant of Cleveland; Chas. Hollock, flour and feed dealer, of Lycoming; Jacob Webb, of Pulaski, and Phillip Ackley of Parish.

FORD CO. IS TO PAY REBATES

Will Refund $50 to Owners; Business Reaches Total of 300,000 Cars

The long anticipated announcement in regard to the profit sharing plan tentatively suggested by the Ford Motor Car company several months ago has been made.

Ford owners are to have the advantage of the rebate offered by Henry Ford providing the business of the compony reached a ertain amount and this rebate is to be paid August 1st.

Mr. Ford in his announcement made within the last few days said: "Barring the totally unexpected, the promised rebate will be paid. The company announced last year that if the total soles reached 300,000 cars between August 1st, 1914, and August 1st, 1915, each purchaser during that period would receive a refund of between $40 and $60."

George B. Palmer, local distributor, for Ford Cars, have received word that the total of 300,000 cars is to be reached in eleven months, a full month ahead of the time limit named. The factory is now from 50,000 to 75,000 cars behind orders in spite of the fact that 1,800 are being turned out daily.

George B. Palmer has been authorized to announce that the rebate will be $50 and will be paid August 1st to all purchasers of cars since August 1st, 1914.

BATTLE ISLAND CLAIM COMES UP MAY 6

The Attorney-General will decide durin gthe next week whether or not the case of the Battle Island Pulp and Paper company against the state will come up in the May term of the Court of Claims in Syracuse. W. P. Gannon of Syracuse, attorney for the company announced yesterday that he was ready for the company's case and he also stated that the Attorney-General had announced last week that the case would be heard in this sitting of the court. Late yesterday it was learned that the Attorney-General had not decided and Judge Rodenbeck set May 6 as a tentative date, prior to the announcement of the Attorney-General.

The Battle Island company claims damages amounting to $1,827,500 from the state resulting from the construction of the Barge Canal. It was found necessary to remove the dam at Battle Island in the construction of the canal and the company thereby lost its water power and other rights. The plant has been without proper facilities since that time, and since it went isto bankruptcy, the trustees have taken the claim. Bulger, Costello and Bonney are the attorneys for the paper company.

Frederick A. Gage, also of this city has a claim intotaling $303,034.35, for damages resulting from the construction of the canal. His water power rights were also damaged. The Pratt estate here claims large damages as a result of damage to real property from the construction of the canal.

The Empire United Railways claim 607,500 for damages by the canal on property near Clyde and also near Oswego. The state appropriated the power plant of the company at Clyde in the construction of the canal.

The Elgin Marbles.

The adventures of the Elgin marbles, now in the British museum, began in 1803, when they were wrecked at Cerigo on their way from Greece to England. It took the divers three years and a vast sum of money to fish up the Parthenon relics. It is believed that Lord Elgin spent over £74,000 in procuring these priceless fragments left by Turkish vandals, who would probably have made an end of even these had the earl not rescued them in time. The house of commons voted £96,000 for their purchase, so that the enterprising peer lost heavily in cash and suffered from a public agitation against his alleged "vandalism, rapacity and dishonesty," as well as from Byron's "Curse of Minerva."—London Chronicle.

Grip of the Bulldog.

It is a commonly accepted belief that nothing short of being pried loose will induce a bulldog to give up his grip on another dog or on an intruder, but this is a mistake. A little household ammonia poured on him as near his nose as circumstances will allow will make him let go immediately. The fumes of ammonia are so overpowering that a dog cannot possibly maintain his grip and his breath a. the same time.

MAXWELL CAR PERFORMS WELL

Oldfield Drives Machine 301 Miles Without a Single Stop

A Maxwell race car, driven by Carlson, won 9th honors in the 500-mile race at Indianapolis, May 30, 1914. The Maxwell racer was the only representative of a low-priced line to compete in this gruelling race, and it defeated 18 foreign and American cars.

The Maxwell racer with Hughes driving, won the Potlatch 200-mile race at Tacoma, Wash., on uly 3, 1914, time 2:41:32 2-5, or an average speed of 74.28 miles per hour.

This same Maxwell racer with Barney Oldfield at the wheel, won second place in the 300-mile Corona, Cal., road race, Thanksgiving day, Nov. 26, and startled the world by establishing a new non-stop record. Barney drove his Maxwell the entire 301 miles without a stop for anything —either tires, fuel or water, THINK OF IT! 301 miles without a stop, at an average speed of 86 3-10 miles per hour. A triumph for light weight combined with endurance, surely!

Te Maxwell racing team also participated in many smaller racing events—races of from 3 to 50 miles—during te summer of 1914 and won 58 first, 21 second and a few third places. In addition to the splendid showing of the Maxwell racing team, Maxwell stock cars have broken all kinds of mountain and hill climbing events; on some occasions with professional drivers at the wheel, others in which te cars were driven by private owners.

Over the five and three-quarter mile Point Loma Course (San Diego, Cal.) Billy Carlson drove his Maxwell race car 305 miles without a single stop. The average speed of the Maxwell was 65 miles an hour. Remarkable! when you know the Point Loma Course is considered the worst in America. It has an altitude of from sea level to two thousand feet above, and necessitates the shifting of gears seven times and use of the brakes four times to every lap. Carlson and his Maxwell won second place with a time just one minute short of first place and defeated seventeen of the world's fastest cars and most famous drivers.

That any car could stand such terrific speed for m re than 300 miles without a stop for anything proves conclusively the wonderful endurance of that car. That the Maxwell Company built two racing cars that stood this gruelling test not once, but twice, proves that Maxwell design and mechanical features are as nearly perfect as human skill and automatic machinery can make them.

For sprains, bruises and all open wounds, Hanford's Balsam will give quick relief. These may happen any day and the prudent man will always keep a bottle on hand.

HER ABSENT BOY.

When a Mother's Lot Is One of Wistful, Weary Waiting.

It's mighty hard to be a mother of sons in Homeburg. I worked in the postoffice for a year once—handed out mail—and I got to know just exactly what most of the mothers in town wanted. I could please them with a new magazine and mystify them with a circular or a business letter.

But if I wanted to light them up until they took the shadows out of the corners as they went out I would give them a letter from a son way off somewhere making good. The best of them didn't write any too often. Once a week is pretty regular, I suppose, from the other end, but you should see the mother begin to come in hungry again the second day after her letter came.

And when a boy came home successful and prosperous and his proud mother towed him down Main street it used to go to my heart to see the wistful looks of the woman friends.

There is hardly a family in Homeburg of the right age which hasn't a grownup son off at war somewhere—fighting failure. It's grand when they win, but I hate to think of some boys who haven't come back.—George Fitch in American Magazine.

Just Like Eve's Apple.

A fruit supposed to bear the mark of Eve's teeth is one of the many botanical curiosities of Ceylon. The tree on which it grows is known by the significant name of "the forbidden fruit," or "Eve's apple tree." The blossom has a very pleasant scent, but the really remarkable feature of the tree, the one to which it owes its name, is the fruit. It is beautiful and hangs from the tree in a peculiar manner. Orange on the outside and deep crimson within, each fruit has the appearance of having had a piece bitten out of it. This fact, together with its poisonous quality, led the Mohammedans to represent it as the forbidden fruit of the garden of Eden and to warn men against its noxious properties. The mark upon the fruit is attributed to Eve.

Scientist Gets Seeds of Trees That Grow 400 Feet High.

Seeds which are expected to grow trees more than 400 feet high have been received from Australia by Professor Henry G. Walters at the Plant Research and Botanical institute, Langhorne, Pa. The trees which Professor Walters will endeavor to grow are a part of the glory of Australia, but so fas as he knows, none has ever been grown in America.

"From the cells of these huge trees, eighty-one feet in circumference, it is possible to distil a liquid hydrocarbon similar to that distilled by Edison from coal gas," Professor Walters says.

Redding (Conn.) Citizens Take to Attics When Horse Is Eaten.

Redding, Conn., was closed up by a real, live, honest-to-goodness bear. The village board of strategy planned to attack as soon as it had a sufficient supply of ammunition and meanwhile used the telephone in arranging tactics.

Citizens were laughed at when they declared they had seen a bear. Everybody said it was all bunk that there could be a bear within fifty miles of New York city, but when one of Farmer James Green's horses was found half eaten everybody took to their bear proof cellars and attics.

The Maxwell Name and Fame

You can probably recall—for automobile manufacturing is only a little over 10 years old—the names of the first cars built. You will also remember "MAXWELL" as the name of one of the leading pioneer cars. You may have recollections of other names of cars that existed but which failed to come up to the early day standards and requirements.

Maxwell cars, from the inception of the automobile industry down to the present moment, have created an enviable reputation for themselves on every point that has to do with motor car values and qualities.

Each year's output of Maxwell cars has added to their fame, so that today it is conceded that never before was it possible to buy so much real automobile for so small a price.

Traffic Experts to Talk To-night

Tonight at 8 o'clock the Division of Industries of the Chamber of Commerce will hold a public meeting in City Hall to hear Dr. J. S. Campbell and Thomas G. Smiley representing the Northern N. Y. Traffic Association.

Dr. Campbell desires to interest paper manufactures and manufacturers of other commodities in his association. The service his association intends to give is principally in connection with a traffic bureau in charge of a traffic manager who, will advise shippers as to rates, etc., of the Interstate Commerce Commission Law.

The Industries Division thinking his talk would be of interest to others than the members of the Chamber have made the meeting open and public. Be on hand early—it will be worth your while.

STRENUOUS DAY FOR ROOSEVELT AS A WITNESS

The seventh day in the Barnes-Roosevelt case fairly crackled with electricity. The cross examination ended early in the day. Most of the time Mr. Roosevelt was in the hands of his own counsel, Mr. Bowers.

He resumed his speeches to the jury. The violence of his manner matched that of the storm which raged without. The lightning glinted on his glasses and at times the thunder drowned his voice. But although wholly on the defensive, he outflashed the lightning and outroared the thunder in his effort to show that the blows struck by him out of the very grave of the Big Boss had not hurt.

On re-direct examination which he practically conducted himself, Mr. Roosevelt declared:

First, that he consulted Platt on allmatters because without Platt he could do no "affirmative right" and was not content with "negative good."

Second, that he sent Platt a proof of his message as Governor because he wanted to let Platt know clearly where he stood, to get the benefit of any Platt advice and to learn of any Platt objections so that they might be met.

Third, that he took his nomination for Governor from the hands of the boss without being pledged in any way either to Platt or the organization.

Fourth, that though Platt insisted on nominating him for vice-president, it was not Platt but the unanimous voice of the delegates to the Philadelphia convention which forced him to accept an office he considered of less value than a professorship of history.

Fifth, that he appointed no man on Platt's suggestion unless he considered that man the best possible man for the place. Also that all his meetings with Platt were on the distinct understanding that full publicity should be given them.

Late in the morning occurred a row between opposing counsel over the campaign contribution of yesterday that for a little while threatened to end in violence.

When the cross-examination had ended the Colonel made it plain that he thought he had been deceived by Barnes's counsel about the campaign list of 104 whose accuracy he had attested and whose items he had verified.

Bowers for the witness accused Ivins, for Barnes of "ringing in" the report of the Clapp Committee on Campaign Expenses for that of the actual Cortelyou report. The Clapp committee report was prepared by Elmer Dover, secretary of the National Committee, and Dove has said that it was not wholly accurate.

"If your honor please," said Ivins leaping to his feet, "my good faith has been directly put in question by my dear and devoted friend, Mr. Bowers."

"Well, sir, there are some matters beyond friendship," retorted Bowers while the Colonel began writhing with a well night uncontrollable desire to get into the row.

When Barnum, who had heckled the Colonel Monday, sat directly in front of him and began industriously sneering at him. Mr. Roosevelt leaned forward out of his chair, his jaws working as if forming scathing denunciations and shook his fist in the Syracuse lawyer's face. Barnum reddened a trifle but continued to sneer.

Convoyed, rather than towed by his own lawyer, the Colonel got under full sail in the afternoon. Given plenty of sea room his spirits came back. Once when telling how he had resisted Platt's efforts to manage the New York charter commission he talked for five minutes in an unbroken stretch, delivering perhaps two columns of words in that space of time.

Again when telling the jury what he had said about his refusal to appoint Lou Payne he looked at one of the members earnestly and asked, "Did I not?"

The several jurors nodded their heads in emphatic confirmattion that froze when the courts frowned and admonished the witness against conversation with the men who are sitting in judgment on him.

NEW CHAMBER PLANS JITNEY LAUNCH ON CANAL AND RIVER

The committee on Membership and Entertainment met at the Chamber of Commerce rooms yesterday afternoon at 5 o'clock and the meeting was very well attended. On account of the illness of Secretary Heydecker the program could not be obtained but an hour was spent in discussion of several plans which have been proposed.

It was decided to hold noonday lunches at regular intervals this spring at the Citizens' club and the first of the series will be held at the club May 12. The new club steward will have charge, and as

The repetition of the Chautuaqua circuit here this year was prohopes to make the luncheon a permanent feature.

The jitney launch plying between this city and Minetto was discussed and it was planned to carry freight on the boat during the day and to run excursion trips at night down the river. A nominal fare will be charged for the night trip and if the scheme pays a larger boat will be put in commission with music as a feature. It is planned to have the merchants of the city issue tickets as trade coupons which will be accepted on the launch as fare.

The membership committee is planning a campaign among the farmers of this section and the new maket plan will be offered as an inducement to the farmers to join the chamber. Rates of membership for the farmers will be decided upon later.

The repitition of the Chatauqua circuit here this year was proposed. Last year the Redpath circuit presented a very interesting program here, including 18 lectures, entertainers, vocalists and concerts. The summer band concerts were also discussed.

The West side committee for the purpose of taking steps necessary to petition the Board of Education to pass resolution in regard to the Falley Seminary property, is now completed and is as follows:

FRENCH SHIPS CRUISE FOR GAMBETTA SURVIVORS

Paris, Thursday.—The submarine which attacked the Leon Bambella, the French armored cruiser, which was lost Monday night, along with the major portion of her crew, came from Cattoro, on the eastern coast of the Adriatic, an Austrian port about three hundred miles distant from Santa Maria Leuca Point. This distance could have been traveled by the submarine in about twenty hours. IIt was learned at Brindisi that the U-5 was sighted by fishing boats on Monday afternoon.

It appears that the U-5 took up a position about half way between Santa Maria Leuca and the Greek island of Othoni. Here the craft waited for its prey and when the opportunity offered discharged its torpedo against the Leon Bambetta.

Ships which went out to succor the eLon Gambetta are still cruising in the vicinity where she was struck, looking for possible survivors. Those of her crew who have been brought ashore are receiving medical care, and supplies for the survivors are being sent to Taranto.

It is believed the Leon Gambetta had on board a crew numbering 714 men. A majority of the men were asleep at the time the cruiser was struck. Those who have been saved are virtually without clothing. Som were wounded and others were almost unconscious, while all suffered from exposure.

The Leon Gambetta parted company with the French cruiser Jules Ferry on Monday night to cross the Strait of Otranto, with a view to co-operating with other French ships in an attempt to block the Austrian fleet if it should seek to leave the Adriatic.

The Austrian submarine U-5 is a vessel of 273 tons displacement and of a capacity of 500-horse power. Her speed is 11 knots on the surface and 10 knots submerged. Her maximum cruising radius on the surface is 1,000 knots. Her normal complement is sixteen men.

To the Citizens and Taxpayers of Fulton

As the sub-committee of the Education Committee of the Chamber of Commerce it has fallen to us to undertake the somewhat unpleasant duty of securing a petition of our taxpayers to the end that we, as citizens, may again vote on the "Falley Seminary" for a high school site. The arguments pro and con on this matter have been presented so thoroughly in the past few years that it is entirely superfluous for us at this time to go into the matter. We believe that now an imperative public duty is to be done and we are trying to do it because we do not know any better way.

Many think that in the past much political prejudice was in evidence and so for three times this question has been voted down and those who have opposed it have presented no solution of the question which has so persistently confronted us. As we look ahead now we think that here is the way out. Mr. Conners in his letter yesterday has once again brought to our attention the advantages of favorable action and we earnestly appeal to you, fellow citizens and taxpayers, to help the canvassers with the petition in every way possible.

We are giving much valuable time to this matter because we believe it is for the best interests of our people and, if it carries, it will go a long way toward making Fulton a far better place to live in. We ask you this question candidly and fairly. If our people shall again vote the matter down, then in the near future what?

Respectfully yours,

GEO. B. DEUEL,
Chairman, Sub-committee.

JANE ADDAMS HEADS PEACE BODY AT HAGUE

The Hague, via London, Thursday.—"The declaration of war was solely man's affair. Let the bringing about of peace be woman's work." This was the theme of the International Congress of Women today.

After active routine work under the unanimously chosen chairwoman, Miss Jane Addams, who gracefully thanked the delegates for the honor they had conferred upon her, many theoretical resolutions were adopted at the forenoon meeting. The American delegates, including Miss Grace Abbott, of Chicago; Miss Emily Balch, of Wellesley College; Mrs. S. P. Breckenridge, of Chicago, and Miss Annie E. Malloy, of Boston, took a notable part in the debates.

The congress listened in the evening to addresses by leading representatives from several countries. Miss Florence Holbrook, of Chicago, spoke before a crowded hall on woman's task of educating children by inculcating ideals of peace and admiration for constructive ability and for the beautiful arts in place of adoration of historic war heroes.

Mrs. Rosika Schwimmer president of the Hungarian Women's Suffrage Association, in an eloquent speech portrayed women, and not men, as the protectors of the home. During wars, she said, the men were sent away and nobody except their decorated superior officers were permitted to know their whereabouts. Mrs. Schimmer appealed to the women to "thunder forth a demand" for stopping the war "in such a voice as will drown the cannon's roar."

COADJUTOR WANTED BY EPISCOPAL BISHOP

Utica, Wednesday.—The election of a coadjutor bishop to assist the Rt. Rev. Charles Tyler Olmstead, bishop of central New York, will be one of the matters considered at the forty-seventh annual convention of the diocese, which will be held in Grace church, Utica, May 25 and 26. Bishop Olmstead has announced that he would ask for a coadjutor.

This will make the diocesan convention one of the most interesting ever held. At present no particular candidates are mentioned, and Bishop Olmstead says that he does not care to discuss them. In some quarters it is predicted that Syracuse and the parishes in the western end of the diocese generally will make a strenuous effort to secure the election of a priest who will be consecrated as coadjutor-bishop from that section.

Bishop Olmstead, who was 73 years old yesterday, was consecrated bishop as coadjutor to Bishop Frederick Dan Huntington, October 2, 1902. Bishop Huntington died in July, 1904, and since that time Bishop Olmstead hoe alone borne the responsibilities connected with the important office. The diocese is a large and growing one, and the bishop feels the need of a codajutor in the work. Last year's convention journal showed that the diocese has 14,672 families in its parishes, 24,357 communicants, and 108 priests canonically resident. The number of adherents is well over 50,000. There are 148 churches in the diocese ,five charitable institutions, and three educational institutions. The diocese includes allgte portions of the following counties: Broome, Cayuga, Chemung, Cortland, Chenango, Lewis, Jefferson, Madison, Onondaga, Oneida, Oswego, Seneco, Tioga and Tompkins.

Another matter of importance to be reported at the coming convention is that of clergymens' pensions. At the last convention the matter was referred to a committee, of which the Rev. Octavius Applegate, D.D., rector of Grace church, Utica, is a member.

PAY WAR TAX IF YOU VISIT CANADA

Americans who go to Canada this summer, for no matter how brief a stay, will be compelled, despite their neutrality, to pay a share of the cost of keeping England's army in the field.

There are no restrictions on Canadian travel and tourists are not required to take out passports to enter Canada, but all will have to pay a tax when they enter. This tax is purely for the purpose of supporting the British army.

The tax is levied by immigration officials and is based on the cost of the transportation ticket on which the taxed person enters the Dominion. On tickets that cost $5 and less the tax will be five cents, on tickets that cost $10, ten cents, and so on, in increasing decimal ratio.

Transportation officials are inclined todoubt whether the tax is strictly in accord with international treaties, and hint that they may test its validity.

HIGH SCHOOL SITE

The Education Committee of the Chamber of Commerce is to be commended for its initiative in regard to framing sentiment for a suitable high school site.

The old Falley site is ideal in location, and the price, when the present arrangements is taken into consideration, is indeed a fair one. Under the present arrangement the rooms leased in the seminary for school purposes is costing the city $1,000 annually. Should the seminary go to the parties in New York who are at present negotiating for its purchase the Board of Education would next year be forced to find other quarters for the grades now housed within the seminary. It is a question if suitable temporary quarters could be found, and even so it is doubted if the rental would be less than the $1,000 the city now pays for its present overflow quarters.

If the expression be true that the seminary could be used for a number of years as it stands at present the $1,000 annual rental could according to an offer made by the seminary heirs be applied to the purchase. Sixteen years' rental plus the interest would give Fulton a beautiful high school site.

Surely the opportunity is one that does not come amiss.

The petition to be brought before the Board of Education desiring it to pass a resolution asking the common council to call a special election to again vote on securing the Falley Seminary property, should be signed by every taxpayer who has an eye into the future regarding the economy in handling the high school proposition.

A GOOD BILL TO VETO

The opponents of vaccination have used their powers of persuasion so effectually at Albany as to secure the Senate's approval of a measure exempting the school-children of all cities of the third and fourth classes from this method of protection against small-pox.

If the Tallett-Jones bill is passed into law vaccination will no longer be compulsory, in the limited sense in which it is compulsory today, in any town with a population below 50,000. This means in effect, as a member of the legislative committee of the Kings County Medical Society has pointed out, that in a very few years a great part of the population of this state will be unprotected. It means, however, that the larger cities will be imperiled by the proximity of towns which may at any moment prove to be dangerous foci, as New Rochelle, for instance, in relation to New York, or Niagara Falls to Buffalo.

The case of Niagara Falls, which two years ago suffered the greatest outbreak of smallpox that this state has known in a long time, shows plainly enough the danger of allowing an unprotected population to grow up in small towns. Had not the condition been dealt with in the most vigorous manner by the State Department of Health many other cities would undoubtedly have suffered, and in all probability further dallying would have forced the sanitary authorities ultimately to cut off all communications with Niagara Falls. As it was, the consequences were sufficiently serious to serve as a warning against further laxity.

SUMMER COURSES IN PUBLIC PROBLEMS

One of the most encouraging aspects of present day social conditions in the United States is the rapid growth of a tendency on the part of individuals to familiarize themselves with the true facts of public problems through scientific study, coupled with a growing faith in the efficacy of public instruction in such matters as a sound basis for good citizenship. Each year the teaching of history, civics and similar subjects is receiving greater attention in the public schools and during the last two decades many of the large universities and colleges have established departments devoted solely to the study of political and economic problems.

In response to the popular demand for such instruction, Dr. James E. Lough, director of the summer school in New York university, has decided to establish a new department in that school this summer, which will be devoted entirely to courses in history, government and the social sciences, with special references to present day problems in these fields. The new department will be under the direction of Dr. Stuart Cameron McLeod of the Department of Public Affairs in the School of Commerce, and in a special bulletin issued this week some thirty-five courses in history, government, economics, finance ond sociology are announced for this year.

The purpose of the experiment is to afford an opportunity to busy men and women to secure practical knowledge of current social and political problems through an hour or more of study each day during July and August, and at the same time to offer teachers and others engaged in instruction along these lines an opportunity to improve their equipment for such work.

The movement is significant, not only from an educational point of view, but as an indication of the increasing popular demand for scientific information on public questions.

Further information and copies of this bulletin may be secured from Dr. Stuart Cameron McLeod, New York University, Washington Square, New York, City.

Opinions

His Own Thirty Days

Having failed to stampede the Republicans on the direct tax issue the Democrats and especially the New York city so-called reform Democrats now turn their efforts upon Governor Whitman begging him to cut out appropriations and reduce the levy. There is no occasion for anxiety in this regard. Governor Whitman will cut from the money bills every dollar not justified. He needs no encouragement along this line. But he will not cut out appropriations to pay the debts we owe, he will not cut items to simulate economy while the burden goes over to another year. He will approve expenditures for needed construction of state institutions, but he will not stand for money for unnecessary improvements nor for new enterprises or experiments at this time. The budget has been made by the legislature. The governor is not committed to one item. It was legislative prerogative to make the budget. He did not usurp that prerogative. It is executive duty to scan, cut, prune and approve. He will conscientiously perform that duty. If he should veto items sufficient to make an important change in the tax rate the economy would justify the return of the legislature. It is assumed that having insisted that its prerogative should be fully recognized, the legislature will not seek to usurp the executive rights, that it will ot interfere or seek to influence the governor in his review of the money bills and other legislation in his hands. Giving no heed to Democratic woils and paying no attention to legislators' plaints, the governor will proceed as he promised in the campaign, to compel economy and to see that the laws are faithfully executed.—Watertown Standard.

Work Well Done

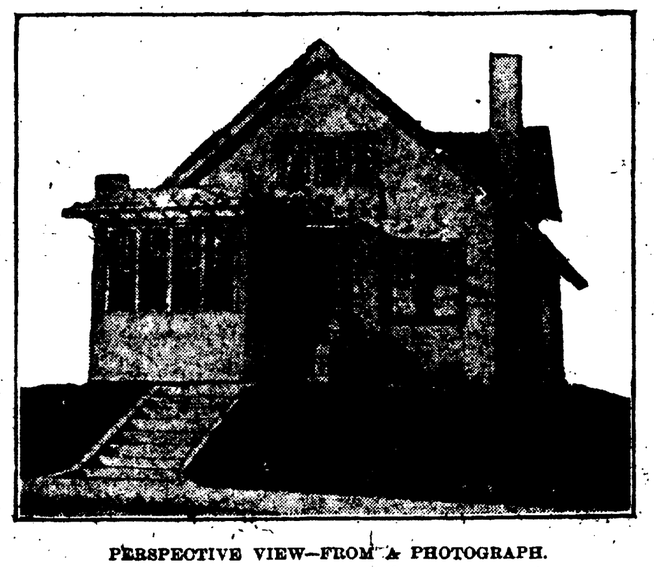
Various estimates have been published of the work of the State legislative session, which closed Saturday, but those that are fair and not dictated for partisan considerations agree that the administration's endeavor to fulfill the pledges upon which it went into office was both conscientious and successful. Governor Whitman and a Republican Legislature were elected for a distinct and well understood purpose. That they have carried out that purpose effectively the record shows.

The problems presented by the demand for reform in State departments were complicated by the legacy of debt and obligation resulting from four years of extravagant and inefficient administration. It is estimated that the amount that the present administration had to make up because preceding Democratic administrations failed to provide for the necessities of the State Government was more than 10 millions. This matter and all the others to which the Republicans were committed were met with courage and efficiency and the ultimate judgment of the people of the State upon their performance must be favorable.

The part that Oneida county had in this good work is gratifying. Senator Wicks, athough a first termer, was one of the most active members of the upper house. He won his way to the front rank and his record is in every respect creditable to himself and his district. Assemblyman Fuess and Fuller also bore well their part in the work that fell upon the Republican majority.—Utica Dispatch.

John Bunny

If ony one ever had a dual personality it was John Bunny. One personality—the private, normally articulate every day mortal, subject to the limitations of space and time—is no more. The second, a comic genuius of pantomime, laughing, fearing, raging thru countless scenes simultaneously from one end of the world to the other—lives on, assured of immortality while the partnership between the movies and human nature remains unbroken.



For the comparatively narrow circle comprised in Bunny's family and personal friends there may be little consolation in this reflection. But for the ninety millions of movie fans, selfish in their love of this funmaker's kaleidoscopic image, the knowledge that death cannot remove the John Bunny who was their friend comes as the balm of Gilead.

For the man's art has a universal appeal. The wholesome comedy of the Bunny facial expressions is lightening the human burden for myriads of individuals, regardless of race or creed, warming them with a sense of brotherhood. It has come nearer to justifying the new medium than all the elaborate scenic and historic "pageants" ever devised by ingenious motion picture producers.—New York Mail.

Woman's World

It Is Women's Business to Look After Europe's Civilization.

MISS JANE ADDAMS.

Miss Jane Addams of Hull House, Chicago, who is now giving so much of her time to promoting the work of the woman's peace party, was interviewed recently in regard to our responsibility in the present war.

"This war," said Miss Addams, "seems to me to be the most primitive war imaginable. It is as though the nations of the world had gone completely around the cycle of wars for freedom, for religion and all such causes and were now come back to the most primitive of all wars—the war for self defense.

"Each nation in the present struggle claims to be fighting for self defense. Each one shows a sort of tribal patriotism; it must defend its own tribe, its own property. And that is by far the lowest kind of patriotism. It harks back to the days when there were no courts of justice; when men settled difficulties by physical force; when tribes were separate units, each continually on the watch to defend itself from aggression or injury on the part of others.

"In those primeval days there was a distinct tribal appeal to women. They were not merely to stay at home and be protected; it was their business to bear children. The edicts of Europe's warring rulers today and the hosts of 'war brides' hark back to those early centuries when the chief duty of man was to fight and die and that of women to replace the dead.

"Now by this primitive warfare the work of long, long years is being destroyed. In France, for instance, the women were just beginning to get some improvements in the laws which concerned them, coguardianship of children, for one thing. The whole social fabric is distorted, the long years of struggle and sacrifice to attain a better civilization, to unite men and women and children, are gone for naught. It is our business to see that all the civilization of Europe shall not be destroyed.

"It's difficult to say what the reconstruction will be," continued Miss Addams. "We can none of us prophesy that. But I'm inclined to think that it will be in many ways not unlike the reconstruction which followed the Napoleonic wars in France. Just traveling about there casually one is surprised at the many and varied things that women do, what an important part they play in industry and petty commerce, how they run hotels and keep shops and often act as cashiers for their husbands.

"Women will be in relatively the same position when this war is over, I believe, in political life. After all that they are doing now it will be possible for them to go into public affairs, semipolitical affairs at least."

ABOUT A MILLINERY SHOP.

Mrs. So-and-so started a millinery store with some money she possessed of her own. She built up a thriving little business and put up a sign over the door of her shop reading, "Mrs. So-and-so's Millinery." Later on her husband entered into the business with her, and they changed that sign to read "So-and-so's Millinery." Then one day Mr. So-and-so died. His family promptly claimed that the business was his. And so the surrogate—that is, the judge having jurisdiction over the probate of wills and the administration of estates—also decided that the business had belonged to her husband and so was his estate. Then very generously he permitted the widow, who had founded the business and built it up, to deduct from the $1,000 in cash which constituted the profits on hand at the time of Mr. So-and-so's death the $100 with which she had started the business! The reason why the husband's family claimed the business as his was that, it being personal property, they could obtain one-half of it and the wife one-half. If, however, the wife had died, leaving any amount of personal property, the husband would have received the entire amount. Her family would not have been considered.

Dr. Anna Shaw Made Great Address

The Oswego Times gives the following report of Dr. Anna Shaw's speech given at Oswego on the 26th inst.:

The suffrage meeting at the Hippodrome last evening, addressed by Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, was one of the largest and certainly the most enjoyable ever held in this city. Every seat in the place was filled and many stood up against the wall in the back, principally those who "just looked in for a moment," but who were so interested at the lively line of argument propounded by the speaker that they hung around until the finish. Dr. Shaw is some talker and her reputation as a campaign orator, which preceded her to to this city, is regarded as sadly underdrawn. She made the best suffrage speech ever heard here and one of the best speeches ever presentsd locally on any subject.

There was not a single dull moment during her entire address and she started fires of argument under, over, behind, around and beyond the anti-suffragists so effectively that the very word anti has become a standing joke locally and any arguments advanced against votes for women in this city, from now until the cause is successful, will bring forth laughter. Dr. Shaw answered them all and then answered some which the anti-suffragists have not happened to think of yet.

Congressman L. W. Mott presided at the meeting and introduced Dr. Shaw and she was received with an ovation right at the start. She started in by poking fun at the so-called "republic" in which we live and showed that these United States had never attained a truly republican form of government but had merely succeeded in establishing an aristocracy of sex, where the one-half of the people governed the whole.

Dr. Shaw pointed out that from the very earliest days of colonization there were restrictions on voting which made the government an aristocracy. In the first place there was a religious restriction, and no man, not a member of the official church of the particular colony in which he lived, could vote. Equal suffrage for all should have come at the time of the revolution, but it did not and right after that there was a property restriction attached to voting and any man who voted must be a taxpayer on at least $250 worth of property. Then Thomas Jefferson rose up and declared that every one (meaning men alone) should have a vote. They got it, but the word "white" was inserted, cutting out the black men. At the time of the Civil war the word black was rubbed out and the word male stood in lonely grandeur before the word citizen. Dr. Shaw said that the Biblical quotation, "It is not good that man should be alone," should be followed and that the people should get busy with the eraser and remove the word male so that every citizen could vote, regardless of sex. She said further that the famous quotations of all American orators, the voice of the people is the voice of God, was never intended as a bass solo.

Discussing ballots she told of the introduction of the Australian ballot system and the trouble in adapting it to an electorate of which many were illiterate. She said the symbols of the parties were then adopted at the heads of columns so the illiterate men could vote with some intelligence. She said most women could read and she would back them in differentiating between an eagle and a rooster just as well as the men.

Dr. Shaw said that this was the only country in the world where women were disfranchised and degraded by being governed by men of every race, nation, and color on earth. In Germany, German men may rule German women; in France, French men may rule French women; in Great Britain, British women are ruled by British men; but here in America our native born American women must submit to be ruled by men of all races.

Women are here placed in a lower class than the former slaves, who are not allowed to use the vote, and, if men realized the degradation to which they are subjecting their wives and their mothers, they would certainly resent it and take immediate action to place women on an equal footing with all good citizens. In the same way woman is classed with the criminals, the idiots and the insane, in being denied the privilege to vote.

In discussing the arguments of the antis Dr. Shaw said they were hardly worth answering as, if one waited long enough the antis invariably argued in circles and before long answered themselves. She said antis claimed that woman's place was in the home and she had neither the time nor the desire to vote, and the next minute claim that if women were given the right to vote they would spend all their time voting. Regarding prohibition she told of an anti who had followed her throughout the northwest last year, talking on the things women would do if they had the vote. Out in North Dakota the State was dry and wanted to stay dry so the anti promptly argued that if the women were given the vote there they would vote the State wet because out in California they had been voting for years and Los Angeles was still wet. When the anti followed Dr. Shaw into Montana, which was wet and wanted to stay wet, the anti said that if women were allowed the vote they would have the entire State dry within a year because in Illinois where they had the right to vote, they had voted 97 towns dry in a year. She said that the antis changed their arguments to suit the State they were in and thereby both answered themselves and made themselves ridiculous to thinking people who followed the campaign work.

She also made a strong plea on the granting of suffrage that women might take a hand in the suppression of the white slave traffic, which yearly debauches thousands of the girls and boys and said that women policemen were needed to check the traffic in young girls. In conclusion she spoke of the hatred of women against war and said that peace would never come until women were given a share in government.

For the Children

Princess Marie, Daughter of the King of Belgium.

Probably not many American children will feel envious of Princess Marie, daughter of the king and queen of the Belgians. Until last August she was a care free, joyous little girl, but since the dreadful war broke out the people of Belgium have suffered greatly, as all little folks who are old enough to read already know. King Albert and Queen Elisabeth were forced to flee from their native land, and of course the royal children went with them. Princess Marie is the youngest of the family. She is only eight. She has two brothers, Prince Leopold, who is fourteen years of age, and Prince Charles, who is twelve. Prince Leopold, heir apparent to the throne, has recently joined the Twelfth Belgian infantry as a soldier. King Albert is fighting with his troops, while Princess Marie and her mother and other brother are living in France.

Trade Pantomimes.

This is a variation of the old game of "dumb crambo." The players divide themselves into two parties, called "the masters" and "the men."

After consultation the men agree upon some trade or occupation which they are to illustrate in dumb show. The masters must guess from their motions what trade they have chosen, and to help them in this they are told the first and last letters of the word describing it.

For instance, the men decide upon the word "gardener," and, giving the letters "g" and "r," they stand in line, and each performs a gardener's work—planting seeds, mowing with a scythe, digging with a spade, weeding, watering, etc. Not a word is spoken and but one guess allowed to each master. If one guesses correctly the men "lose their job." If no one discovers the trade the word is told and they proceed to act something else. If the masters fail twice to guess the word the men "strike" and "quit work." The masters then become the men and must take their turn at pantomime.

"What Am I Doing?"

Six, seven, eight or more players take their seats in a straight row. Behind them the person chosen to lead the game takes his stand. Placing himself exactly behind the player seated on the top chair, he then begins to conduct himself in the most absurd manner possible—for instance, making some ridiculous grimace, shaking his fist or any other comical antic that may suggest itself to him. After doing this for a minute or two he says to the player seated before him, "What am I doing?" Should the unfortunate individual be unable to answer correctly he must stand up and, until permission be given him to desist, must imitate in silence the antics the nature of which he was unable to discover. More frequently than not the guesses are quite wide of the mark; consequently the spectacle is most laughable when five or six of the company are all occupying the enviable position above described.

Good Form

What Gifts to Accept.

Among the many questions where the usages of social life we call etiquette are called upon to define lines either strictly or only with slight restrictions the one concerning the acceptance of expensive gifts from men friends to girls and women friends is often discussed.

It has come about in some way that to accept things that are very costly shows lack of personal pride. A woman who does is apt to find herself placed under obligations. This is something no delicate minded woman is willing to do. She does not like the idea that a man has been given cause to think himself entitled to more consideration on account of handsome gifts made to her. So she very properly returns any such that may strike her sense of propriety as of too great value, as far as price is concerned, for her to use in any way.

But unfortunately there are many girls and maturer women who gayly declare they will "take anything" they can get from men friends and acquaintances. The argument is very feminine: "He will spend that money on somebody. Why not on me?" is the way they put it. But when pay day comes and such women find that it is presumed they feel obliged or are under obligations to the giver they repudiate and still, strange to say, they keep the gifts, no matter what they are.

This is a very serious breach in the laws of social usage. Etiquette strictly demands, first, that such gifts should not be received at all, and if for some reason it appears better to accept than to "make a fuss about it" they should be returned as soon as possible, with the most friendly assurance that a simpler expression of good will will be far more acceptable and still more appreciated.

A man is justified in presenting a hostess who has been delightfully hospitable with something very handsome for her house, never for her personal wearing. But the accepted and correct gifts from men who know to their women friends are flowers, books, music or bonbons. These may be in fancy jeweled holders, but even that is not in perfect taste.

Good Manners at Home.

Take your good manners home with you. You cannot afford to be negligent of or rude to the people with whom you live every day. Unfailing courtesy in the family circle is the best possible investment to secure peace and harmony.

Etiquette differs in its outward manifestations in different countries and among people of different walks of life. In Europe the stranger makes the first call. In England and this country the resident makes the first call. In Europe the man lifts his hat to the woman before she bows to him. In this country and in England the woman bows first. The habit of using the knife as we use the fork is not utterly unknown among foreigners, while with us it is considered bad form. But it was not always so regarded here. You still see in out of the way places the old fashioned knife with the curiously enlarged and rounded end, so made to facilitate the eating of peas.

Some continentals do not consider it out of the way to use toothpicks at the table. They sometimes have chic little jeweled weapons to use in this way. Even a diamond trimmed toothpick would hardly make the custom acceptable in this country. But then some of our customs and manners probably shock foreigners quite as much.

But, though it has many different rules and forms, the underlying motive of etiquette is pretty much the same everywhere. Its effort is to embellish, dignify and make attractive human social intercourse; also to simplify it and make it easy without removing those restrictions which make the difference between civilization and savagery. Therefore do not put too much weight on the small signs of etiquette, but never let go the large ideal of it.

F. H. S. TEAM TO MAKE BOW

Fulton High School Team Will Take In the Baldwinsville Nine Tomorrow

When His Honor, "The Ump", shouts, "Play Ball!" at Athletic park tomorrow afternoon, the Fulton High school baseball squad will trot out on the turf determined to make this season the most successful in the annals of the school. The team has shown up exceptionally well in its last week of training practice and Coach Bill Stauring is confident that his flock of ball-tossers will make things interesting for their opponents this season.

The Baldwinsville team has been picked for the first victim, and the locals anticipate little difficulty in putting this game on ice in its early stages. The B'ville sand-lotters have always put up game battles, and although the dope points to a Fulton victory, the game will tell the tale more accurately. Webb, who has proved conclusively during the last week's practice, that he has a nice assortment of curves and speed, will be given the opportunity of winning the first game for Fulton. O'Brien, who is expected to bear the brunt of the hurling this season, will be saved for the Morrisville game, but he will be in uniform tomorrow, and if the B'ville sluggers appear to like Webb's twisters, he will be on hand to answer the S. O. S.

Webb will be ably supported by one of the fastest infields that has been developed in the school in years. Captain Bray will sport the big mitt, and he has been in mid-season shape for the past two weeks. Caffery, an eleventh-hour candidate, will hold down the initial sack, and his stature will assist him in taking care of any wild shoots that come his way. Stauring has not as yet decided whether Barnes or Barker will play at the midway station, but it is probable that both players will get a chance to show their mettle in the first tilt. Martin will work out in short field, and as he is a veteran of last year's team, he should handle himself well. Keeler, another veteran, is slated for the difficult corner, and the fast little third-baseman will also hold down the clean-up position in the batting order. D. O'Brien, Pullen and Reynolds will play center, left and right fields in the order named. Pullen will also be in trim to take up the pitching burden if necessary.

Tom McConnell will handle the indicator and Mayor Fox will be waited on by a delegation tomorrow and asked to pitch the first ball. Should the Mayor find it impossible to be present, Superintendent Fairgrieve of the schools, will be asked to try his hand at it. The season tickets have sold well, and the pupils of the high school have been practicing some original cheers for some time past. The opening day attendance promises to be a large one and it should be, for the team needs the money, and what is more essential, the hearty support of every high school student who can spare the time to attend.

At 6.32 Saturday morning the team will leave thisc ity, on its annual "Western" trip. Morrisville is the destination and that city will be reached about noon. After a two-hour rest the locals will take on the strong Morrisville team, in what is considered one of the hardest games of the season. O'Brien will do the twirling and the rest of the line-up will be the same. Coach Stauring will accompany the boys, and he hopes to see the game added to the list of victories. The team will leave for home immediately after the game and by a good connection in Oneida, they hope to reach Syracuse in time to catch the trolley for this city. Twelve men will make the trip.

"AUTOMOBILE" DAY ONE OF FESTIVITY AND BENEFIT

T. M. Ripley Conducted Nearly 100 Auto Fans Upon a Tour of Northern New York's Scenic Highways, Returning to Fulton in Time to Dine and Urge New Street Between Rochester and Broadway.

Perhaps the most successful enterprises, from every standpoint, ever conducted by any organization in this city, was placed to the credit of the Automobile Club of Fulton, yesterday. The day was known among the club members and all partisans of the Auto Club in this vicinity, as "Automobile Day," and the manner in which the affair was conducted showed conclusively that the Auto club here is a live, active organization that does things well.

Originally planned as an informal dinner for the club members, the affair developed into a city-wide celebration, and the spirit shown by the automobile owners of this section was a source of much gratification to the members of the club who arranged it.

At 7.30 last night, First st. resembled, at the City Hall and for a block in each direction, the entrance to an opera. Cars were lined up in both directions, all well filled with automobile enthusiasts prepared to show that they were interested by praticipating in the parade which had been arranged to precede the dinner at the City Hall. Led by President R. L. McCully of the club, who was accompanied by T. M. Ripley, the speaker of the evening, and several friends in a large seven-passenger car, the line got in motion at 7.45. The cars followed 1st st. to Oneida, thence to 3d, to Academy, to 4th, to Broadway, to 3d, to Cayuga, to 1st to Broadway, across the bridge to the Lackawanna R. R., back to 3d st. (east side) via Broadway, to Oneida, to 1st to the City Hall. Forty-three cars were in line and with almost every car flashing a powerful headlight, the display was a beautiful picture. Residents along the route watched the parade from their porches and at every corner crowds of people awaited the cars.

Ninety-four Present

Although the acceptances at noon yesterday did not total half that number, ninety-four people sat down to the dinner at City Hall directly after the parade. Fortunately this had been anticipated and there were reservations for one hundred. Every one was seated satisfactorily, and Caterer Hall served a substantial dinner. During the meal, the Van Burens, local amateurs, who displayed real talent, entertained with popular numbers assisted by Hal Reynolds, violinist. Parker VanBuren introduced several specialities in costume, and his work received merited applause.

Miss Osia Rumsey entertained with several classical number on the grand harp and was very well received. She showed thorough knowledge of the instrument and her rendition of several well-known numbers with variations, earned continued applause.

After the good things had been disposed of, President McCully made a short speech in which he thanked the members of the club, and all those who were not members for their cooperation in the affair, and said that he hoped to see such spirit in evidence when the club holds its regular runs this summer. Regarding the first run of the season, which will be made some time in May, President McCully spoke of two destinations proposed—Cicero and Weedsport. The club went to Cicero last fall and enjoyed a very good dinner there, but Charles Sneden, steward of the Citizens' club, has purchased a hotel at Weedsport and will soon leave for that city, and he has invited the club to make its premier run of the season to his hostelry, where he promises that they shall be royally entertained. Before introducting T. M. Ripley, state road engineer, the president invited all automobile owners, of the city who were not members of the club at present, to join, and if they did not care to join to accompany the club on its runs and to be present at any of its gatherings, and he assured them a hearty welcome.

Speaker Sees a Need

Mr. Ripley addressed the company from the platform, upon which a map ofthe counties of Jefferson, Lewis, St. Lawrence, Franklin, and part of Oswego had been posted in a conspicuous place. Before taking up the Adirondack roads, Mr. Ripley introduced a topic of interest to every Fultonian—namely, the construction of a cross street between 1st st. and 2d st. between Rochester st. and Broadway. Mr. Ripley said in part:

"The matter of a cross street between Rochester st. and Broadway came up when I was a resident of Fulton three years ago. At that time it was considered impractical because of certain objections which were raised, but I learn from various sources that there is very reason to believe that Academy st. could be run through to 1st st. now without any opposition. The need of such a street is evident—the new post office, which, by the way, is a beautiful buildings—is located in the upper end of the townd the new bridge has been built, and this is, in my opinion the physcological moment. for the construction of a cross street. Not having lived here for two years, I am not in touch with things as I used to be, but I feel safe in saying that a concerted effort on the part of a few interested people would make the street a reality. I wish to say a few words about 1st st: I learn that it is to be paved this year and I am glad to hear it. With the exception of two stretches of road in another part of this county, I know of no worse stretch of road between here and Watertown than 1st st. from Rochester to Broadway."

Then Mr. Ripley showing each point referred to on the road map, launched into a highly interesting account of the construction and general condition of the State roads in the Adirondacks and vicinity. Assuming that his listeners would be most interested in the shortest and best routes he stated that a new road has been built from Utica directly into Old Forge and that local autoists traveling into Utica via Syracuse would find a good touring road throughout the entire route. He then took up the northern route from Oswego into Watertown, thence through Gouveneur to Malone. One stretch of road between Oswego and Watertown is now under construction, but from that point into Malone, where the state road ends, the roads are in good condition. In speaking of the roads of Franklin county, Mr. Ripley stated that this county had bonded itself for $500,000 with which to construct good roads and that the roads in general were in fine condition throughout the county. He described the Tupper Lake-Saranac Lake road, and said that it was very beautiful but very narrow and dangerous for the intexperienced autoist at night. Saranac was described as a hustling municipality of 5,000 with fine hotels, but he advised that tourists pick out the hotels which did not cater to tubercular patients. From Malone to Tupper Lake there is a rise of 1,600 feet, and many hard grades and sharp turns. The state has begun the construtction of 15 miles of this road in the Meetham Pond vicinity where Paul Smith's famous hunting lodge is located.

A County's Enterprise

From Saranac to Lake Placid a detour through the Cascades is often necessary and Mr. Ripley advised [illegible] this section. He spoke of a trip he made last year, leaving Watertown in the morning and traveling by way of Malone, Tupper Lake, Saranac Lake and Lake Placid into Shroon Lake in a day, a total of 265 miles, over all kinds of roads. There are outlets to the south from Malone under construction, one leading to Utica and the other into Saratoga. Franklin county has secured lve square miles of land from St. Lawrence county in order to build a good road through the lower corner of the county, and although there are no houses along the road for ten miles in one part, the road was designed purely as a tourist road, and the cars use it constantly.

A shorter route from Watertown into Tupper Lake was shown, by way of Carthage, Newton Falls, and Wind fall Corners. This route would be almost impassable after hard rains, however, and is hazardous to the novice at all times.

It is 106 miles from Watertown to Tupper Lake by that route, but five hours are none too little to count on for the trip. There are no places for miles where tires, gasoline and oil can be purchased and tourists were advised to stock up with these supplies before leaving Carthage.

Some Cheap Roads

Mr. Ripley, in closing, spoke of the cost of construction and maintenance and scouted the talk of extravagance by the state in the road-building work. He showed how traffic was drawn to good roads and stated that the wear on the good roads was increasing all the time. Some roads cost $10,000 a mile to build, and the speaker said that this was too little in some instances as the roads will not stand up under the speed and heavy haul of many vehicles. He told of an increase of tonnage of 100 per cent. on a road in St. Lawrence county which he constructed, and said this occurred wherever good roads were built as the farmer found that he could haul a larger load over the good roads. He illustrated this point by speaking of a motor truck which weighed five tons, and which could haul a load of nine tons over a good road. "Fourteen tons," said Mr. Ripley, "will wear out any road." Motor busses between some of the cities are working great damage to the roads. One from Canton to Ogdensburg was mentioned. He stated that he has asked for $100,000 with which to construct and maintain roads in hisd istrict. The state road departments have received the same appropriations this year as last year, and there are 1,000 miles more of road to maintain.

He offered to lend his assistance to any Fulton autoists at any time, and answer any inquiry regarding the state of the roads, routes, grades and general data concerning any road in his district. He closed by inviting the Fultonians to come up and look over his district and to visit him personally.

A. W. Wiltsie of the club proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Ripley and all present joined with him. President McCully then announced the meeting adjourned until the club run in May.

PIANO MAN FORGOT TO FILE ASSETS

Fultonians who have purchased pianos of Andrew J Speich a Syracuse piano dealer will probably be interested to learn that proceedings have been started against him by two piano manufacturing concerns to recover the pianos sold to Speich for which he did not pay. It is claimed by the Sterling Piano Company, and the Huntington Piano Company, the plaintiffs, that Speich filed a false statement of his assets prior to going into bankruptcy last anuary. The piano companies have large claims against Speich and they assert that he has sold several pianos on time for which he has not been paid, and the statement of these sales was not included in his list of assets. Speich sold several pianos in this city and owners of the pianos who are still paying instalments on them will do well to learn whether or not he reported these sales to the court when he entered bankruptcy, as the law would permit the real owners of the pianos, the manufacturers to recover their property.

"NOISELESS" CAR WHEELS USED

They Are the Invention of a Former Assistant Postmaster-General of U.S.

Horace N. Gilbert informs The Evening Times that in Portland, Maine, last week, there was given a trial of the new "silent" wheel upon one of the cars of the Portland Railroad Company.

The invention, says Mr. Gilbert, who is a stockholder in the company, is the work of former assistant Postmaster-General Madden. The first public trial of the new wheels proved a huge success. That the wheel means the elimination of noise seems to be a foregone conclusion, both on steam and electric-driven cars. At the trial of the wheel in Portland a new 25-ton steel car was equipped with eight of the noiseless discs, the car being run over a dozen or more of the city's streets. A number of experts in railway operation, including officers of railroads, superintendents of manufacturing plants, and several newspaper men, witnessed the trial of the wheels. In every instance, says Mr. Gilbert, the new wheels proved to be equal to every claim made by their inventor—which means they are noiseless and shock absorbers. Durin gthe trial the heavy car was run over intersecting car tracks, with the result that the passengers declared they felt they were riding upon velvet carpet.

From the beginning of railroading all transportation has been on rigid car wheels. That the noisy rigid wheel should be improved upon, at least for passenger service, has impressed inventors for years. They have long worked for improvements, but no one has, until now, produced an efficient, non-rigid, cushioned, sound-deadened wheel. Mr. Madden and everyone was highly pleased and fully satisfied that the wheel would do all he had hoped for and expected. This invention will revolutionize the building of car wheels not only in all trolley cars and steam cars, but in freight cars as well. It is claimed the wheel will be a great money saver, as the rigid wheel now in use passes over the rail joints it strikes a hard sharp blow and the wear and tear are severe. This wheel strikes a cushioned blow and so reduces wheel pressure. Their use will be immediate, and soon, general. This invention is the most notable of this generation.

THE LUCY MARSH RECITAL IN OSWEGO

The following is a quotation from the Albany Knickbocker Press regarding Miss Lucy Marsh, who sings in the Armory, Oswego, on May 5:

"Miss Marsh has a soprano voice which gives one a thrill of surprise when she starts to sing, it is so extraordinarily high, pure and delicate. She has no mannerisms, she sings with perfect taste and good expression, and her voice, which is capable of a jump from middle to high C and then a sparkling descent of trills and arpeggios, all without effort, and done as though it were the most natural and enjoyable performance in the world, holds the listeners quiet in amazement."

ON THE RIALTO

Side-Lights on the Auto-Club Dinner

The first move of half of last night's assemblage, upon reaching home, was to look up the "topography." When the speaker pulled that one in his address, he had several noticeably gasping for breath.

* * *

The parade was a big feature. One type of car was very much in evidence—it looks like a French machine, but there seem to be a great many of them in this country. One owner of this type of car stated after the parade that he had been running with his engine shut off over the greater part of the route. When asked how that was accomplished he said, "Why, I got right behind So-and-So's big six and my car ran along on the odor from his exhaust." Some car!

* * *

It's a safe bet that at least twenty-five of the people who saw that parade are infected with the auto bug today. The event could not help but boom the business. The rival dealers appeared last night to be a real-get-together bunch and in direct contrast to some of the operators of other enterprises here.

* * *

Doubtless the most efficient, and surely the handsomest corps of waiters, that has ever served an assemblage of the kind here, was in operation last night. No thumbs in the soup were in evidence, principally because there was no soup.

* * *

Before the first road run of the club is taken, several appointments will be made. It is planned to appoint a road surgeon whose duty it shall be to bring up the rear of the procession at all times, and when a tire is punctured on any club car, the driver is to pull up at the side of the road and await the coming of the surgeon, who will attend to the repairs. It is rumored that this job is being eagerly sought after by at least ten youn gmembers of the club who delight in such scientific labor. Several of the ten denied the report this morning, but this was probably due to their natural diffidence.

* * *

If the club runs are to take place on Sunday, we will write the following standing personal which will appear regularly in these columns every Monday morning during the season:

"Mr. Blank, road surgeon of the Fulton Automobile club, was unable to accompany the club on its its run to Hohokus yesterday owing to illness contracted at a late hour Saturday night."

ASSAILANTS OF PASTOR HELD

Arrested Last Night In Oswego by Patrolman Pare—Lodged In City Jail

After obtaining legal advice on the subject, Rev. Wayland G. Bassett, the retired clergyman who was assaulted at his home in Oneida st. Tuesday afternoon by two young men, swore out a warrant yesterday for their arrest. Officer Pare was detailed on the case and after some good work finally ran his men down in Oswego last night. They were arrested and brought to this city and locked up.

They gave their names at the hearing Tuesday as Edgar J. Cumm of Dannemora and Roy Hurlbert of Gouverneur. When arraigned this morning they asked that the hearing be postponed until they could communicate with their parents. Hurlbert telephoned his father in Gouverneur this morning and when he arrives they will be given an opportunity to present their case through an attorney.

As related in yesterday's Evening Times, Mr. Bassett stated that he was working in his garden Tuesday afternoon, when he was approached by one of the men, and he accompanied him into the house. The other young man was inside, according to Mr. Bassett, and they demanded money from him at the same time preventing his escape. When he refused to give them money, they assaulted him, he alleges, and it was only after a hard fight that he suceeded in getting to the door to call help. Neighbors held the men until the arrival of the police and the party was taken to headquarters, and court called at once.

Mr. Bassett was in a very nervous state at the time, due to his age and the excitement, and when he was told that it would be necessary for him to appear before the Grand ury with the case, he did not feel that his condition would permit. Accordingly the men were told to leave town at once. Afterwards, however, Mr. Bassett changed his mind and swore out the warrant charging the men with assault in the second degree, inasmuch as they assaulted him and demanded money.

The young men are well dressed and evidently educated and appear to be of good families, although they could furnish no references in the court room except from keepers of Dannemora prison. They countercharged Mr. Bassett with a serious offence, but their story is not credited.

Cumm's father is expected to arrive today and the case will probably be called for tomorrow morning.

ROSE FESTIVAL ENJOYED

Gala Evening of Flowers and Music

A large audience which nearly filled the auditorium of the State street M. E. church greeted the members of the Epworth League and their friends who participated in the Rose Festival and musical entertainment last evening.

The church orchestra received their usual number of encores; Mrs. Doty and Mrs. C. E. Wilson rendered piano solos while Miss Blakely gave a violin solo and Herman Randall gave enjoyable selections on the harp.

Following in between the various musical numbers were the pantomime scenes in the Rose Festival and carnival enacted by the young ladies. The scenes were carried out in custom with garlands of roses which were the result of much time and drilling by the young ladies and their director in charge, Mrs. W. Singleton.

A bridal scene followed in the midts of the Rose Carnival which added a humorous side to the affair.

Refreshments were served which was followed by a social hour.

SIXTH STREET BRIDGE WALK CAVED IN

The sidewalk section of the Sixth st. bridge, near Ontario st., collapsed yesterday afternoon. Mayor Fox and Superintendent of Public Works Rumsey inspected the bridge soon after and decided to order repairs at once. There is a ravine beneath the bridge and luckily no pedestrian was on the structure at the time.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By Frederic T. Cardoze

Albany, April 29.—That there will be important amendments to the code of criminal procedure offered by delegates to the Constitutional Convention, is promised by some of the delegates who have had large experience in practicing in courts where criminal actions are tried. These delegates in some instances take the position that there are many loopholes through which criminals may escape under the present order of things.

It is an interesting fact that among the delegates at present sitting in Albany there are many who have during their public careers been district attorneys. Francis Martin, representing the twenty-second district is at present district attorney of Bronx county, while the secretary of the Convention, William D. Cunningham, is district attorney of Ulster county.

Delegate Martin says that he is studying the question as to what amendments should be made to the Criminal code and admits that he is working upon several amendments to the Constitution upon the subject. He is not ready at this time, however, to submit his amendments to the delegates.

As an illustration of the certainty of ample discussion upon amendments to the Crimnal code, the various delegates who have served as prosecuting attorneys for either the county or nation is given.

Chairman Elihu Root was at one time United States district attorney for the Southern district of New York. John Lord O'Brien was at one time U. S. district attorney for the western district. The Southern district of New York State was represented by Henry L. Stimson, who was a federal district attorney from 1906 to 1909. Henry E. Owen, was an assistant U. S. district attorney for the Northern district of his State.

Of district attorneys representing counties, there are eight among the Constitutional Convention delegates, not counting Secretary Cunningham, who has no vote. Charles S. Mereness, representing the thirty-second district at one time was district attorney of Lewis county. Delaney Nicoll, representing the fourteenth district, was district attorney for New York county in his earlier years, while William M. K. Olcott, representing the eighteenth district, at one time was also district attorney for that county.

John B. Stanchfield, who came to the Constitutional Convention as the delegate from the thirteenth district, was district attorney for Chemung county; Francis A. Winslow, representing the twenty-fourth district, a few years ago was district attorney of Westchester county, and Frank A. Wood, a delegate from the forty-fourth district, was at one time district attorney of Genesee county.

Delegate Samuel H. Fancher from the thirty-ninth district, was district attorney for the county of Delaware while Judge Alphonso T. Clearwater of Ulster county and who is a delegate-at-large, was at one time, district attorney of that county. Ledyard P. Hale, of the thirty-fourth district, was at one time an assistant district attorney for St. Lawrence county.

The attorneys outnumber the members of any other profession who are delegates to the Constitutional Convention, among whom there are several most distinguished educators and journalists.

WOUNDED IN WAR SAVED BY SCIENCE

Only 3 Per Cent Now Die of Their Injuries.

ONE-FIFTH OF FORMER RATE

Modern Surgery, Leaving Much to Nature and Antiseptic Treatment, and the Wonderful Military Medical Organization Amazingly Lessen Mortality in European Conflict.

In the midst of the awful slaughter which has taken place, probably some 5,000,000 men killed and wounded during the past eight months, and the still more awful slaughter that every one in the world now recognizes is ahead there is one ray of light in all the darkness, says James J. Walsh, M. D., Ph. D. The death rate among the wounded is probably less than one-half of what it has ever been before.

French statistics indicate that a little less than 8½ per cent of the wounds go on to fatal termination. This figure, so low in comparison with the death rate of other wars as to be almost incredible, shows what magnificent strides conservative surgery and the antiseptic treatment of wounds have made during the last generation.

In the Crimean war 15.21 per cent of the French wounded died from their injuries. In the French-Italian-Austrian war of 1859-60 the percentage of death among the French wounded was nearly 17.5 per cent.

At the beginning of our civil war the death rate among the wounded here in America was nearly as great as that among the French a year previous, but before the end of the war medical organization had accomplished much, and it was the army medical department here in America that taught the world just what would have to be done if the wounded were to be properly cared for and the death rate lowered.

Virchow, the great German pathologist, who did so much to organize the military medical department of Germany, has the highest praise for what we did during the civil war. He wrote:

Gives Praise to America.

"Whoever studies the copious publications of the medical staff of the American army must again and again be astonished at the vast experience collected in them."

Taking advantage of that new knowledge so faithfully preserved for the benefit of others, the Germans during the Franco-German war brought the death rate down to scarcely more than 10 per cent, and this was looked upon as a great triumph.

Instead of the tendency to amputate and otherwise intervene, which was so noticeable before, surgeons had become willing to wait and let nature accomplish her beneficent purpose of healing, and this letting well enough alone saved many lives.

During the Spanish-American and Anglo-Boer wars, as a consequence of these advances in surgery, the percentage of death among the wounded was only between 5 and 6 per cent. This cut in two the previous records.

Now the French have again cut this record nearly in half despite the fact that the trench warfare which had been imposed upon the armies by the conditions of this war so many of the wounds, even of slight importance, as in the fingers and toes, become seriously infected from earth dirt.

While we have official French figures, we know that German conditions have been at least as favorable and that their statistics are not very different. Now even fewer than one in thirty-five die and probably not much more than one in forty.

Soon Back on Firing Line.

Actually 55 per cent of those wounded in the early part of the war are back on the firing line, and it is said that about one-fourth of these have actually been wounded a second time and have recovered and returned to soldier duty. Twenty-four per cent are on convalescent leave, 17 per cent are under treatment and doing well, and only 1½ per cent have become permanently disabled.

Some of the factors that led up to the reduction in this mortality are the development of preventive and curative inoculation, the organization of magnificent hospital service on the railroads and of hospital ships, as well as the aid that the automobile has proved. The Red Cross organization, now so widely extended, has been of immense help.

The wounded now are hurried away to the base hospitals with a rapidity undreamed of even twenty-five years ago. The German army is said to have no fewer than fifty hospital trains fully equipped, and at certain hours to these are given the right of way with practically clear tracks, so that uninterrupted passage from the front to a base hospital is assured.

The German Red Cross has equipped some twenty-five hospital trains, each with a dining car and kitchen, four surgeons, some forty attendants, a registrar, porters and other train officers, and each of these trains can accommodate over 300 wounded.

GERMANS USE ROCKETS TO GET RANGE AT NIGHT.

Aerial Illumination Has Been Undertaken With Unusual Success.

Details of a novel and spectacular kind of night attack by the Germans, the chief feature of which is an illumination of the whole zone of artillery fire by a vivid pyrotechnic display, have been brought into Warsaw by Russian soldiers from the Bzura front. This device is usually employed on cloudy nights, when the moon and stars cannot be depended on to reveal the positions of the Russian guns.

The Germans appear to be relying more and more upon this device for acquainting themselves with the disposition of the enemy's forces, since, on account of the protection given by Russian aviators, German aeroplanes have been unable to fly low enough to be of much service as scouts. Batteries only partly screened by clumps of trees or placed, with little hope of effective concealment, behind rocks or in natural depressions in the ground apparently have been unnoticed by the aerial scouts, who found it advisable in most cases to keep to an altitude of 2,000 feet or higher.

The aerial illumination has been undertaken with great success. Coming as a prelude to a heavy bombardment, it is intended to accomplish the double aim of revealing the Russian batteries and dazzling and distracting the enemy in their efforts to reply. First a great number of rockets are set off and break over the Russian line. While the sky is still glowing with this radiance larger and more powerful explosives follow the rockets, bursting into fiery balls of red and white, which hang for a moment motionless over the Russian positions. In this glare every gun and gunner, every detail of the landscape, shows up as clearly as in daylight. Some of the balls of fire fall upon clumps of trees, and to the brightness overhead is added the fire of burning wood.

In a few seconds the illumination fades, and the trenches and batteries are again in darkness, but in this time the German gunners have been able to get their range. After a verification of the enemy's positions by the use of powerful searchlights there follow the crackle of machine guns and the booming of the heavy artillery.

SAFETY FIRST BY MORALITY

Appeal of Carnegie Steel Company to Its Workmen.

An appeal to its thousands of employees to lead moral lives as a means of increasing their own safety when at work and of improving their chances for promotion has been made by the Carnegie Steel company of Pittsburgh as a part of a "safety first" campaign.

In a series of pamphlets which have been distributed among the men for several weeks, the company, by means of charts, shows how much longer a man lives who lives "right" than one who dissipates, and tells of the better school work done by children of the workman who leads a clean life compared with one who does not, and how much less liable the workman is to accident because of his being more alert and careful. The men are appealed to strictly from a business standpoint.

Swat the Mosquito!

Come, mobilize, ye public,
Against the common foe
And join the deadly warfare
To strike and lay him low.
Prepare your deadly oil can,
Take all the force you've got
And with your trusty weapons
Swat, swat, swat!

'Tis true he is elusive,
Likewise his cousin fly,
But this is fight to finish.
Prepare to do or die.
To both give never quarter,
Exterminate the lot,
And with a vow to conquer
Swat, swat, swat!

Oh, weary not of effort,
For sore will be the strain.
Though they be exterminated
They always come again.
So vigilance eternal
Alone unties the knot
That tangles up their nuisance—
Swat, swat, swat!

THIEF TAKES TO JAIL STOLEN $10,000 GEM.

Swallowed Diamond Still in His Body. Surgeons May Operate.

James Williams, aged nineteen, who has just been sentenced to two years' imprisonment at Dallas, Tex., for robbing a jeweler's store, is the only prisoner who has ever been known to take his booty to jail with him. He swallowed a $10,000 diamond, and it is still in his body.

The jewelers offered a reward of $1,000 for the recovery of the stone. Williams is willing to be operated on, but thinks that if he submits to this ordeal he should receive the reward.

Surgeons say the operation would require practical evisceration, with an incision twelve to fourteen inches long and an examination that would probably take an hour, covering every inch of the intestinal system. They fear that the shock from surgery of that character might prove fatal.

The grand jury and the youth's parents are to be consulted. Meanwhile the lad is under close watch.

The suggestion of an X ray photograph was said by experts to offer little hope, as the diamond is unmounted and perfectly clear, and it would not show in an examination of that kind. It is also stated that the juices of the body will have no effect upon the stone except perhaps to give it a coating if it remains inside him any great length of time. So far the boy has experienced no ill effects.

UGLY THOUGHTS.

In wandering through your mental pleasure grounds, whenever you come upon an ugly intruder, of a thought which might bloom into some poisonous emotion such as fear, envy, hate, worry, remorse, anger, and the like, there is only one right way to treat it. Pull it up like a weed; drop it upon the rubbish heap as promptly as if it were a stinging nettle; and let some harmonious thought grow in its place.

Lawmakers End Work, Make Way For Discussion of Constitution

Session Noted For Close Following of Program Laid Down by Governor Whitman.

Resume of Important Bills Passed, Including Financial Measures of High Importance.

[Special Correspondence.]

ALBANY, April 26.—After having accomplished practically all the results which had been outlined the legislature of 1915 has concluded the business to which it devoted nearly four months of effort. Tardy in their work at the beginning of the session, the lawmakers crowded into the last two weeks of the session days and nights of attention to duty in order to finish the program mapped out by the leaders before April 26, the date of the reconvening of the constitutional convention.

Few who participated in the days and nights of debate will forget the severe strain of the past fortnight. When the financial tangle was straightened out to the satisfaction of the majority and the dissatisfaction of the minority members.

Conferences and debates resulted in the introduction of a measure which provides for a direct tax of 1.7 mills, calculated to bring in a revenue to the state of $19,000,000, which amount, when added to the $5,000,000 expected to be raised by indirect taxes, is looked upon as sufficient to solve the financial situation which the Republican leaders say has been the most serious feature of the session just ended.

The State's Expenses.

Based upon what is said to be a fairly conservative estimate, the expenses of the state for the incoming fiscal year are set at $63,000,000. Of this gigantic amount but $30,000,000 will be supplied by the regular income.

Motor vehicle legislation and liquor legislation will bring in the greater part of the indirect tax, while a secured debt tax will provide an additional channel for revenue.

While the Republicans prepared to pass their bills so as to make lawful the additional taxes, the Democrats raised the cry that a direct tax was unnecessary. They argued that instead of real economy the majority party was enacting legislation to secure funds to provide salaries for the faithful in their ranks. They cited as an instance the creation of a new state boxing commission, to be composed of three members, each to receive an annual salary of $3,000, together with a secretary to receive an equal amount.

Loyally did the minority members rally to the support of former Governor Martin H. Glynn and back up his contention that his administration had not been extravagant, but prudent and highly efficient.

Some Labor Measures.

Organized labor, while it won a victory or two, cannot be said to have been granted a free rein as regards legislation. Arrayed against the bill which aimed to extend the hours of labor which might be performed in the canning establishments of the state during the rush season, which is the season of the year when produce and fruit ripens quickly, the opposition succeeded in killing it finally, although originally it was passed by both houses. When the bill reached Governor Whitman the cry against it was so great that it was recalled for amendment. When voted upon again it was defeated. The seventy hour grocery clerks bill passed. Labor favored it.

In spite of the opposition of organized labor, however, the bill which sought to combine the state department of labor and the workmen's compensation commission was passed by both houses. It was not until the last day of the session that the measure was sent to Governor Whitman for his signature.

Attempts to enact reforms in excise matters failed utterly. The local and state wide prohibition bills were reported from committee only to be later immediately recommitted. More than one attempt was made thereafter to have the committee on excise discharged from further consideration of it. All were futile.

No Sunday Ball Games.

Legislation which would permit professional ball games on Sunday progressed no further than reference to committee. Arguments and petitions in favor of it did not prevail.

Likewise the attempt to provide for a referendum so that the sentiment of the people regarding the advisability of returning to the state convention system failed. The Walters bill, with this provision incorporated, had no chance of passing. Moreover, Governor Whitman refused to countenance any change in the direct primary system now being observed.

Quick action on the part of Governor Whitman followed the passage of the bill legislating out of office the members of the state tax commission appointed under the administration of the Democrats. The executive sent to the senate the names of Martin Saxe of New York, Ralph W. Thomas of Hamilton and Walter H. Knapp of Canandaigua as the new tax commissioners. All three were confirmed. The salary of a tax commissioner is $3,000 a year and necessary expenses when out of Albany upon official business.

Governor Whitman took his time about signing the bill which legislated out of office the three Democratic members of the state conservation commission. He had the measure before him two days before he created a law of it. Immediately thereafter he sent in the name of Charles D. Pratt of New York as his candidate to be the single commissioner provided for under the reorganization law.

Although W. W. Farley of Binghamton, state commissioner of excise, resigned last October, his resignation was kept quiet until the day when his successor, former Senator George E. Green of Binghamton, was named by the governor. The senate almost immediately confirmed the nomination. The reorganization of the excise department was not written large upon the program of reform planned by the Republicans.

Followed Whitman's Wishes.

Few legislatures have been truer to the wishes of a governor than has been the lawmaking body of 1915. All of the promises made by Governor Whitman prior to his election and every recommendation made by him in his first annual message have been fulfilled and followed. Among these recommendations the following were the most important: Abolition of the department of efficiency and economy, abolition of the office of state fire marshal, reorganization of the conservation commission, reorganization of the state department of highways, legislating out of office of the members of the state board of claims by the restoration of the state court of claims, the members of which are to be lawyers; reorganizing of the state tax commission. General economy was recommended by the governor also, and as a result numerous positions were eliminated in the various state departments reorganized.

General Appropriations.

It is impossible to predict what the amount of the general appropriation bill will be after Governor Whitman has finished pruning it. Many items which were in the measure after its adoption by both houses are very likely to be cut out, as it is well known that the executive has taken the stand that items other than those absolutely necessary will not be allowed to remain in the bill. The same stand has been taken by the governor as regards the annual supply bill and special bills carrying appropriations. The governor has declared that unless there is a public necessity for an appropriation as provided for by a special bill he will veto it.

A great volume of legislation will find its way to the executive chamber for the next few days, all of which will comprise bills passed by both houses during the last two days of the session. These bills are known as thirty day bills, since the executive is permitted to deliberate over any or all of them for that period of time. Failure to veto a bill of the thirty day character automatically makes a law of such measure.

It can safely be said that no other session of the New York legislature ever disturbed so many state departments as the one just over.

Session Not a Long One.

The session of 1915 was comparatively a short one, although it was longer by nearly a month than that of the preceding year. More bills were introduced this year than at any other session in the history of the state for a corresponding period of time, yet it is not expected that there will be a deluge of new laws.

Aside from the Thompson joint legislative committee, appointed to probe the public service commissions, the special committees of importance which were named were few. The second one which performed actual work was that which probed the civil service conditions and submitted its report relative to salaries and competence of those in the pay of the state, together with the conditions surrounding their appointment.

Speaker T. C. Sweet of the assembly appears to have grown in popularity since last year. In matters of policy his word was generally the last sought. Majority Leader Harold J. Hinman worked with him in harmony in spite of the early rumors that there was friction between them.

Lieutenant Governor Schoeneck and Majority Leader Brown were in accord in the senate, although at the beginning of the year it appeared as though this was not the case.

Number of Laws Passed.

With 360 laws on the statute books for the present year and practically as many additional bills ready for the signature of the governor the legislative session of 1915 cannot be said to have been idle with regard to the turning out of laws. Last year 522 bills became laws.

Compared with the legislation of other years, there was comparatively little along the constructive line.

These bills reorganizing state departments are new laws:

Abolishing the state department of efficiency and economy.

Abolishing the state fire marshal.

Reorganizing the state tax commission.

Reorganizing the state highway commission.

Reorganizing the state fair commission.

ODD ADVENTURE ON A RAILWAY.

Ruse of a Criminal to Escape Arrest Comes to Naught.

It was some years ago that Gretchen Hecker, then a girl of eighteen, was put aboard a train for Berlin. Her father having lost his fortune, it was decided that the girl should study music, with a view to earning her own living.

She went all alone on the train and was alone in the compartment until at one of the stops a man got in. The train had no sooner started on than he said to Gretchen:

"Fraulein, I'll trouble you for your coat."

Gretchen looked at the man, not understanding what he meant.

"Your coat, and be in a hurry. Take it off. I'm going to put it on and you shall put on mine."

Before Gretchen could be made to understand that he was in earnest he was obliged to threaten her, and even then the taking off of her outer garment before a man was so obnoxious to her that she did it very slowly. The man was twice her age, but not much taller, being small and wiry. He put on Gretchen's coat, which fit him, compelling her to put on his own coat. Then he took out of a satchel a number of cosmetics and began to make himself up for a woman. He also took out a mustache and, giving it to Gretchen, ordered her to stick it on to her upper lip.

Gretchen, who had never before been out in the world without a maid, was of course terror stricken. She obeyed the man mechanically, expecting every moment that he might find it to his interest to murder her. After they had changed apparel he said to her:

"Little girl, if you do what I want you to do, I'll not hurt you. The next station will be B, and I expect to leave the train there. If I decide not to and any one gets into this compartment, you must pretend that you are a young man. If you don't, I'll kill you."

When the train stopped at B the man was about to get out when he caught sight of a policeman standing right where he must be passed. The man hesitated and decided not to risk it. He cowered back in the car and remained there while the train was at a standstill. Just before it moved off a young man in a student's cap got into the compartment.

The student was evidently in an amiable mood—most students are—and as soon as he was seated took out a cigarette and, turning to the criminal who he supposed was a woman, asked if she objected to smoking. The man replied in so coarse a voice that the student smiled, and, permission being granted, he offered Gretchen a cigarette. She was about to decline when a glance from the criminal warned her to accept, and, taking the cigarette, the student held a match while she lit it. The student insisted on opening a conversation with her. At the first sound of her voice he looked at her surprised and smiled again.

"You two had better change your clothes," he said. "The woman has the voice of a man, while the man has the voice of a woman."

Poor Gretchen now began to show signs of sickness, and the student asked what was the matter. Gretchen admitted that it must be the cigarette.

"Poor little boy," said the student. "You should be at home with your mother."

Taking her head in his arms, he playfully pulled it down on to his breast. The criminal, not relishing this close proximity and fearing the girl might communicate with the student, said:

"Let the boy alone."

"What business is it of yours?" asked the student haughtily. "One would suppose the boy to be a girl. I'll hug him if I like."

With that he seized Gretchen and pulled her face down on to his chest so vigorously that when he released her the mustache had fallen off.

"Well, well!" said the astonished student. "What's this? Are you trying to escape from justice in disguise?"

"That's it," cried the criminal. "He must be a thief."

The student looked at the blushing, innocent face of the girl, and, noticing that her hair had partly slipped from under her hat where the criminal had placed it, took hold of a coil and pulled it down over Gretchen's shoulder.

"You're a girl," he said, "that's certain. Now, how about you?" he added, looking at the other, who cried:

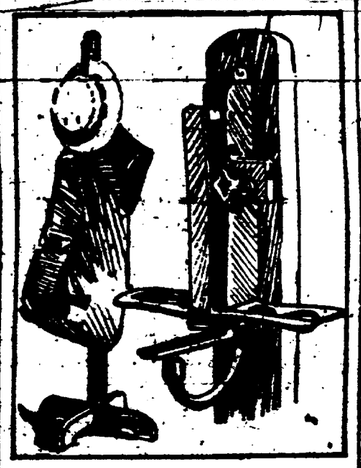
"A man!" And, whipping out a revolver, he attempted to cover the student, but the latter, who was a renowned member of the dueling corps at his university, quick as lightning knocked up his weapon, and in the scuffle that followed the criminal, being encumbered with a long coat, was overpowered and lost his revolver.

For the rest of the journey the student kept the criminal covered and got from Gretchen a brief story of how she had been forced into man's attire. On reaching the next station the criminal was turned over to the police, and Gretchen's identity was confirmed by telegraph.

The student proved to be the son of a wealthy baron who knew Gretchen's father. This and the singular adventure was quite enough to induce an acquaintance, which ripened into love, and Gretchen is now a baroness.

POPULAR MECHANICS

Nevada's Underground Water.



Certain valleys of southeastern Nevada contain a large supply of ground water, and a part of this water can be economically developed for irrigation, according to a report by Everett Carpenter just issued by the United States geological survey. The localities at which ground water can be found are indicated, and the best methods of recovering the underground water at each locality are described. The report contains also an interesting account of the geology of the region and shows that at one time this desert country contained a large river and seven large lakes, all of which are now absolutely dry. The ancient stream and lakes are described and shown on maps for the first time in this report. One of the most valuable features of the report is a guide to watering places on routes of travel, supplemented by a map showing roads and watering places and a table giving the distances between watering places.

Manufacture of White Lead.

Basic carbonate, white lead, is made in several ways. The old Dutch process consists in placing lead plates on grids in clay pots with dilute acetic acid, stacking the pots up and covering it with tanbark. Fermentation of the latter causes a rise in temperature and the production of carbon dioxide, which acts on the lead in the pots and gives a basic lead carbonate. At the end of two months the white lead is ground in water and dried, being ground later in oil. The "quick process" requires but two weeks and is carried out by acting on finely divided lead with dilute acetic acid and carbon dioxide, from burning coke, in revolving cylinders. In the "mild process" no acid is used, the finely divided lead being agitated in water through which air is blown. Hydrate of lead is formed and later carbonated. A very good product, free from all acid, is obtained.—Engineering Magazine.

Locking Hook For Garments.

A new holder for coat, hat and umbrella is equipped with a locking mechanism by which these articles, though out in the open, may be secured under lock and key, says Popular Mechanics. It is therefore particularly adapted to [illegible] restaurants and similar places.

COAT HOOK THAT LOCKS GARMENTS.

In using the mechanism is first unlocked and opened, the arrangement being such that the key cannot be removed until the mechanism is again closed. The coat is placed on the hook projecting from the bottom, the umbrella in the hole in the horizontal bar that best suits its size and the hat on the smaller bar projecting from the front. When the holder is closed these articles are held securely and cannot be removed except by unlocking the mechanism with the key.

Zinc Oxide in Paint.

Zinc oxide is one of the most valuable white pigments and is produced by roasting and subliming certain ores of zinc. It is very opaque, has excellent spreading qualities and is generally mixed with basic carbonate of lead—white lead—for use in white paints. By thus combining these certain undesirable qualities of both are overcome. For instance, zinc oxide dries to a hard surface which does not stand changes of temperature as well as the softer lead pigment. On the other hand, it tends to eliminate the tendency toward chalking which the lead possesses. It is widely used as a base for delicate colors and in enamels.—Engineering Magazine.

Vulcanizing a Patch.

Several vulcanizations, one over the other, will make a better wearing patch, allowing plenty of time between them. Common gasoline now contains some grease and a higher grade should be used for cleaning the rubber. The casing should be left on the demountable rim and fully pumped up when vulcanized.—Automobile Dealer.

Increasing Engine Power.

It is a mistake to increase the power of an engine beyond the amount for which it was designed, no matter what means may be used. By so doing there is placed upon the working parts of both engine and chassis an excessive strain that may injure the whole car.

Lubricant For Axle Springs.

EXILE RISKS JAIL TO SAVE EYESIGHT

Court Lenient to Government Swindler Who Surrenders.

RETURN AMAZES OFFICIALS.

Fugitive Tells of Days of Agitation and Sleepless Nights He Spent Debating Alternative That Faced Him Either of Going Blind or Meeting Possibility of Prison Sentence.

A fugitive from justice for thirteen years, John F. Ehrgott, once a wealthy commission merchant, returned to New York to consult a specialist who, he believed, could save him from blindness. When Ehrgott gave himself up to the federal authorities he knew that he ran the risk of going to jail, but this possibility was eclipsed by his fear of losing his eyesight.

Roger B. Wood, chief of the criminal division of the United States attorney's office, was sitting at his desk when Ehrgott entered his room. He stared in amazement when the visitor said:

"I want to give myself up and plead guilty."

"I'd dearly love to accommodate you," replied Mr. Wood, "but really you have the bulge on me. I don't even know who you are."

"I'm Ehrgott," was the reply, "and I was indicted in 1902 for customs fraud. Now do you recall?"

Mr. Wood shook his head despairingly. Then he sent upstairs for Captain Ball, head of the federal indictment bureau, who has grown not only gray, but white in the federal service. Captain Ball remembered having drawn up the indictment charging Ehrgott with defrauding the government of at least $25,000 in duties on carloads of Canadian beans brought into this country free of duty because ostensibly bound for transhipment to Cuba.

Gets Off With Fine.

Assured of the identity, Mr. Wood summoned the latter's attorney, Abel I. Smith, and took the defendant before Judge Charles M. Hough in the United States district court, where Ehrgott entered a plea of guilty. Mr. Wood wanted the judge to give Ehrgott a substantial prison sentence, but the court was moved by Attorney Smith's statement that his client was suffering with diabetes and a severe affliction of the eyes. A fine of $1,000 was imposed on Ehrgott, and he was also served with a summons in a civil suit by which the government hopes to recover the full amount of the duties out of which it was defrauded.

Ehrgott's shipping scheme was exceptional in that it not only defrauded the government, but the consignee of the shipment as well. He was then senior partner of the firm of Ehrgott & Newman, commission merchants. Canadian beans ordered by this firm for shipment to Cuba were placed in a bonded warehouse in New York, where, through the connivance of certain government officials, it is said, a cheaper brand of American beans was substituted and sent on to Cuba as Canadian beans.

Swindled at Both Ends.

The Cuban consignees therefore had to pay a high rate of duty on American beans which they had bought at Canadian prices. In the meantime the firm of Ehrgott & Newman had acquired a consignment of expensive Canadian beans free of duty and for the price of American beans. This practice was continued by the firm for several years.

Arraigned on the indictment in 1902, Ehrgott gave cash bail of $15,000 and then forfeited it by fleeing to Nova Scotia. At Yarmouth he set himself up in the fish business and prospered. A few years ago he became afflicted with a bad eye trouble. He consulted Canadian and European specialists, but could get no relief. Then he was told that a specialist in New York could cure him.

Ehrgott told Mr. Wood of the days of agitation and the sleepless nights he spent debating the alternative that faced him—either of going blind or returning to face the possibility of a prison sentence. He finally decided to throw himself on the mercy of the court.

MORTGAGE ON POWER PLANT

Final Papers in Transaction Filed Yesterday With County Clerk

County Clerk Stanton reports that he and his official staff enjoyed one of their busiest days in the history of the office yesterday.

The filing of the papers completing the transfer of the Minetto-Meriden Company's plant at Minetto to the Columbia Mills, Inc., into which it has been merged and the trust mortgage of the Northern New York Power Company given to develop the power at the new State dam at Minetto was the cause of the cativity.

The mortgage is for $2,500,00, of which $900,000 is to be issued at once and the remainder, $1,600,000, when needed. The mortage tax of this transaction is $4,500, one of the largest ever received on property located in this county exclusively. One-half of this sum goes to the State of New York and the other half to the town of Oswego, where the property is situated.

Another interesting feature of the transaction is that the company pays $1,536 in United States war tax revenue taxes, the stamps being affixed to the deeds. Of this amount $975 is on the deed from the Minetto-Meriden to the Columbia Mills and $561 on that from the Shade Cloth to the Minetto-Meriden, May 20, 1908, and held in escrow since then. As each dollar of the tax represents $1,000 of valuation there appears to have been an appreciation in the value of the property of $414,000 in the past seven years.

The mortgage is given by the power corporation to the Metropolitan Trust Company of New York of which George C. Van Tuyl, Jr., former State superintendents of banks, is president. The bonds to be issued are in denominations of $1,000, $500 and $100 and are to bear interest semi-annually at 6 per cent. As stated $900,000 of the amount is of date January 1, 1915, and mature on January 2, 1940; the remaining amount of $1,600,000 bonds mature January 1, 1955. A sinking fund of 2½ per ent. per year is provided for, commencing January 1, 1919.

Work on the power plant is already under way the contract being in charge of the Witherspoon Company of Chicago which has a large force of men at work. The Northern New [illegible] er to the Salmon River Power Company and it will serve as an auxiliary plant furnishing power to the Empire United Railways and for commercial purposes.

Added to the $8,474.58 received yesterday by the county clerk as a share of the mortgage tax paid by the New York Central on its $100,000,000 trust mortgage filed several months ago, the receipts of the county from this source for April will break all monthly records.

BATTLE ISLAND CASE

Water Power Experts Will Testify in the Proceedings.

The case of the Battle Island Paper Company of this city against the tSate of New York infolving a claim for damages of $1,800,000 for damages caused by the construction of the Oswego Barge Canal will come up for trial in the Court of Claims in Syracuse next Thursday. It is expected that the case will cover at least a week as volumious testimony will be offered in evidence. Gannon, Spencer and Mitchell of Syracuse will appear for thec ompany, which is now in bankruptcy, with Charles N. Bulger, David T. Costello and Nelson P. Bonney acting as trustees.

Water power experts will testify, some to be produced on both sides and some from by the Columbia Trust Company of New York which has a mortgage on the company's $500,000 bond issue. Deputy Attorney-General Frank Mone assisted by Deputy Attorney-General Frank K. Cook will represent the State in thec ase. William Nottingham of Syracuse will represent the Columbia Trust company.

When the canal was constructed land owned by the company along with water power, a power house and transmission equipment was taken b ythe State. The dam at Battle Island was removed and that deprived the company of its valuable water power. The company went into bankruptcy in 1913 and if the claim is allowed the bondholders will not suffer any loss. Banks, for the most part, hold the company's bonds although there are many residents of this city who hold substantial blocks.

BARN DESTROYED; LOSS ABOUT $2,000

A new and modern barn owned by Adelbert Cates on the West River road, near Battle Island, was struck by lightning and completely destroyed during the electrical storm yesterday afternoon.

The stock in the barn was saved and most of the contents removed. The loss is estimated at from $1,800 to $2,000. Mr. Gates was insured in the Grange.

WAR MAKING MAN OF ENGLISH HEIR

Prince of Wales Serving at Front With His Regiment.

MUST NOT BE CAPTURED.

Life In the Open With Responsibilities Is Rapidly Developing the Slight, Rosy, Boyish, Twenty-year-old Prince. Lithe and Young, He Has Done His Twenty-five Miles a Day.

London.—The Prince of Wales, the twenty-year-old future king of England, faced Earl Kitchener in the war office one day last November and demanded that he be allowed to go to the front at once. Three months previously, at the very outbreak of the war, within a week of receiving his commission as a lieutenant in the First Grenadier guards, he had made the same request, but the secretary of war had refused it on the ground that the prince's military training had only just begun.

For a second time the lithe and slender subaltern stood before the great field marshal. He had thrown himself into his work with such enthusiasm and patriotic fervor that now, after only twelve weeks, he was fit and ready for active service. He had been so reported by his commanding officer.

Earl Kitchener listened to what the young man had to say. The British war lord is stern and unbending, but human. He knew the prince's spirit and talked with him as one soldier with another, not from a personal but from a national point of view. It went without saying that the prince was eager to fight and would do his duty just the same as any other officer, taking his chances of being killed or wounded with the rest.

That was not what was worrying Kitchener. He would mourn if anything happened to the Prince of Wales, but he knew that if the heir apparent did get killed there were plenty of other people to come to the throne of England. What concerned Lord Kitchener was this:

If the Prince of Wales were taken prisoner and held as a hostage by the Germans very serious embarrassment might be caused to the allies, and their plans for the final settlement of the war would be gravely hampered. This Earl Kitchener pointed out in his usual direct and forcible manner, but the young prince was not to be denied, and when he left the war office it was with the promise that he would be attached to Field Marshal French's staff at the headquarters of the British expeditionary force in France. On Nov. 16 the Prince of Wales crossed over from Folkestone to Boulogne and proceeded at once to St. Omer, where the headquarters' staff was then located.

From that day till April 10, when the Prince of Wales arrived in London bearing dispatches from the British commander in chief, he has regularly performed the arduous and dangerous duties of a dispatch rider.

The Prince of Wales is a slightly built and very high strung youth who looks two or three years younger than he really is. There is nothing in his uniform to distinguish him from any other staff officer.

Nearly four months elapsed from the day the prince reported for duty till Field Marshal French gave him twenty-four hours' leave. This was early in March, and instead of spending his time in the big white house in which he lives the prince ordered his car and, leaving the noncommissioned officer behind, took his brother officer and was on his way to Paris as fast as his car could carry him.

On his arrival he went to an old fashioned hotel in the Rue de Rivoli, facing the Tuileries gardens, and sent word of his presence to the British embassy in the Faubourg St. Honore. When the Right Hon. Sir Francis Bertie, the ambassador, heard about it he at once wired over to Buckingham palace, but the king and queen evidently decided not to interfere. So the ambassador called upon the Prince of Wales and took him round to lunch with President Poincare.

CLERK GETS BIG CHECK

The largest single check received by the Oswego County Clerk's office, at least in recent years, was received by County Clerk Stanton Tuesday from Register John J. Hopper of New York county, as Oswego county's share in the mortgage tax fee on the $10,000,000 mortgage of the New York Central Railroad Company, filed last year. The amount was $8,474.58. The largest check up to today was that paid by the Salmon River Power Company in connection with the mortgage on the Salmon River power plant, exceeding $5,000.

EUROPEAN TRAVEL HALTED BY WAR

As a Result $275,000,000 Stays In America.

OCEAN PATHWAY DESERTED.

Great Passenger Liners That Formerly Carried Thousands Back and Forth Now Doing Duty In the War or Tied Up at Their Piers In Neutral Ports. Statistics Show Loss to Europe.

New York.—A quarter billion dollars of good American money will be kept in this country this year on account of the war. There will be at least that much saved by the inability of the public to travel to Europe. Last year the steamship companies received in fares alone approximately $83,000,000, carrying eastward and westward more than 1,200,000 passengers. A conservative estimate fixes the amount spent by this traveling army at close to $192,000,000, making the total amount spent for European travel $275,000,000.

There will be no exodus to Europe this summer, however. The Great Green Way of the Atlantic is as lonely as New York's Great White Way on a summer Sunday night. This is the time of year when the rush across the ocean begins. The tide of travel sweeps east across the Atlantic from May till August and back again from August till the middle of October. But this year the tide hasn't set in and it won't set in. Uncle Sam is holding back the tide by refusing to issue passports, and on the other side of the ocean the kaiser's submarines prove an obstacle.

Nobody is going away who can't prove to the satisfaction of Uncle Sam that he or she has business in Europe. Doctors, Red Cross nurses, reserves, continue to go, but even their number is dwindling.

From all ports of the north Atlantic there left for Europe last year in four months just 27,727 passengers. During the same four months of this year the number of departures was 4,198, a falling off of 17,529. The westward sailings were 13,662 for the same period last year and this year 4,674, a deficit of 8,995.

The arrivals and departures at New York last year from and to Europe totaled an army of more than 1,200,000. Of this number 148,380 traveled first class, 241,810 in the second cabin and 813,743 in the steerage. The grand total to and from all north Atlantic ports was: Eastward—first class, 83,261; second class, 191,085; steerage, 479,232. Westward—first class, 90,840; second class, 238,347; steerage, 631,862.

The average first class fare across the Atlantic on little ships and big ships is $120, second class $50, and third or steerage $35. That means that last year $20,892,120 was paid the steamship companies for first class passages, $17,720,000 for second class and $44,892,120 for steerage, a total of $83,055,780.

Placing the amount of money spent during the season in Europe by the first class traveler at $1,000, the second class at $500 and the steerage at $100, a pretty good average of American contributions abroad will be the result. Computed by these figures the amount spent in Europe last year by the American traveling public would have been $124,736,700. That these figures are by no means overestimated will be realized when one stops to reflect that $10,000 for the season would be no money at all for each of 5,000 American families to dissipate. This would alone mean $50,000,000.

At a modest calculation there was spent last year by people from America on European travel $278,664,500; $300,000,000 would be, perhaps, nearer the mark. It is safe to say that the war has cost Europe $250,000,000 of American tourist money this year. That much cash in hand would do strange things. It would do wonders for the unemployed of the country. It's the ransom of a king and no bagatelle even to a Rockefeller. There will be just that much more money remaining in the United States this year.

The click of glasses and the clink of wealth are hushed. The stewards' tips are missing. The bands of music are silent. The $10,000,000 Vaterland of the Hamburg-American line is eating her head off at the dock in Hoboken. The $10,000,000 Imperator of the same line is a hospital ship at Bremen. The $10,000,000 ship Aquitania of the Cunard line is a converted cruiser, and the $10,000,000 Olympic of the White Star line has also been impressed by the British government. The France, the beautiful $8,000,000 queen of the French line fleet, is doing government duty for France. The North German Lloyd's Kronprinzessin Cecilie, Kaiser Wilhelm II. and Kronprinz Wilhelm have figured in the war.

More ships on the average are arriving here today than ever before. Steamers whose names are unfamiliar to customs men and shipping men have reached the port in the past six weeks, sometimes as many as ten a day. They come here under charter or looking for a charter to carry away American goods. All kinds of freight is being stowed away in their holds, all kinds of vessels are in demand. They can't come here fast enough to satisfy the merchants and manufacturers who have goods for foreign consumption.

MANUFACTURERS ARE INTERESTED IN SITES

The Division of Industries of the Chamber of Commerce met last night at the City Hall for the purpose of hearing Dr. J. E. Campbell and Thomas G. Smiley, members of the Traffic Managers' Association of the United States. Twenty-one members of the association were present and Director Redhead presided.

Mr. Smiley, who is secretary of the Traffic Managers' Association, gave a very interesting talk on traffic facilities and rates. He pointed out that co-operation among manufacturers had done much to procure better service and rates from railroads and steamship lines and after his address the Division of Industries discussed the plan of urging local manufacturers to join the Traffic Managers' Association.

The division will hold a meeting tonight at which time letters from out-of-town manufacturers will be read. These industries are interested in the city facilities here and two formal applications have already been received by the local body, from manufacturers who wish to locate here, if suitable inducements are offered. Representatives from the concerns have ben invited to come to this city to look over the situation, and there may be some officials at the meeting this evening.

BRITISH DEFEAT TURKS; MOVE ON THE STRAITS

London, Friday.—Serious fighting between the British and the Turks has occurred on the shores of Suvla Bay, on the west side of the Gallipoli Peninsula. Advices reaching London say the British drove back the Ottoman troops after capturing an entire battalion, and the detachment landed at that point is making excellent progress toward the interior.

The bombardment in the Dardanelles continues vigorously. The allied ships have reached Vrysey, in front of the Chanak forts, eight miles up the strait.

Information received here regarding the landing operations is meagre. It is reported the Allies have occupied the town of Maitos, as wll as the town of Gallipoli.

Large numbers of Turkish prisoners are being brought to Lemnos and Tenedos.

Although the accounts of the operations received here agree that the British and French are making excellent progress, it is stated that their losses have been very heavy.

The Athens correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says the real difficulties for the Allies' troops will only commence as they advance further into the interior, where the Turks have strong defences and heavy guns. The correspondent adds that the military authorities in Athens believe the campaign will be a long one.

No official announcement was made yesterday of the development of the operations against the Dardanelles, but press dispatches show that a sharp and active offensive is under way. The British have cleared all the Turks from the southern end of the peninsula for a distance of approximately two miles. This has been accomplished with the aid of the naval guns, and military observers here assume this means that the mobile batteries stationed at Seddul-Bahr by the Ottoman commanders either have been captured or forced to withdraw to the cover of the fortifications further to the northeast.

Concerning the division between the Allies of the task of forcing the Dardanelles the Exchange Telegraph Company's correspondent at Athens sends this message:

"The British force landed on the European coast of the Dardanelles has been entrusted solely with the mission of occupying the Gallipoli Peninsula, which is defended by 60,000 Turks.

"The French force has been landed entirely on the Asiatic coast, with the object of advancing along the littoral, to keep pace with the progress made by the British on the opposite coast."

AUSTRIAN TROOPS WEARING OUT IN CARPATHIANS

London, Friday.—The Morning Post's Petrograd correspondent telegraphs:

"Tactically the Russians are not attacking anywhere in the Carpathians. Strategically, they have gained such positions that the enemy must attack and continue to attack, at whatever disadvantage and at any cost. The moment the enemy slackens in his attack the Russian avalanche moves forward another step surely and inevitably.

"In the meantime these extremely costly attacks upon strongly fortified mountain defences are weakening the enemy's power of resistance and are simplifying subsequent operations for the Russians when climatic conditions render possible movements on a grand scale."

The case of Roy Hurlbut of Gouverneur and Edgar Cumm of Dannemora, the two young men who assaulted Rev. Wayland G. Bassett, a retired minister, at his home on Cayuga street Tuesday afternoon, was heard before Judge Wilson in the City Court this afternoon at 1.30 o'clock. The defendants were represented by Fred G. Spencer and Robert Pendergast appeared for Mr. Bassett.

In addressing the court, Mr. Spencer noted the fact that the two young men were charged with assault in the second degree, and stated that they had entered a plea of "not guilty." He informed Judge Wilson that the young men were willing to plead guilty to assault in the third degree in order to expidite the case, and that they asked the clemency of the court. Mr. Spencer said he did not care to review the case as there were som parts of it which, in his opinion, should not be given very great publicity. He asked the Court to accept the plea of guilty to assault in the third degree. Mr. Spencer also stated that he had looked up the records of the young men carefully, and that Cumm had been arrested once on a minor charge many years ago and sentenced to pay a fine, but that Hurlburt had never been arrested. Hurlburt has always born an excellent reputation in his home town, where his parents are living at the present time. Cumm, who hales from Dannemora, has a mother living and is married.

Mr. Pendergast stated that Mr. Bassett was not inclined to press the charge against the two men, nor did he wish them to go to jail for any length of time. Mr. Pendergast, however, made it plain that Mr. Bassett has been assaulted and wished the young men to be punished, but was willing that a fine only should be imposed.

Judge Wilson review the case and the testimony, which showed only one fact upon which he could act—namely, that Mr. Bassett was in his own home, and that his clothes and shirt were torn and evidenced an assault although the two young men claimed that they did not assault him. He touched on the counter-charge made by the young men, and said that might be true, but that Mr. Bassett had also made serious charges which could not be overlooked. In consideration of the past character of the defendants, and Mr. Bassett's attitude, however, Judge Wilson announced that he would not mete out a severe punishment. Accordingly he fined the men $15 each, and 30 days in the Oswego county jail, the jail sentence to be suspended if the fine was paid.

Hurlbut's uncle, who arrived in this city last night, immediately produced the fines and both young men left the city this evening.

BLAME BEARER TELLS OF POLITICAL ALLIANCE; BARNES VS. TAMMANY

William Loeb, jr., was back yesterday after a nine years' absence as chief blame bearer for Theodore Roosevelt. He took the witness chair and shouldered full responsibility for a very important count in Mr. Roosevelt's charge against Barnes.

In one of the most dramatic moments of the trial, Loeb, looking directly at Barnes, who has been his warm friend, testified that the Albany boss had told him of a bipartisan agreement with Murphy by which the Tammany boss was to have a free hand in the senatorial fight of 1911. It is this alleged bipartisanship on which the Colonel builds high hopes of justification for his attack.

While this blow was delivered Barnes gazed at the witness with a "You, too, Brutus?" expression on his large, rubicand face. Loeb, though picking his words with nervous care, never batted an eyelash as he told his story.

In further justification of his denunciation of Mr. Barnes, Colonel Roosevelt cited the opinion of no less a person than Governor Whitman, expressed in a hitherto unpublished letter to young Charles E. Hush, whose efforts to bring the Colonel and Whitman together last fall resulted in disaster.

This letter, while worded similarly to the letter Mr. Whitman repudiated in the fall campaign is on the paper of the New York district attorney's office and bears Mr. Whitman's signature.

The letter, denounced as a forgery, was initialed only. When Roosevelt said last fall that he had such a letter and could produce it if necessary, Mr. Whitman put him promptly into his own Ananias Club.

The Colonel's desire to show by this that he founded hist harges not on hearsay but on the statement of on official who was presumed to be qualified to speak with authority was brought out by his own testimony.

"Did you believe the statements contained in that letter to be true?" asked Mr. Van Benschoten, one of the Roosevelt lawyers.

"I did," said the Colonel with decision.

He added that he knew the writer of the letter, the positions he held and holds and that he believed the investigations referred to therein had been made by Mr. Whitman himself.

The Roosevelt side of the trial will

AIRCRAFT BOMBARDED ISPWICH AT MIDNIGHT

London, Friday.—A dispatch to the Daily News from Ipswich says that an airship appeared over the town tonight just after midnight, setting several buildings on fire.

A dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph from Ipswich says that five houses there were virtually destroyed by the bombs and that three others were badly and two slightly damaged. The dispatch adds that as far as is known there were no casualities in Ipswich.

The hostile aircraft, whether a Zeppelin or an aeroplane is not known, dropped several bombs. One struck a house in Bookahall road. It was an incendiary bomb and it pierced the roof and fell into the bedroom of a little girl. Some of the furniture was set afire, but the child was rescued by her father, Harry Goodwin.

The flames spread to two adjoining houses, which, within an hour, were almost destroyed.

Other bombs were dropped in Waterloo road. The aircraft then passed on to Whitton, where it also dropped explosives. So far as is known nobody was injured.

A dispatch says a Zeppelin was seen during the night at Bury St. Edmunds, Suffolk county, where it dropped bombs and set several buildings on fire.

Ipswich is in Suffolk county and is a town of considerable commercial importance. It has a population of some 75,000.

GERMANS COULDN'T USE GASES, WIND PREVENTED

London, Friday.—Only the direction of the wind, which prevented them using their asphyxiating gases, kept the Germans from beginning their drive through the Allied lines in Flanders on April 20, says the British "eyewitness" in a report of the battle of Ypres received last night. The unfavorable wind, he says, caused a postponement of the attack until the 22d.

The gas, the narrative says, was distributed along the German front line in front of the French position, and the wind being from the north it was blown directly on the French. The German plan, according to the report, was to make a sudden onslaught southwestward, which, if successful, would enable the Germans to gain crossings of the canal south of Bixschoote and place them well behind the British line and in a position to threaten Ypres.

"Allowing time for the vapors to take full effect on the troops facing them," says the "eyewitness," "the Germans charged forward over the practically unresisting enemy in their immediate front, and, penetrating through the gap thus created, pressed on silently and swiftly to the south and west. By their sudden irruption they were able to overrun and surprise a large proportion of the French troops billeted behind the front line in this area and to bring some of the French guns, as well as our own, under a hot rifle fire at close range."

The writer then tells how the Germans, bringing up strong reinforcements, "and again using gas," captured St. Julien and managed to throw several brigades across the canal. The British made a strong counter attack on Sunday, and, while they gained some ground, it stopped in front of the village of St. Julien. The Germans, the narrative adds, made repeated attacks against the British near Broodseinde, backed by a tremendous artillery bombardment and gas, but they all were driven off "with great slaughter to the enemy."

SHOULD LIMIT USE OF TWILIGHT SLEEP

Buffalo, Friday. — That twilight sleep does not produce painless child-birth; that it administration should be limited to selected cases and that it is still fraught with danger to mother and child, were some of the conclusions advanced at the closing session of the 109th meeting of the State Medical Association here yesterday by Dr. A. J. Rong, of New York.

Dr. Rong said he was not opposed to the Freiburg system. He believed it ideal in many instances. But, he said, it held dangers and emergencies that called for the resources of the most skilled surgeon.

Dr. Bertha Van Hoosen of Chicago took an opposite view, stating that it held no dangers and expressing the belief that it soon would become universal.

FORMER PASTOR HAS RESIGNED

Was at One Time Pastor in This City—Nature of Charges Preferred Unknown

From Potsdam comes news that the Rev. S. T. Dibble, pastor of the M. E. church there, has resigned, to take effect immediately. His resignation was accepted. It is reported that charges were preferred against Mr. Dibble by the Rev. H. W. Markham, District Superintendent of the St. Lawrence district, but the charges were not presented to the church board as in the meantime the accused pastor offered his rsignation.

The Rev. Mr. Dibble has held a number of charges in the Ontario district. He was at Fulton for a number of years and in New Haven. At the recent conference here a unanimous request for his return to Potsdam was granted by Bishop Hamilton. For six years Mr. Dibble was district superintendent of the Ontario district.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE CANNOT DO IT ALL

Everybody heartily favors the present movement for the unified Chamber of Commerce in this city.

Everybody believes that the organization will bring results of great and permanent value.

There are, however, certain facts which are being overlooked. It is the observation of many men of experience who have watched the work of commercial bodies, that:

A Chamber of Commerce can never take the place of individual enterprise.

Its function lies in improving internal conditions which affect the opportunity to grow; influencing external conditions which bear on the local situation; and, indirectly advertising the city through making it a better city.

The Evening Times believes that the foregoing will be accomplished, to the end that Fulton's name and fame shall become advertised abroad, yet at the same time, little can be done unless the spark of enthusiasm is put into each individual citizen.

It is useless for the business men of Fulton to look to the new Chamber of Commerce to serve them individually, to do for them the business promotion they ought to be doing for themselves.

It is our duty to bury prejudices, to forget precedent, to lay aside selfish ambitions and go to work for the good of the whole city of which each one of us is but one part?

The numerous sub-divisions of the Chamber of Commerce are composed of the best of the city's manhood and womanhood, but unless we redouble our efforts to develop our businesses by our own energy, our enthusiasm and by modern methods of selling, we may stumble over the success that lies in our pathway.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

Lest they forget, the Women's Political Union is sending out a daily suffrage argument to each of the 168 members of the New York State Constitutional Convention.

* * *

"Woman Suffrage," declared State Senator McNichol of Pennsylvania, "will break up the home," and then he introduced a housing bill into the legislature that would prevent homes from getting proper protection, sanitation, and a clean water supply, and fire escapes, if the home happened to be in a tenement.

* * *

The Housewives' League now numbers 750,000 members and this means, according to its president, Mrs. Julian Heath, that the housewife is at last class-conscious; that at last she is going to take an active part in the laws passed affecting the home; that no longer is she going to play the passive part.

Mrs. Heath's experience, as leader in this program led her into the suffrage fold. If, like a good bell-weather sheep, she leads her flock in after her, woman suffrage stands to gain a host of new supporters.

The woman suffrage west is coming to the support of the suffrage campaigns in the east. An organization for this purpose called the Women Voters' Campaign Alliance has been formed representing the women of the twelve equal suffrage states.

On May first it will send organizers into New Jersey. It will concentrate on one congressional district. If suffrage fails to carry in the state at large, they may win this one congressman and so strengthen the woman suffrage amendment in Congress.

After the New Jersey election the organizers will go into Massachusetts and pursue the same policy until election day. This year New York and Pennsylvania will be left to run their own campaigns.

In Denmark, since 1912, woman suffrage has been about to happen, but at the last minute, the opposition has been able to block the way. At last the bill has passed and the way seems clear, and in June it is expected that the King will sign a law making men and women vote on equal terms at all elections.

* * *

The D. A. R. is a conservative organization. Mrs. William Cumming Story, President General, does not believe that suffrage should be introduced into a patriotic society. But Mrs. Story, in her private capacity is a member of the Congressional Union for Woman Suffrage and many blows were struck for suffrage during the recent D. A. R. Congress both on the platform and off.

At the New Willard the delegates were the guests at a brilliant reception given them by the Congressional Unions and the distinguished people in the receiving line must have removed the last trace from the mind of anyone of the idea that votes for women was advocated only by queer and undesirable persons.

Opinions

Wasting the People's Money

As the fiscal year draws to an end the effects of the Federal administration's financial mismanagement stand out more and more clearly. They can no longer be covered up by vague assurances that things are going to take a turn for the better before June 30 next.

A month ago Senator Simmons, the chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, gave out a soothing statement intended to offset the harsh criticism of the administration's spendthrift policy indulged in by Mr. Fitzgerald, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives. The North Carolina senator admitted that in spite of the additional internal revenue taxes imposed by Congress to take effect on December 1, 1914, the Treasury had, from July 1, 1914, to March 19, 1915, run behind $86,269,000. Comparing this year's operations with those of 1913-1914, the loss averaged about $7,000,000 a month, since on March 19, 1914, there was a net deficit of about $23,000,0000. Adopting the familiar "psychological" method, the Senator contended that the ratio of loss would certainly decline in the lost quarter of the year, covering April, May and June.

It has not declined so far, since on April 24 the excess of ordinary expenditures over ordinary receipts stood at $100,033,000, and the loss, compared with the year preceding, was $70,000,000 for ten months—still $7,000,000 a month. Yesterday the administration grew optimistic again and published a statement estimating the sum to be collected this year from income taxation at $80,000,000. But even if $80,000,000 comes in before June 30 on the income tax account it will have to offset an excess of expenditure of about $114,000,000, and there will be a $34,000,000 deficit.

Last year there was a surplus of $33,784,000, so that the Treasury will have been set back in one year about $67,000,000. It would have been set back nearly $80,000,000 if the government hadn't sold the battleships Idaho and Mississippi to Greece. Next year unless the emergency internal revenue taxes are reenacted and still other taxes are imposed, there may be a deficit of more than $50,000,000.

Economy has never interested President Wilson. He made no protest whatever when the last Congress increased expenditures by $113,000,000. Now he and his party face the necessity of either borrowing money on which to run the government or levying still more taxes. Next year is a Presidential year. Boosting taxation to cover over reckless expenditure will be no more popular with the country at large than it is going to be in this state, where our own Legislature has unfortunately followed the spendthrift example of Congress. —N. Y. Tribune.

Would Restore State Convention

It is significant that one of the first suggestions submitted to the Constitutional Convention is a proposal to restore the State conventions of parties. The proposition is made by a Democrat, John G. Saxe, former counsel to Governor Glynn. Mr. Saxe believes the State convention should be reinstated as a part of the nominating system of the State, except in odd number years, when there is only an occasional vacancy in State offices to be filled. Mr. Saxe said that he favored direct primaries where they are workable, but he declares they are not feasible in application to the State offices of New York.

There is no doubt that the idea of restoring the convention system in respect to nominations for State offices has a very strong opinion to support it throughout the State. THE TIMES, which was one of the first, and most energetic champions of the direct primary, and has all along supported that cause, at the time when the controversy was at its hottest, showed that State nominations should be excepted from the general system, and it believed, and still believes, that its reasons are convincing.

The State convention was eliminated by the Legislature which adopted the present law, in response to what was then the evident trend of public opinion, on the principle that as the people apparently wanted the system of direct nominations made universal, they should be given what they wanted. But there has been a great change of the public mind in this respect. To restore the State convention now, would, in our opinion, be to proceed on the very principle which caused the State convention to be abolished—that of giving the people what they want. An experiment anyway, the doing away with the State convention has not proven a successful experiment. Today the public realizes that.—Buffalo Times.

ON THE RIALTO

W. A. Harriman, the heir to millions, is working for the State Fair Association at Syracuse for the paltry sum of $2,000 per year. That hardly keeps him in Fatimas, but he evidently considers $2,000 in the pocket better than two million in the bush. And at the same time he is learning economy—think of it!—having to live on $2,000 a year.

Residents along Riverside Drive (East First street) are loud in their complaints about the condition of the west bank of the river, while the Edgewater residents come back with the assertion that the east bank is far worse. There is no gain-saying the fact that the west bank is in pretty bad shape, particularly behind the cottages occupied by the Polish people, who evidently dump their ashes on the bank. The west side of the river could be improved into a very beautiful bank. A party of business men made an inspection of the east side Wednesday and discovered that several occupants and owners of buildings in the down-town section were dumping refuse along the canal bank. So it's about fifty-fifty—and both sides have little cause to complain, although some action should be taken at once.

Fulton cafe owners are warned that a "Fly-inspector" is touring this section of the state. His plan of action is to enter a place of liquid refreshment, absorb a few "with collars" and then walk to the door. In Manlius yesterday, the vigilant bar-keep blocked his path at that stage of the proceedings and asked for the pay for the drinks. The man very haughtily explained that he was a "State Fly Inspector" and never paid for drinks. Properly impressed the bar-keep let him go, and when the police department of Manlius looked for the man later, he could not find him. For his own sake, we advise him to pass up this town, for there are no flies on the Fulton mahogany polishers in this warm weather.

Wanted—Man Cleaner at The Pontiac. Apply to housekeeper.

After noting the fact that The Pontiac has, at present, a fairly efficient force of waiters, hat-boys, etc., an advertisement for a man cleaner seems extravagance. The average is pretty clean now when he leaves The Pontiac, but it is presumed that the waiters have become dilatory, and have neglected to corral a few stray quarters—consequently the ad. for an expert.

BUFFALO'S NEW CITY CHARTER

Commission Form of Government Fully Explained.

THE MAYOR HOLDS OVER.

Legislative Act Calls the Commission "the Council of the City of Buffalo." No Provision in the New Charter For the Initiative and the Recall.

By HAROLD J. BALLIETT, Former City Clerk of Buffalo.

Buffalo on Jan. 1, 1916, is to be governed by a commission of five men. Four commissioners are to be elected at the regular election next November. Mayor Louis P. Fuhrmann, the present chief executive of the city, holds over for two years and becomes mayor and head of the new commission. This makes the five members provided for under the law.

The act passed by the legislature calls the commission "the council of the city of Buffalo." It says the council shall consist of the mayor and four councilmen, whose terms of office shall be four years save that of the four councilmen first elected. The one receiving the least number of votes shall hold office for two years and the other three for four years. The salary of the mayor is to be $8,000 a year, and the salary of each of the councilmen will be $7,000 per year.

© by Pubs.

MAYOR LOUIS P. FUHRMANN OF BUFFALO

Three members of the council, according to the legislative act, constitute a quorum, and the affirmative vote of three members shall be necessary to adopt any motion, resolution or ordinance or to pass any measure unless a greater number is required by the provisions of the act.

Meetings of the council shall be public. Stated meetings shall be held at such times as the council shall prescribe by ordinance. Upon every vote of the council the ayes and noes shall be called and recorded. The mayor shall preside at the meetings. He shall have no power of veto. In his absence the council may choose a temporary chairman. Every resolution or ordinance passed by the council must be signed by the mayor or by two councilmen and must be properly recorded before it shall be of force. The council is vested with power to enact ordinances. All ordinances are to be published in the official paper daily for one week. The council shall appoint and may at pleasure remove a city clerk and fix the salary to be paid him. The city clerk may be also the secretary of the council.

The executive and administrative powers of the city are vested in the council, excepting the city court, the children's court and the civil service, railroad terminal and grade crossing commissions. The council's powers may at the council's discretion be exercised through the five following city departments: Department of public safety, department of finance and accounts, department of public affairs, department of public works and department of parks and buildings.

The mayor shall be the superintendent of the department of public safety, which shall include the subordinate departments of police, fire and health. It shall be the duty of the mayor to acquaint himself with the conduct of each of the other city departments and from time to time report thereon to the council.

The council shall, at its first regular meeting after election of its members, designate a councilman to head each department. Such designations may continue through the terms of office of such councilmen, but shall be changed whenever it appears to the council that the public service will be benefited thereby.

The council shall, at its first meeting or as soon as practicable thereafter on the nomination of the mayor, appoint the following officers: A corporation counsel, superintendent of education, assessor or assessors, street commissioner, water commissioner, building commissioner, health commissioner, chief of fire department, chief of police, superintendent of markets, superintendent of poor, members of the board of education, city engineer, city treasurer and city auditor, and shall also appoint such other officers and deputies on the nomination of the councilman at the head of the department affected as shall be provided for by ordinance and in the judgment of the council necessary to the proper and efficient conduct of the affairs of the city.

Any officer or employee appointed by the council may by it be removed from office, except as provided by law, and his successor appointed by it at any time.

The council shall appoint the municipal civil service commissioners. They shall hold office for a term of four years unless removed by the council upon charges and after a hearing.

Any citizen can become a candidate for a nomination for councilman by circulating a petition and securing the signatures of 200 qualified voters. Voters can sign as many petitions as there are offices to be filled. For instance, four councilmen are to be elected next fall. Any voter, if he desires, can sign the petitions of four candidates.

On the third Tuesday before the general election the primary election shall be held. The polls will be open from 6 a. m. to 9 p. m. Candidates will not run under any party emblem, but be designated by name only. The eight men receiving the largest number of votes each will be declared the nominees. At the general election the four men receiving the highest number of votes each will be the commissioners.

There is no provision in the new charter for the initiative and the recall. The referendum is provided for in a special section. The referendum, or special election, may be had upon any ordinance or franchise passed by the council with which the people are dissatisfied. If within thirty days after its passage a petition signed by at least 5 per cent of the voters who voted for mayor at the last preceding election, is filed with the council, the election must be called within twenty days. An ordinance voted upon shall not go into effect unless a majority of the voters vote against its repeal.

No franchise or permission to occupy or use any of the streets, highways, bridges or public places of the city by a person, firm, corporation or association for the purpose of installing or extending a system of waterworks, gas, electric light or power, heating, telegraph, telephone, railway (whether street, surface, overhead or underground) or any public service utility that requires the occupation of any such highway or other public place shall be valid until it has been granted by the council, and has been thereafter approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon at a general election, or at a special election to be ordered by the council. The cost of any such special election shall be borne by the person, firm, corporation or association seeking the franchise.

GARDEN CLUB IN SPOKANE.

Vacant Lots and Back Yards Are Cultivated and Beautified.

This, the fifth year of the Spokane Home Garden club, organized and conducted by the Young Men's Christian association and the Spokesman-Review, finds the club serving as a model for similar civic movements all over the country. More than fifty cities have written to the Y. M. C. A. for details of the plan by which for the past four years Spokane young people have welcomed the warm spring days by converting cluttered back yards into copiously herbiferous gardens. Letters have come from districts as widely separated as the Adirondack mountains and the Sacramento valley. Women's clubs, civic uplift organizations and other branches of the Y. M. C. A. have written for information.

It is in the cultivation of vacant lots and back yards that the Home Garden club has during the last few years shown its value as a city beautiful aid. Besides removing from the public eye a great many unsightly lots on which the accumulation of winter refuse was thick, the club last year produced vegetables whose total value is estimated by Secretary G. A. Forbes of the Y. M. C. A. at $6,000.

Active co-operation is being given by the federal government, which, through the department of agriculture, is organizing the boys and girls of many cities into garden clubs, potato clubs, corn clubs and the like. T. J. Newbill of the department of agriculture will represent the government in Spokane this spring and will advise the Home Gardeners in matters pertaining to gardening efficiency. Mr. Newbill says: "I find that boys and girls make a more profitable circle than grownups for the distribution of government seeds and literature. They are more in earnest, and they are not so likely to disregard the instructions of government experts."

NEIGHBORHOOD CLEANUP.

Even if your town doesn't have a regular cleanup week your neighborhood can have one of its own. Ask your friends and have them ask theirs. Set a date for cleaning up and get the children interested. Get all your refuse together in some vacant lot and then, some evening, have a big bonfire. You'll be burning disease and unhappiness along with the rubbish.

And after it is gone, plant flowers where it was.

If your town is one of the 151 in this country which have regular cleanup weeks every year you owe it to yourself and to your neighbors to take part with a vim.

Fresh rolls. The kind served by your grocer and all grocers, gives zest to the breakfast appetites. At all grocers every evening, made at Black's bakery. adv1f2

OFFICIAL WAR BULLETINS

GERMAN

Berlin, Thursday, via London.—The German War Office today made public the following official communication:

"Our positions on the west bank of the canal north of Ypres and on the Yperlee Brook, near Steenstraate, were attacked yesterday afternoon without interruption, but without success.

"East of the canal an attack by French, Algerian and British troops failed yesterday evening with heavy losses to the enemy. The number of guns captured north of Ypres has been brought up to sivty-three.

"The enemy unsuccessmully exploded mines on the La Bassee-Bethune Railway, north of Les Mesnil, in Champagne. At Les Mesnil French night attacks against positions which we had taken were repulsed with heavy losses to the enemy. French soldiers taken prisoners by us here were in a lamentable condition. They trembled with fear, as their officers had told them they would be killed if captured by the Germans.

CARRYING FIREARMS

Albany, Friday.—First offenders convicted hereafter of carrying firearms will be guilty only of a misdemeanor. Governor Whitman has signed the Joseph bill making this change in the law. The measure also makes carrying a bomb a felony.

SENIORS SPENT $1,079,111.

Difference in Expenses of Richest and Poorest Yale Students.

New Haven.—The members of the Yale class of 1915 will get their diplomas in June at a total cost of $1,079,111, according to the expense accounts of the men who gave the figures in their personal statistics published in the Yale News.

The figures show the great difference in the financial resources of the men who go to Yale and testify to the continued existence of democracy there. In freshman year, which is the most expensive, the most affluent man spent $4,500, while the most frugal got his education for a cash outlay of $200.

Perhaps due to parental conferences over freshman year's expense accounts or to the financial depression, the richest man in sophomore year spent but $3,800, while the poorest man spent $200 cash. The average for the year was $1,076 a man. Last year the average expenses a man were $1,106, individual expenses varying from $4,800 to $200. This year the richest man expects to spend a total of $3,100, the poorest man $250.

PIED PIPER ENOUGH "PIE."

Quits Rat Catching When He Buys a Boat.

Galveston, Tex.—Charles Bertolina, the Galveston Pied Piper, has turned in his badge and will not be seen catching rats along the water front and the beach for some time. Charles is the champion rat catcher of Galveston. For the past several months he has been taking the rodents at the rate of 2,000 per month.

For this service he received the regular price paid for rats and in addition was given a bonus of $10 provided he caught as many as 1,000 in thirty days.

When Charles began his career as a rat catcher he said he would quit when he had made enough money to buy a boat and a gasoline engine. Recently he made the purchase and then appeared at the health office and laid down his commission.

The latest record made by Charles was 1,028 rats in sixteen days. For these he was paid at the rate of 8 and 10 cents each and given a bonus of $10.

FRENCH

Paris.—The following official communication was issued by the War Office today:

"The day has been calm. During the nights of April 28-29 two German attacks—the one against the Belgian troops to the north of Ypres, and the other at Les Eparges—were easily repulsed."

"In Belgium we have continued to progress, in conjunction with Belgian troops, in a northerly direction. On the right bank of the Yser Canal we took 150 prisoners, as well as two machine guns.

"There is nothing new on the heights of the Meuse nor in the Vosges.

"The enemy has bombarded by means of flying machines and using incendiary shells the open town of Epernay, occupied exclusively at the time by hospital detachments.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By Frederic T. Cardoze

Albany, April 30.—Although both houses of the legislature have favorably acted upon several hundreds of bills which are now before the executive, the mere passing of the measure does not necessarily imply that they are to become laws or that all effort to either prevent the governor from approving or sanctioning them should cease. As a matter of fact efforts have not been relinquished by members of the law-making body to convince the governor that their measures which are before him are just and much needed propositions. It is also true in many cases that opposition to bills which have been passed are just as ardently striving to have Governor Whitman veto them.

During the next few days announcements will be made to the effect that public hearings will be given upon certain bills. The hearings will be held in the Executive chamber before the Governor. In some instances arguments will be waged against and in others for bills which are awaiting the disposition of the governor.

The fight to defeat or have a bill enacted is usually continued until the end of the thirty day period when all bills left over by the legislature must be disposed of by the governor. This year has proved no exception in that a number of applications for hearings upon bills have been received by the executive.

During the closing day of a legislative session the order of business is extremely rapid and it is next to impossible to find out just what bills have been passed or left on the committee files to die. It is because of this that there has been much uncertainty as to the fate of legislation which was in the custody of the Assembly committee on Rules last Saturday. A list of all measures before the governor, however, has just been printed, so that it is now possible to determine what bills were either smothered in committee, defeated on the floor of either house or passed by both branches of the legislature.

Over five hundred 30-day bills have been sent to Governor Whitman for his action, yet he will not be permitted to devote his entire time to their perusal. The bills cover a great variety of subjects which range from appropriations to amendments to the civil code.

Governor Whitman is assisted in his work of examining the raft of bills which were passed in the last few days of the session, by his legal adviser, who goes over the measures with him. By taking up the bills under their separate heads a subject is dealt with much more readily.

Unless the subject matter of a bill is of great moment, it is the custom of an executive to sign and make public a number of bills at the same time. Each day a batch of new laws are announced and thus the number of measures awaiting attention becomes steadily less. The most important bills are left until the last, if there is anything in the subject matter which requires unusual study.

Each day there is a galaxy of legislators in the Executive chamber, each member of which is eager to say something favorable to the governor concerning his legislation. Many local bills are the cause of concern on the part of the member who has introduced it. Governors are usually generous with this form of legislation.

WATERTOWN MARKET AFFORDS LOW PRICES

Watertown, Friday.—A number of people are wondering when the public market, which was conducted in Public Square last fall, will resume operations. So far this spring no effort has been made to open it. It is believed, however, that as soon as the weather gets a little more settled the teams will again stand on the curb and the economical housewife will be on the lookout for bargains. Of course the spring does not afford such a wide range of salable articles as the fall, but eggs, parsnips and a few other articles of farm produce could be sold. Last fall the common council designated Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, until 9 a.m., for market days. Later Wednesdays and Saturdays were designated and the time was lengthened one hour.

The market met with very much success last fall. There would be anywhere from one to two dozen rigs on the market and the number of buyers would sometimes reach a hundred or more. The buyers werep rincipally women and they showed that the days of the market basket were by no means gone. As early as 7 in the morning there would be buyers on hand with market baskets, and they showed themselves to be careful buyers. As a rule the price for produce on the market was from two to five cents lower than at the stores.

Those interested in the market say that with the coming of summer, fresh vegetables, such as lettuce, corn, peas, beans, etc., could be purchased on the market within a few hours after they had been picked.

KATZ SETTLEMENT.

Federal Court Confirms Settlement of M. Katz Company.

Utica, Friday—Judge Ray has confirmed the settlement of M. Katz & Co., with its creditors. The order was filed yesterday in Federal court at Utica and provides that 25 cents on the dollar be paid to the creditors.

L. W. Emerick, receiver, representing the Fulton National Bank of Gloversville, objected to the fees for the attorneys, and Judge Ray reduced them by 350. Judge Ray in the order says that as it appears that it is for the best interests of everybody he approves the settlement. The order was granted upon motion by Giles S. Piper of Fulton, attorney for the company, and for Max and David Katz individually. The order provides that prior claims shall be paid first, then the costs and the general creditors, and the balance shall remain on deposit for twelve months, subject to the order of the court. If any then remains, it will be turned over to the company. The bankruptcy proceedings are ordered dismissed.

Attorney William A. McDonald of Gloversville, who represented the firm along with Attorney Piper is allowed $500, and Mr. Piper is granted $600. Referee Avery S. Wright is given 160; John R. Sullivan, W. A. Butts and Floyd Spangle, all of this city, were the appraisers and are allowed $15 each. L. W. Emerick, receiver, is given $150 as expenses. There were 350 creditors, widely scattered, to whom checks will be mailed for their amounts.

STUDENTS AS FARM HELPERS

In an effort to make sure that the students of the state college of agriculture at Cornell have sufficient practical farm experience, the college authorities are working on a plan by which these students will be given employment on farms throughout the state during the summer months.

The college authorities are seeking first-hand information about farms which are run on a business basis and with up-to-date farming methods, and where the owners will take an interest in the students. The college plans to locate the students on these farms as laborers. Some of them may be able to bring to the farm special knowledge and help in the solution of special problems, but it is expected that they will be paid only for the work which they do, on a basis of what they are worth to the farmer.

Candidates for degrees in agriculture from Cornell are required to have practical experience on farms. Some of the students who attend the college are from city communities and do not have such experience, and the practical work which they will receive through the new arrangement will not only be of value to them in future farm activities, but will make it possible for them to be graduated from the college.

SILVERMAN DID NOT GET HIS DISCHARGE

Judge Ray in U. S. District Court has signed an order denying the application of Barney Silverman of Fulton for discharge from bankruptcy. The court confirmed the report of Avery S. Wright, of Oswego, who as special master conducted a hearing April 3.

The special master found that the bankrupt had knowingly and fraudulently concealed $2100 of his assets from the trustee, Albert T. Jennings.

A petition in bankruptcy was filed against Silverman with the clerk of the United States Court at Utica on Jan. 18 1913, and Judge Ray granted an order at that time directing Silverman to turn over all his assets to the receiver.

About a year ago he filed a petition with the court asking for his discharge from bankruptcy. The trustee, represented by Attorneys McGowan and Stolz, appeared in objection to the application and alleged that the bankrupt had false and fraudulently concealed his assets. Judge Ray referred th matter to Mr. Wright as special master.

"A HERALD OF PROGRESS"

The Job Uncle Ben Did

By SADIE OLCOTT.

"Uncle," asked a little white child of a septuagenarian negro in Alabama, "were you in the war between the states?"

"Yes, honey, I war in de wah. Leastaways I war dar."

"Did you kill anybody, uncle?"

"No, I didn't kill nobody, but I saved somebody's life."

"How was that? Tell me about it."

"Well, honey, when de wah broke out all de niggers on de ole plantation"—

"Why do you say 'the old plantation?'"

"'Case de plantations now ain't what dey was den. Now dey all cut up, some of 'em owned by de niggers. Den dey wah big and lots o' niggers on 'em. As I wah a-sayin', honey, most all de niggers wo'kin' on de ole plantation dug out 'cept me. My mars', yo' great-grandpop, wah mighty kind to me, and I wasn't a field hand. I did jobs about de house. I wah a carpenter and could make anything dat wah needed on de premises.

"Yo' great-grandpop went off to de wah, and yo' grandpop went off to de wah. De Yankees cum down hyer and took persession. De ole plantation didn't look like it did no mo' after de Yanks cum. Dey used up de fences fo' firewood and run off all de stock.

"Yo' grandpop wah gwine to marry yo' grandma 'bout dat time. Yo' grandpop when he went to de wah lef' Missy Lucy what he war gwine to marry with his mudder. One day when de Yanks war hyer yo' grandpop, Marse Edward, cum through de lines fo' to visit Missy Lucy. He wah dressed in common folks' clothes, case he had no business, bein' an ossifer in de south'n army, to be in among de Yanks. While he wah visitin' his ma and his sweetheart one o' de ole plantation hands cum in and said dat somebody tole de Yanks dat he war dah. Dey wah comin' some time in de night to take him.

"Marse Edward wah cotched like a 'possum in de trap. He dassen't light out, fo' de Yanks had cum dat day and camped all about, and he dassen't stay where he wah. Yo' grandma sent fo' me and she says, says she:

"'Ben, Marse Edward come hyer to see me. Ef de Yanks cotch him hyer dey hang him fo' a spy. Can't yo' make somep'n what he kin hide in dat dey won't suspec'?'

"I scratched my head and done a lot o' thinkin'. Den I said, 'I don't know, missy, wot I kin do unless I make a double bottom to de wood box, wha he kin crawl in.'

"'De berry t'ing,' said missy, and I went to wo'k right off. De wood box wah in de kitchen and wah a great big un. I cut up some boa'ds and put in a bottom high 'nough fo' a man to lay down under, leabin plenty o' cracks fo' breathin'. I hadn't mo'n got it done when Miss Lucy seen de Yanks surroundin' de house. Marse Edward got in under de wood, and dere wah a loud rap at de do'. Missy tol' me to go to de do', and I went.

"'Who dah?' I axed.

"'Open de do' right off,' said a man. I opened de do', and without askin' leave dey scattered all ober de house, lookin' fo' yo' grandpa, Marse Edward. Dey sarched from de garret to de cellar, lookin' into de closets and under de beds and in de cubberd in de dinin' room. When dey cum to de kitchen I wah dar, and I had de lef' hand corner ob my right eye lookin' right at 'em. De rest ob my eyes was on de wood box. Dinah wah cookin' de supper on de stove. Seein' an ossifer lookin' at de wood box, I went to de stove, pulled open de do' and says to Dinah:

"'Wha' fo' you let dis fire go out?' And I goes to de wood box and throws up de lid, and I tak' out an armful o' wood and puts it in de stove.

"Ef dat ossifer had any idee dat anybody war hidin' in dat wood box I put it out ob his head right off. De ossifer kep' right on [illegible] cellar. After huntin' all ober de house he comes up to me and he say:

"'Yo' niggers know yo' own folks, don't yo?'

"'Reckon,' I says, with a wink in de lef' hand corner ob my right eye.

"'Den tell me whar de spy is hidin'.'

"I put my mouf down close to he year, and I says sof'ly:

"'Look in de smokehouse.'

"With dat he drawed off he men from de house, and I reckon he went out to de smokehouse, fo' I didn't heah nothin' mo' from him.

"When de Yanks had gone away we uns had a con'ul'sation how Marse Edward gwine to git out o' de trap. De way he done it war to rub he face with soot, and Missy Lucy she kinked he hair with her curlin' tongs, and he put on darky clothes, and he jist walked through de Yankees as ef he war as much a Yankee as any ob 'em. Nex' day he rode into de Yankee lines under a white flag with some south'n prisoners.

"Who d'y' s'pose war de fust Yankee he met?"

"I don't know, uncle; tell me."

"De ossifer wot wah huntin' fo' him de day befo'. Marse Edward had saw him through a crack and knowed him right off. Marse Edward larfed and tole him 'bout it all, but said he wasn't a spy; he only cum to see his ma and Missy Lucy.

"No, honey, I didn't kill nobody dur'in' de wah, but I did a might' good job sabin' yo' grandpop's life. Ef I didn't do dat yo' wouldn't been hyer nohow."

CHARMING CREATION.

Street Frock Which Has Many Salient Style Points.

CHIC AND SMART TOILET.

Never in one season has there been such a diversity of fashions. The frock shown in the illustration has many new and striking style points, most salient of which are the pockets. Everything this year has pockets. Belts, separate skirts, shirt waists and sports coats revel in them, and the dressier garments have adopted them also.

This gown is of blue gabardine, a fabric and color which are very popular this season. The waist is in semi-coat effect, and the sleeves are the new and very popular bell shape. A beaded belt confines the front, and the back of the bodice is rather intricately draped. The tunic is full and is finished by a hem, while the narrow under skirt, which shows all the way up the front, has a corded French hem as a finish.

AMERICAN UNIFORM.

What Milady Would Wear Were She to Take Up Arms.

If the American woman is suddenly called upon to take up arms in defense of her native land she will be prepared in so far as an attractive uniform is concerned. Blue, of course, is the prevailing color in feminine uniforms. The material is gabardine of the spring weight, which readily lends itself to plaiting schemes. The plaits are found chiefly in the skirts, always very full and nearly always of ankle length, for the high topped shoe goes with the military uniform walking costume, and that shoe is so trim that to conceal any part of it would be a pity. One of the plainest of these models has a skirt so severely cut that, while it fits without a wrinkle over the hips, it falls in loose pleats below them. They do not drop inward about the ankles, however, although there is no apparent scheme for making them stand out.

Hats and Parasols Match.

Throughout the past winter we became accustomed to the sets consisting of matching toque, muff and collar—of fur, chiffon, velvet and satin. Now we shall see matching hats and parasols to use with them. They are very pretty, and often figured chiffon is employed in their making—over silk for the parasol, over straw for the hat.

JEWELRY CHANGES.

Since so many of the spring fashions boast of peasant origin the jewelers have bethought themselves to put out copies of peasant antique brooches suitable to accompany the quaint frocks and blouses of the period. Many of these introduce a note of color, and the design is unusual in its metal combinations. Much of this jewelry has come direct from Europe, and others represent domestic copies of the same.

Quite new are the pearl and jet neckties represented in long, single strings of pearl beads not larger than the size of seed pearls and finished with cut jet beads or fringe or double twisted chains of alternate black and white with dainty pendant.

These neckties are designed to be fastened in front with a double twist like a man's cravat; hence the name. These are of unusual interest just now because of the dominant vogue of all manner of white and black things.

HINTS FOR THE BUSY HOUSEWIFE

Caster Wheel That Makes Furniture Moving Easy.

An ingenious mounting for the wheel is embodied in a furniture caster recently invented, says Popular Mechanics. The caster holder revolves on a pin inserted in the furniture leg in the usual manner, while each end of the axle of the wheel works in flat inverted V shaped slots in the sides of the holder, so that the wheel slides from one side to the other when the furniture is being moved and trails readily without requiring the holder to reverse. When the furniture is at rest, the axle takes its place up the middle or high part of the slot, and the caster wheel is therefore central under the furniture leg.

Cheese Omelet.

This is a most delicious and savory dish, and quickly and easily made. Break three eggs into a bowl, beat well with an egg whisk, add a tablespoonful of milk or cream and salt and pepper to taste. Place a frying pan over a brisk fire and melt a teaspoonful of butter in it. As soon as the butter is very hot pour the egg mixture into it, beating all the while. Shake the pan gently when the omelette is cooking. As soon as it begins to "set," loosen the edges with a knife, scatter a dessertspoonful of grated cheese over the surface of the omlet, fold it over in two, slip it upon a hot dish and serve immediately.

Household Helps.

It is a needless waste of fire to keep a stove red hot all the time.

Rice with grated cheese over it makes a change as a luncheon dish.

Grease sweet potatoes before they are put into the oven to bake. They will bake in half the time and the skins will be soft.

When you paste labels on glass jars that are used for spices or cereals put the label on the inside. It will stay more securely.

Perspiration stains may be removed from white blouses if they are steeped before washing in cold water, in which a little bicarbonate of soda has been added.

Graham Pudding.

A cupful of molasses, a cupful of sweet milk, two cupfuls of graham flour, a cupful of slightly chopped raisins, a saltspoonful of salt, two level teaspoonfuls of soda dissolved in a little warm water. Mix together, put in pudding dish and steam two hours. For the sauce beat an egg thoroughly, add three-fourths of a cupful of powdered sugar and a cupful of whipped cream, flavor with half a teaspoonful of vanilla.—Country Gentleman.

Escaloped Rhubarb.

Put into a pudding dish a layer of buttered bread crumbs, then one of finely cut rhubarb, add a generous sprinkling of sugar, and a dusting of cinnamon, repeat this process until the quantity is sufficient for the number of people to be served, making the last layer of the crumbs. Cover and bake for half an hour, then remove the cover and let brown. Serve hot, with cream.

Rhubarb Custard.

One pint of sweetened and steamed rhubarb. Strain over this one-half ounce of gelatin, which has been previously dissolved in sufficient cold water to cover it. When cold stir in the stiffly beaten whites of three eggs and one-half pint of whipped cream; pour into a fancy mold and set away to harden. When ready to serve, turn out of the mold on to a fancy plate.

Tomato Pot Roast.

Buy a pot roast of beef and put it into the bean pot. Place it on top of the stove with a little cold water until it begins to boil. Pour one large can of tomatoes, well seasoned, over the whole, place the pot in a medium oven and cook for three hours. It needs very little watching and will be found extremely tender when eaten.

Beef Loaf.

One and a half pounds round steak, one-fourth pound fat pork, two tablespoonfuls milk or cream, one tablespoonful lemon juice, three tablespoonfuls of breadcrumbs, one egg, three-fourths tablespoonful salt and a good sprinkling of pepper. Make in loaf and bake one and one-half hours.

Tomato Eggs.

Cut some thick slices of tomato, dip each into flour seasoned with salt and pepper and fry. Make some pounds of toast, butter these, lay the tomatoes on them and put a poached egg on each. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL

BEAUTY AND UTILITY IN TOWN BACK YARD FARMS.

Cover the Ugly, Useless Surfaces With Crops of Vegetables and Flowers.

The problem of combining some semblance of design with the uses to which the average city back yard is put is a difficult one. Consider the acres of waste land and the countless wasted opportunities in those sad, hot, dusty back yards. Think of the tons of delicious vegetables they might have raised, the lovely flowers.

Here are suggestions for the planting of very small yards. A garden 25 by 60 feet of lawn, shrubs and flowers may be made, the whole completely hidden from the street by heavy planting in a corner. Another may be 87½ by 60 feet and have a small cold frame at one side. In the cold frame can be raised twenty-four tomato plants that later go against the north fence, the earliest crops of lettuce, radishes and onions and the first planting of sweet corn and cucumbers. Six dwarf fruits trees, a clump of shrubs at the end of the grass walk and a bench make an attractive outlook from the back porch.

A delightful flower and vegetable garden can be achieved in a planting space 30 by 60 feet by dividing them with a pergola. Suppose there is a long walk down the middle of the yard. It will seem less long because of the little rustic pergola dividing flowers from vegetable garden. Grass surrounded by flowers and shrubs would be employed to make the little flower garden in front of the pergola restful and beautiful, an outdoor room of great charm. The pergola itself should have grapevines trained over it.

Behind it would come the biggest outdoor workshop imaginable, the vegetable garden. At the right an asparagus bed, if the bed is properly cultivated and fertilized. Peppers, eggplant or cauliflower can be grown between the rows of asparagus. Against the fence would be two rows of tomatoes (even in a small garden one must grow many of them, they are so satisfactory), lettuce, radishes and onions, six hills of rhubarb and the cold frame. At the left, Swiss chard, beans, three hills of cucumbers and sweet corn—a quarter of the garden in sweet corn, the most delicious vegetable in the garden.—Chicago Herald.

TOWN EXTENDS "GLAD HAND"

All of Asbury Park's Citizens, Young and Old, Join Reception Committee.

Hereafter when the visitor to Asbury Park, N. J., gets off the train he will not be met by a self appointed joint committee representing the jitney, his interests, the associated peanut venders, college pennant barkers, post card dealers with six views of the ocean for 5 cents, and such people. The town is now going to be made hospitable, cheerful, genial, interesting and different, for the mayor has ordered it. The genial mood was released for immediate publication by the mayor, C. E. F. Hetrick, says the New York Evening Post.

Mr. Herrick has organized the Glad Hand society, "in which all the citizens of Asbury Park, high and low, young and old, are charter members." The badge of the society is a celluloid button about half an inch in diameter, with "Ask Me" in white letters on a vermilion background in the middle. Around the outside it says, "Asbury Park, N. J., Glad Hand Committee."

"Co-operation for general good is being freely secured," according to the mayor. But this must be a press agent's slip, as co-operation for general good is only found in things fundamentally gloomy, like sociological surveys, where nothing meets with approval. The Asbury Park movement, remember, is one of scintillating smiles and cheerful chinnigags.

Mayor Hetrick has lent the movement his own personal slogan, "There's no frown in our town." This was translated (somewhat freely) from a Persian poet, the same who wrote "There's no use talkin', we like Woodrow Wilson," and "Stop in Jersey City a while; somebody there is sure to smile."

"Already the effect is magical," says the mayor. Ministers have preached sermons pointing out that all visitors to Asbury Park should be welcomed with a smile and be asked to come back.

When You Plant a Hedge.

When you plant a hedge do plant it all about your place. Don't decide that you want a screen from the street, a wind shield on a north side or a Chinese wall to hide your back neighbor's chicken yard and then leave the other three sides unplanted. Be generous. Plant all four boundary lines, and you will be rewarded when the hedge has had a bit of time to grow by finding your most intimate sense of home getting a foothold in your out of doors.

Then, too, don't go in for a variety of hedges. Settle upon one that will be best for you all around. There are exceptions to this rule, as to every other, but they don't apply to the side and front hedges of a place being of different material. They apply to the planting of informal borders of shrubbery at the back of the lot and along the sides, to the special planting of steep front terrace slopes and to doing without a hedge along the front.—Baltimore Sun.

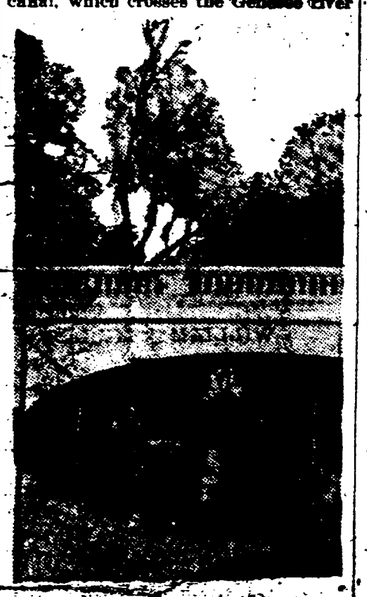
HEDGE FENCES HELP TO MAKE TOWN ATTRACTIVE.

Native Material, Especially the Barberry, High in Public Favor.

There is a distinct trend of fashion in planting, says Antoinette Rehmann Perrett in an article on "Beauty For Every Dooryard" in the Delineator. There was a time when the style was all for queer, expensive, foreign things, for single specimens planted in a heterogeneous way about the lawn and for circles, crescents and stars of bedding plants.

Now we have grown in good taste and take more to native material, to massing shrubbery and to hardy borders of perennial flowers with the seeds of annuals generously interspected for summer bloom. We use more shrubs and more flowers than we did some years ago, but they are, on the whole, much less expensive in their actual cost as well as in their upkeep.

If you live near a factory which belches coal smoke you will be well on the way to success if you plant unclipped Regel's privet, Japanese barberry, cockspur thorns, oriental plane and Norway maple. There is a playground in a certain factory district, the most beautiful small playground that I have seen, which is made up almost entirely of these, with Boston ivy on wire netting to form the screens and geraniums planted in oblong borders for the flowers.



A barberry hedge should be left unclipped. It has a kind of undulating grace of outline that is a vital part of its beauty. It is highly recommended because it does well almost everywhere—in poor and sandy soils, between houses, near factories, in all sorts of difficult positions—and yet it is a bush of aristocratic habits, of refined charm the year round.

ROCHESTER'S FINE BRIDGE.

Substantial and Handsome Structure Attracts Attention of Visitors.

Part of a bridge which attracts much favorable comment from visitors to Genesee Valley park, in Rochester, N. Y., is shown in the accompanying illustration, taken with the article from the American City.

This bridge was constructed in 1910-11. It is built of Portland cement concrete with a facing of white Portland and crushed Barre granite. The balusters were made in cast iron molds and set in place, the hand rail being cast about the upper ends of said balusters. The bridge is ninety feet long over all and the floor has a camber of twelve inches. The span is forty-eight feet and is a semi-ellipse with eight feet rise. The level of the water shown is one foot below the spring line and is the future low pool level of the barge canal, which crosses the Genesee river at grade near the mouth of this creek and but a short distance east of the bridge.

The construction consists of six parallel arches of structural steel buried in a rib of concrete sixteen inches thick, with floor slab and sidewalk slabs superposed. This sidewalk has a metal edge which answers for a curb, and a macadam pavement is carried over the bridge. The width of roadway is eighteen feet and the sidewalks are each five feet wide.

Owing to the location, the bridge rests upon two piers and the shore ends of the bridge are, including the steel ribs, cantilevered over said piers. The structure is monolithic in that no expansion joints are allowed except at the ends of the hand rail where they enter the newel posts.

The earth foundation received a severe trial in the flood which occurred March 28, 1913. At that time only the center of the deck was out of water, but the bridge withstood the strain.

Fifty-six miles of roses were added to the beauties of Portland, Ore., with the planting recently of 100,000 bushes. They have been purchased as a result of the campaign started by the City Beautiful committee of the Rose Festival association, the purpose being to make the city more than usually attractive in preparation for the coming of visitors on their way to and from

SNAPSHOTS OF NOTABLE PERSONS

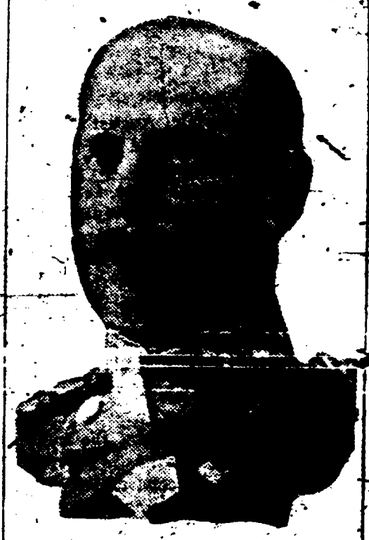
Alexander Mitchell Palmer of Pennsylvania, who was recently appointed chief justice of the federal court of claims, finished his third term as a representative to congress on March 4 last. Last fall Mr. Mitchell went before the people of Pennsylvania as a candidate for the United States senate on the Democratic ticket, but was beaten at the polls by Boies Penrose, Republican, who has held down the job since 1897.



During Mr. Palmer's career as a congressman he was active and aggressive and became one of the recognized leaders of his party. He was a steady and forceful worker for President Wilson at the Baltimore convention and since the advent of the present administration has been one of Mr. Wilson's most trusted allies on the floor of the house.

Judge Palmer is credited with defeating Charles M. Schwab in a labor inquiry. When the Democrats of the Sixty-third congress met in caucus Leader Underwood, who called Palmer his "strong right arm," nominated him for caucus chairman, and he was unanimously elected. As such it was his duty to preside over the Democratic caucus in the house more than any other chairman ever did, for the great tariff and currency bills were both debated and considered line by line in Democratic caucus for weeks, entailing much labor for Mr. Palmer.

A native of Stroudsburg, Pa., Judge Palmer was educated at Swarthmore college, from which he was graduated in 1891 with the highest honors in his class. He studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1893. Judge Palmer has practiced his profession with success and is a director in several industrial and financial institutions. He is now chairman of the executive campaign committee of the Democratic national committee.

Ruler of the Hellenes.

When the allied fleets began smashing the forts of the Dardanelles the people of Greece believed that the time had arrived when the Hellenic nation should abandon its policy of neutrality and enter the war against their ancient foes, the Turks. King Constantine, however, against the sentiment of parliament and the entire Hellenic race, asked for the resignation of Premier Venizelos, who favored entering the conflict. This action raised a storm of protest from the people, who believed that Greece should join the triple entente in the desperate struggle against the Turk.

KING CONSTANTINE OF GREECE.

King Constantine of Greece was born in Athens in 1868. During the wars of 1912-13 he won great popularity for the services he rendered in two successive campaigns. He succeeded to the throne in March, 1913, his father, King George, having been assassinated at Saloniki, which had been captured from the Turks. King Constantine was married in 1889 to Princess Sophia, a sister of the German emperor. The wedding was attended by the kaiser and members of the royal families of every court in Europe. Soon afterward Sophia renounced her Lutheran religion and took that of her husband, thereby deeply offending her brother, the others of her family.

REEL FAVORITES OFF THE FILM

BILLIE RHODES.

Billie Rhodes' latest addition to her extensive wardrobe is a novel gown. Every feature is distinctly new, from the lace tunic to the clever draping. Billie certainly knows how to dress. In "Nellie, the Pride of the Fire House," and in "Taking Her Measure" she is gowned most becomingly.

Exceptionally clever photography is shown in the photo play, "Broncho Billy's Vengeance," in which the vision of his dead wife appears to G. M. Anderson, who takes the role of Broncho Billy. The vision comes just as he is about to brand a gambler who eloped with the woman and then neglected her. She comes to beg him not to injure the man. Broncho is overwhelmed and lets the man escape.

SCENE FROM "THE GIRL OF THE MUSIC HALL"

"The Girl of the Music Hall" is without doubt the most absorbing production in which Alice Joyce, who enacts the title role, has ever appeared. It tells the story of a girl who surmounts the tremendous obstacles which confront her, and wins success and fame.

Riverside, Ill., a suburb of Chicago, has established what is probably the first municipally owned picture theater in the United States. The theater will be owned and operated entirely in the public interest.

Richard C. Travers' powerful build and athletic training stand him in good stead in taking a scene in the photo play, "The Conflict," when he has to lift Sydney Ainsworth, who weighs nearly 200 pounds, from the ground and swing him on horseback. This is done while Ainsworth is supposedly unconscious.

"The Police Dog," an animated cartoon comedy, by C. T. Anderson, shows Officer Piffle of the "White lights" squad seeking relaxation from his labors by taking a plunge in the harbor. A hungry shark, on the lookout for eats, makes a play for the cop, and the shark and Officer Piffle fight it out to a finish. The shark is glad to get rid of his tormentor, who looks in vain for his trousers. Piffle substitutes a barrel for his missing garment. The barrel is a tight fit, which fact is noted by Billy Goat, who with a well directed butt, sends Piffle rolling toward the station house, where he finally lands on top of the captain.

W. C. Cabanne has produced a one-reel heart interest drama called "The Better Way," in which Dorothy Gish as a young servant girl keeps up a brave struggle to hold her father, an ex-convict, played by F. A. Turner, in the straight and narrow path.

"Miss Fix It"

The Up to Date Girl.

By ELSIE V. H. BALDWIN

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

"Congratulations!" said Mr. Harris, strolling into the office of John Tyler, the lawyer.

"Thanks," replied his friend laconically, trying not to look self conscious.

"Never thought you'd do it, John," continued Mr. Harris. "Everybody gave you up as a hopeless bach long ago; but, come to think of it, this rather suits my convenience, because you're probably feeling rather more lenient with the frailer sex just now, and I want you to take a little girl in your office who needs a job."

"Can't do it," objected Mr. Tyler, looking greatly alarmed at the idea. "Sorry, Harris, but I simply can't."

"Come, now, Tyler," urged Mr. Harris, "She's a nice little thing—old man Parker's girl, and she needs the money. She's my wife's cousin, too, and"—

"No, sir," interrupted Mr. Tyler emphatically, jerking his glasses off in his excitement and nervously swinging them on their black string. "No women in this office! Never! Never again!"

"Why not?" inquired Mr. Harris saxtously.

"Well, it's too long a story to tell the whole of it, but I'll give you a brief synopsis of it.

"You see"—he settled himself down for the narration—"we had an advertisement in the paper. 'Wanted—Lady to take charge of correspondence file in law office. Good looks no recommendation,' or something like that. About two dozen answered it. Most of them didn't seem to have noticed that 'no said lady.' They all looked alike, and I couldn't see that one was better looking or knew any more than another, so I just shut my eyes a second and pointed my finger, and when I opened them again I had picked her out. Blake, her name was—Susie Blake.

"She wasn't bad looking as girls go—kind of slight and yellow haired. Pretty, I guess you'd have called her. And sort of languid, as though she'd faint away at the sound of a cuss word.

"To tell the truth, though," he hastened to remark, "I didn't pay much attention to her. I was pretty busy with the Reyburn case then and hadn't time to think of anything else much.

"But one morning when she'd been here about a week"—Mr. Tyler's memory for dates was quite remarkable in so busy a man—"she came into my room with some papers I'd called for, and while I was looking them over she said, 'Mr. Tyler, there is something I'd like to ask you.'

"'Ask away,' I said, or something to that effect; wondering all the time whether she was going to touch me for an advance on her salary.

"'I'm always here by half past 8, but I was going to suggest that the office boy should come promptly at 9, so that I could refer the letters around before the men get here. It ought to be fixed.'

"Well, of course I fixed it, though I couldn't remember ever having been told before what 'ought to be' done in my office by a woman. I thought it wouldn't hurt to humor her and that a lecture for the office boy would be [illegible]

[illegible] I hadn't had this but just forgotten all about it when she called in again to see me.

"'Mr. Tyler'—she always began with my name, as though she thought I was in imminent danger of forgetting who I was—'I've been looking over the files very carefully,' she said, 'and your system is all wrong.'

"'Indeed,' I answered her, 'it isn't my system. But what's wrong with it anyway?'

"'The numbering system should be used, and in addition you should have a vertical steel file, and the papers should be laid out flat, and'—

"'Enough,' I said. 'Let it go at that. Take it out!'

"So it was taken out, and a brand new green and gold steel arrangement was brought in and a whole lot of little cards and a case to hold them, and Miss Blake was happy."

"Well," inquired Mr. Harris as his friend paused to get his breath, "wasn't the system any good?"

"Yes, indeed," replied the lawyer heartily, "it was a grand system, I'll admit. You could find anything, from the papers for a divorce case to the latest letter from Brennan to Miss Blake. Oh, yes, all the men were crazy about her. They called her 'Miss Fix It' behind her back, but you bet they fell all over themselves dancing attendance on her. And she was pretty," ruminated Mr. Tyler in an absentminded manner, while a fatuous smile spread slowly over his features.

"We had some peace for awhile," he continued, visibly recalling himself from a brown study, "but just as I was thinking to myself that she seemed to be really quite efficient for a girl she presented another one of those fatefn requests.

"She came into my room after lunch with a bunch of sweet peas in her hand and laid them on my desk. 'I thought you might share these with me,' she said. 'They freshen the place up so, and it's so dreadfully hot.' I took them. You can't hurt a girl's feel

In the Spring

The days of cleaning house have come,
The maddest of the year,
When everything is upside down
And scattered far and near.
My meals are but a mere excuse,
My wife has grown a shrew,
The clothes I want are on the line;
My books the basement strew.

Each day, each week throughout the year
This house is furnished bright,
But when spring comes my wife declares
The dirt germs are a fright.
And then she gets her pails and mops,
Her brooms and soap galore,
And life becomes for days untold
A nightmare and a bore!

Lights.

Mr. Picklelilly came home from his club one morning about 5 o'clock. He entered his happy home, crept up the stairs softly, so as not to awaken his spouse, then felt for the switch to turn on the electric light. He could not find it and in the darkness stumbled over a chair.

"What's that?" came a voice from the bed.

"Where in the deuch are the lights in this house?" snarled Picklelilly, trying in his bluff to put a bold face on the matter.

"Lights!" cried Mrs. Picklelilly soothingly. "Pull up the blinds!"—Judge.

COUNTESS SZECHENYI INVENTS WAR GAME.

Countess Szechenyi, who was Miss Gladys Vanderbilt, and Countess Sigray, daughter of the late Marcus Daly, have invented a popular war game for Budapest. It arose from an argument between the two, as each has a pet theory as to when the war will end. The game consists of writing forecasts of the date of the close of the struggle, sealing them in envelopes and filing them to be read after peace is declared. A growing number of people, lured by the chance of saying, "I told you so," are canning their own opinions with red wax and ceremony.

LAST HOUR SCENES AT FALL OF PRZEMYSL

Austrians, Surrendering, Kissed Rifles Before Breaking Them Up.

A dispatch to the London Morning Post from Budapest gives a story of the last hours preceding the surrender of Przemysl to the Russians as related by one of two aviators who left the city shortly before its fall.

"Four of us left in two remaining aeroplanes at the time when Russian shells began to fall on the hangars," he said. "At this stage the garrison was engaged in destroying guns and interior fortifications.

"The artillerymen were not satisfied with knocking to pieces the breeches of the great guns and siege mortars, but explosives were placed in the inner part of each gun, and it was blown into fragments. The famous 30.5 centimeter mortars were destroyed in this way, their enormous steel tubes being torn into pieces.

"As to the many thousands of rifles, it was ordered that every man was to destroy his own, and it was a pitiful sight to see them do it. Some of the men kissed their rifles first and wept while hammering them to bits. They had to accept this mode of destroying them, for as they were firing almost to the last there would have been no time to gather the rifles and burn them in one pile.

"During the siege," the aviator went on, "we lost twelve aeroplanes and seven pilots. Seven officers who accompanied them as observers were shot down. We do not know if they were killed or taken prisoners. On the morning of the fall of the fortress shrapnel began to fall, and we had to leave if we wanted to save the aeroplanes and ourselves from falling into the enemy's hands. The scene was indescribably terrible below. When I encircled the fortress before leaving the smoke and flames of exploding ammunition stores shot up to the clouds. The military buildings and storehouses were in flames, and incessant thundering shook my machine as explosions took place below."

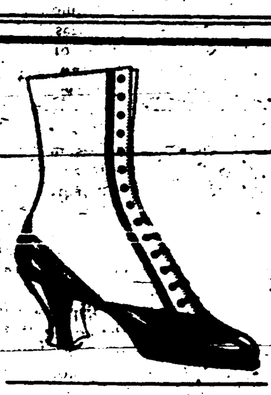
KAUFF KEPT FROM PLAYING

Brooklyn Player Jumps to Giants; Audience Bewildered

New York, Friday.—John McGraw, manager of the Giants, shook the base ball world to its foundations yesterday when he spirited away "Bennie" Kauff, the "Ty" Cobb of the Federal League, put him on exhibition at the Polo Grounds and by so doing caused more excitement than has been crowded into the historic arena since Hank O'Day put the stamp of disapproval upon Fred Merkle for not touching second more than six years ago. So many events not before considered in the lexicon of baseball werep ortroyed durin gthe afternoon that players, managers, owners and some six thousand fans left the Polo Grounds wondering just what did happen.



Among the oddities discovered was the forfeiting of a game, 9 to 0, to the Giants and the playing of the some game or another, whichever the case may be, that was won by the Braves, 13 to 8, the parading of Kauff, which caused most of the trouble, and his incipient benching after some of the hostilities were finished; an argument between McGrow and James E. Gaffney that was more than personal, two injuries to Giant players that will cause a serious handicap, and a continual bombardment of pitchers that found three home runs, four triples, three doubles and any amount of singles creeping into the box score.

Although "Bennie" Kauff was not responsible for all of the trouble, his appearance in a Giant uniform was the signal that started it. When Kauff lined up in centerfield with the Giants, James Gaffney, president of the Braves, refused to allow his team to play with the Federal jumper, contending that Kauff was an "outlaw" as far as organized baseball is concerned. He stuck to his point and after waiting ten minutes for the Braves to give the Giants the daily argument on the field, William Quigley, the umpire, declared the game forfeited to the Giants, 9 to 0.

OBITUARY

The death of Frances, wife of Monroe Reynolds, which occurred Wednesday evening, will be a shock to a number of her friends.

Mrs. Reynolds was enjoying her usual good health and had started to clean house. At noon she ate a hearty dinner and joked with her husband at the table. Mr. Reynolds had left to go to his work just before 1 o'clock. Disturbed by an approaching storm Mrs. Reynolds called in a neighbor, Mr. Wilcox, to help her close the windows. Before the neighbor had left she was seized with acute indigestion, followed immediately by apoplexy, after which she never regain consciousness, dying at 10.30 that evening. She was a member of State st. church and in her earlier years a worker in the Elizabeth Chapter O. E. S. Besides her husband she is survived by three sons, George of Syracuse and Roy and Bert of Fulton.

BLAME BEARER TELLS STORY

fered a severe jolt in the afternoon when Justice Andrews refused to admit any of the evidence they have collected about Barnes' relations with the Albany city administration or with the Lincoln League, an organization of Barnes' political satellites.

Muck raking was barred from the trial and the Colonel, once a disbeliever in that implement, has counted heavily on its use as a weapon in this battle. The justice held that Barnes might have known of the existence of vice and gambling in Albany without injury to his moral character.

The justice did announce that evidence of Barnes' participation on state printing profits was entirely competent, thus leaving open one important avenue of attack down which the Colonel's forces may march when the time arrives.

The Colonel spent the morning explaining with zeal his perimission to the steel trust to buy the Tennessee Coal and Iron Co. With his usual willingness to split either blame or credit fifty-fifty with whoever happened to be handy, he placed part of the responsibility for this action upon Elihu Root who he said advised him in his conference with Mr. Gary and Mr. Frick of the Steel Corporation.

When the Colonel entered the court room, the spectators applauded him and the court attendants had some difficulty in restoring order. After the applause had died down Justice Andrews ascended the bench and court was opened. The Colonel smiled at the Judge and took his seat in the witnessc hair. Then he crossed one leg over the other, stuck one thumb in the armhole of his vest, and awaited the first question.

JUDGE WANTS EVIDENCE

Judge Coville has signed an order directing Police Justice Latham of Phoenix to make a return of certain evidence in the case of the People ex rel Leona Seaward vs. Frank W. Seaward. The defendant was convicted of being a disorderly person in failing to support his family, and has appealed to the County Court. His attorney O. M. Reilly, claims that Justice Latham failed to incorporate in the return of the case evidence of Mrs. Seaward that she had not applied to the town of Schroeppel for assistance for herself and children and also that she had lived at her brother's home in Utica.

Hitherto it has been the custom to receive bids from residents of the cities in which the buildings are located. Now competition is thrown open and residents in Washington can make proposals upon goods for buildings in Oswego, New York or San Francisco or vice versa.

The State Capitol, which has cost up to this time $17,560,000, is advertised to be sold September 15. The person whose duty it is to pay the annual water tax of one dollar has probably gone a fishing forgetting all about the indebtedness. The county treasurer has therefore included the building with other property in the city which is in arrears for water taxes, and he proposes to sell it as he would any other piece of property.

What was known as the Palmer House reception committee, appointed to receive Parnell and other Irish delegates to the convention which was to have been held in Chicago last February, met in that city last night for the purpose of raising money to aid Parnell and his associates. Great enthusiasm prevailed and at the close of the meeting chairman Curran cabled to Parnell to draw upon him immediately for $10,000, and pledging an unlimited amount in future should it be required.

The New York World has had an interview with James D. Fish, ex president of the Marine National bank, now in Auburn prison. Fish said he knew nothing of any efforts to get him a pardon. He said he was president of the Marine bank for 23 years and had a spotless reputation for integrity. In the crash he lost his good name and his money, and was at fault for neither. He knows he was terribly negligent, but he had nothing to do with planning fraud. His first business transactions with Ward were speculations in Produce Exchange membership certificates, for which he furnished the capital. After this start Ward continued to prosper, until his extravagance led him into the great scheme of swindling, which led to the ruin of so many, the death of Gen. Grant, the disgrace of Work, Warner and others, and his own and Fish's imprisonment. Fish's voice was suffused with emotion as he related the tragic story.

At a meeting of the Board of Police Commissioners last evening it was decided by a vote of three to one to dismiss Captain N. S. Lee of the Police department, and Officer James Reid was designated to act temporarily in his place. The action is the result of an investigation of the charges preferred against the Captain about three months ago for using profane language and sleeping while on duty. From what the public have been able to learn about the investigation of the charges, the facts brought out stamp them with a degree of triviality, and yet the conclusion reached by the Commissioners will be generally approved. It will be a good thing for the discipline of the force. By reason of jealousies and bickerings, and the fact that he lacked firmness, and perhaps was not as thoroughly qualified in other ways for the position as he should have been, he was unable to command respectful obedience or enforce good discipline. Captain Lee has been a member of the force for twenty years. Who his successor will be is not known. It is said that no man has as yet been agreed upon. The Board will meet again on Wednesday evening of next week.

The great and only Frank Hiscock, the pride of Onondaga, and the man who has been likened to James G. Blaine, and who wants to be United States Senator, arose in Congress Thursday and made an ass of himself. It was not an unusual proceeding for the ambitious Representative, and if he has got an idea that he is paving his way to the Senate by his cheap talk about "Democratic economy," some of his friends ought to take him in hand and shake it out of him. The particular object of his wrath Thursday was the sundry civil appropriation bill. He charged that the appropriation for the public printing office was inadequate and warned the Democrats that their "pretense of economy could have no other result than to avail the deficiencies which must be provided for next year." He said this conduct last year had resulted in a deficiency of $13,500,000. It did not take Mr. Randall long to show that the argument of the Onondaga brave was a sham. The latter said that of the deficiency for the present year, $6,500,000 had been for pensions, and yet Congress last year had appropriated every dollar of the estimates for pensions and the deficiency had grown out of a more rapid adjustment of claims. Two and one-half millions was for soldiers' claims for bounty and back pay. Seven hundred thousand dollars was to meet the judgement of courts against the government, so that there was a real deficiency of but $3,000,000 in the appropriations for last year. It nestled Mr. Hiscock to have his pine knocked out from under him in this fashion and he jumped to his feet in the most undignified manner and began to pound the desk in front of him with his fist, and has come what he regarded as a with never failing antidote for the "economy" at cheap, contemptible prodigality. Holmes—the Democratic Holmes—then sat down on Hiscock, dug him in the ribs with something heavy and put the whole House in a roar by saying that he thought the gentleman ought to be ashamed of himself after what was quoted from his speech. Hiscock visibly reddened but managed to ter. We do not wonder at Hiscock or any other Republican arguing against economy. Half of them devote most of their time to seeing how far they can go in plundering the public money box. It is well for the country that there is a little Democratic economy in Washington.

The Congregationalists are to make a special effort tomorrow (July 4th) for the American Missionary Association of a $30,000 debt which has been carried for the past two years. This is a National Society and is doing a great educational work among the colored people in the South. There seems to be a special fitness in what the Congregationalists propose to do and we trust that the effort will be successful.

Next week the one hundredth issue of the New York City directory will be made. With it will be a bound copy of the first city directory, which will contain over 314,000 names. From this it is estimated that the population of the city is about 1,500,000. Among those whose names are omitted this year on account of death are Admiral McCloskey, U. S. Grant, Winfield S. Hancock, Geo. B. McClellan, Wm. H. Vanderbilt, John Kelly, Horace B. Claflin and Henry Havemeyer. The addresses of Alderman Jachne and DeLacy, ex-Sheriff Davidson and Billy Maloney are not in this year's directory.

At this time, the twenty-third anniversary of the battle of Gettysburg, and in connection with all that is said in to-day's paper about that fight, that remarkably eloquent and matchless speech of Abraham Lincoln, delivered on the historic battlefield, will be read with interest. Here it is:

Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle field of that war. We have to come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting-place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this. But in a larger sense we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men living and dead who struggled here have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here; but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us, that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that the government of the people by the people and for the people shall not perish from the earth.

THE ANARCHISTS.

Damaging Proof Brought out in Milwaukee.

MILWAUKEE, July 3.—Evidence tending to show that Carl Symore, and Anton Palm Anarchist leaders, urged the people to arm themselves, burn the court house, and annihilate the police, was introduced in their trials yesterday. Officers told how they found large quantities of ammunition, guns and bayonets hidden between mattresses, between beds and under kitchen floors, with cans on bomb and dynamite manufacture sent by Most. Palm told about Anarchist groups which he said exist all over the country and were without head, but with a community of purposes. He admitted being local secretary and having been in correspondence with a central headquarters in Chicago. The letter-heads bore cuts of skulls and cross bones. The case will go to the jury to-day.

NO PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Swearing Off Before Our Board of Assessors.

The following parties went before the board of assessors to-day and made the following affidavits in relation to their personal property, for the purpose of having the assessments removed:

Garson Meyer swore that he had $1,500 on deposit had no bonds or mortgages which were good and collectable; that he had no notes and contracts for the payment of money which are good and collectable; had no accounts and other obligations due or to become due which were collectable. He has personal property of other kinds than those above described amounting to $1,500, the whole amount of his personal indebtedness was $4,600, none of which had been originated or contracted for the purpose of evading a proper assessment of his personal property.

Jacob David, being duly sworn says that he has no money on hand or on deposit in this city; has no bonds or mortgages; has no notes or contracts; has no accounts due or to become due that are collectable, has no other personal property except such as was exempted from taxation; has no individual indebtedness.

Charles W. Barnes, who was assessed for $1,000, swore that he had no personal property of any kind. In fact he said he did not have a dollar.

The affidavits of Mr. Barnes and Mr. Meyer were held for further investigation.

Mr. David's statement was accepted and his name stricken from the roll. Mr. Meyer was assessed for $2,000 and Mr. David for 500.

Each applicant to "swear off" is examined by the assessors.

THE OLD BATTLE-FIELD.

REUNION OF THE THIRD ARMY CORPS HELD AT GETTYSBURG.

Gen. Sickles Explains "How He Won the Battle of Gettysburg by Being Defeated."—A Large Number of Military Men Present—Interesting Services.

GETTYSBURG, July 3.—The Third Army Corps held their reunion yesterday on the ground over which they fought the second day's battle twenty-three years ago. Many of the officers and the great number of the men who wore the diamond army corps badge were present and received their old comman der, Gen. Sickles, with great enthusiasm, and listened with close attention to his carefully prepared explanation of "How he won the Gettysburg battle by being defeated." The general made a very satisfactory showing for himself and his corps. His address was listened to by his own staff as well as by such distinguished Gettysburg heroes as Gens. Hunt, Boulbeau, Tremain, Carr, etc., to whom the general frequently appealed for confirmation of his statements.

The general claimed that his "premature advance" saved the union army from defeat and saved the position, as he had information that Gen. Lee proposed to attack Gen. Meade's left and to seize the round tops at the time Meade was preparing for fight on his extreme right. He said that if he had been supported in his position, the confederate army would have been destroyed.

A reunion of both the federal and confederates engaged on this field is proposed for next July. Gens. Longstreet and McLaine having signified in the most cordial manner their approval of the suggestion.

The monuments dedicated yesterday and handed over to the memorial associations were those of the 16th, 73th, 99th and 104th Pennsylvania, 1st Rhode Island, 27 and 5th New Hampshire and Berdan Sharpshooters.

The New Jersey monument commissioners held a meeting on the field and selected a site for the New Jersey memorial shaft. The town council entertained the visiting G. A. R. officers at luncheon last evening.

MAT. CAREY AND CRAIG TOLLIVER.

The Followers of the Above-Named Gentlemen Spoiling for a Fight.

MT. STERLING, Ky., July 3.—Hostilities have been resumed in Rowen county. An attempt to took place yesterday at Moorehead, between Mat. Carey and Craig Tolliver. The former is a sympathizer with the Martin faction and the other is the notorious leader of the Tolliver faction. Tolliver got the advantage of Carey, who is an old man, and spared his life on a plea for mercy. Logan, another sympathizer was then enlisted, and the parties are again taking sides. This morning a large crowd is in Moorehead. Business has been suspended and all is excitement. Cook Humphrey, the former leader of the Martin faction, is in the crowd, and the two parties are working to get a show at each other. Tolliver, with his friends, are in the Rowe house, their former rendezvous. The opposing faction have their quarters near by. Rowen county has been shamed into peace by a contract which originated with Governor Knott as a means of restoring friendship and upon signing which troops were withdrawn after a two months active campaign last fall. The situation is very threatening and it is probable that the aid of the militia will have to again be invoked.

AFTER THE BOYCOTTERS.

New York City Courts Making It Very Disagreeable for Them.

NEW YORK, July 3.—After sentencing the five Theiss bakers yesterday Judge Barrett called the case of the thirteen Bohemians indicted for boycotting Mrs. Landgraf, the bakeress. Lawyer Herman, their counsel, asked an adjournment, presenting an affidavit in support of the motion. Judge Barrett asked Herman if it was true that the boycott was still being waged against Mrs. Landgraf. Herman replied that he had urged his clients to let the woman alone and he supposed they had done so.

District-Attorney Fellows excitedly addressed the court, declaring that the boycott was still in force and that Mrs. Landgraf's receipts yesterday were only 50 cents whereas before the boycott she required two wagons to supply her customers. Judge Barrett said he would grant an adjournment until Wednesday. He would avoid any shadow of oppression against these men, though they were accused of oppressing others. The cases were set down peremptorily for Wednesday.

POISONED BY ICE CREAM.

Burial of the First Victim of the Pottersville Calamity—Medical Opinions.

FLEMINGTON, N. J., July 3.—David Walsh, a victim of the ice cream poisoning at the Pottersville picnic, was buried yesterday. There was a great crowd present, and the services were impressive. In the audience were about seventy five of the sufferers from poison. Many of them still look very ill. The man who is under general suspicion has not yet been arrested. Though the belief in his guilt is almost universal, there is a reluctance to move in the matter until the proof is stronger, as he is a prominent man in the community. There is a difference of opinion among the several physicians who have investigated the matter as to the nature of the poison. Some still contend that the theory of some poisonous germ being developed in the milk is sufficient to account for the cases to be observed. This is scouted at by most of the doctors, but all doubtless be utilized in the defense of any person who may be arrested and tried for causing Welch's death.

THE PORT OF WINDSOR.

Dr. Edward Young Nominated Consul—Why He Was Selected.

WASHINGTON, July 3.—Dr. Edward Young, who was yesterday nominated consul to the Port of Windsor, Nova Scotia, is a native of that place, which he left many years ago and came to the United States. He was for years chief of the United States bureau of statistics, and is a statistician widely known. He was sent as a delegate from the United States to the international statistical congress at St. Petersburg. He is the author of some standard works on tariff legislation, on immigration, and on "Labor in Europe and America." Owing to his knowledge of Canadian affairs he was consulted by a former administration, and it is probable that his selection for this place is in consequence of such knowledge, especially of Nova Scotia matters, as that province is now clamoring for separation from the Dominion with a view to establishing commercial relations with the United States.

Sentenced to Be Hanged.

DENVER, Col., July 3.—After a trial lasting a week, Judge Elliot in the district court yesterday sentenced Andrew Green, colored, to be hanged July 27 for murdering J. C. Whitmeb, a street-car driver, on the 20th, while attempting to rob the money-box on the car. John Winters, Green's accomplice, was sentenced to prison for life.

They will be treated to a ride in the great parks of the city and a collation. Tammany will make a glorious day of it.

A VERY HOPEFUL FEELING.

Merchants Anticipate a Good Fall Trade—The Wool Clip—Prospects of a Fair Wheat Harvest—Cotton Injured.

NEW YORK, July 3.—Special telegrams to Bradstreet's this week while reporting general trade as reasonably quiet and without special feature concur in mentioning a very hopeful feeling among merchants as to the outlook for the autumn.

The interest in the wool clip has revoked from the central western states to Montana, Wyoming and Utah, where prices are held above eastern markets. The clip east of the Mississippi has been cleared up, though more largely by speculators than by manufacturers, prices having risen 2 to 3 cents per pound within ten days.

The tone of the dry goods market is buoyant, all advances in the woolen goods having been well maintained and the jobbing light.

The pig iron market is unchanged as to price. A good deal of southern iron has been sold in the east of late. The customary stoppage of iron mills during the coming month promises to increase consumption. Some furnaces have blown out. Millirons are dull.

Wheat prospects, aside from Wisconsin and Minnesota, are for a fair harvest. Estimates vary from 435,000,000 to 465,000,000 bushels. The foreign wheat prospects are less favorable, particularly in India.

Bradstreet's reports of stocks of wheat east of the Rocky mountains July 1, aggregate 35,000,000 bushels against 61,000,000 three months ago, and on the Pacific coast 6,000,000 bushels, against 10,000,000 April 1.

Bradstreet's July cotton report shows that heavy rains have injured the growing crop, so that the condition may be classed as fair only, against good one year ago.

THE POPE AND THE ELECTIONS.

Cardinal Manning States That His Holiness Has Not Given Any Orders.

LONDON, July 3.—Cardinal Manning writes that he is not likely to know at any man what the pope has done in the present political contest, and he does not hesitate to say that the prevailing notion that his holiness has told the clergy and through them the Catholics of Great Britain and Ireland how to vote is entirely erroneous. May also believe such stories know little of the Catholic church. If any such orders had been issued, himself and his colleagues would have known of the fact, but none have been received or issued.

HE IS USING HIS POWER.

President Cleveland Vetoes Another Private Pension Bill—Congress Lectured for Its Alleged Recklessness.

WASHINGTON, July 3.—President Cleveland sent to the house yesterday a message vetoing another private pension bill, granting a pension to William Moore. Boone it seems, was taken prisoner in November, 1862, and paroled. During his parole he took part in the 4th of July celebration in 1863 at his home in Aurora, Ill., and while so engaged was fatally injured by the bursting of a cannon.

Boone is a poor man, and has a wife and children. The president in disapproving this bill, says that he is utterly unable to discover any reason between the 4th of July celebration and the military service of any branch which a pension is granted. In fact, there should not also be a pension granted to any of the companions who chanced to be injured at the same time.

The president concludes his message with this general observation in private pension legislation: "A meritorious man and wife and family in need are objects which appeal to the sympathy and charitable feelings of any decent man, but it seems to me that it by no means follows that those connected with the people's business and the expenditure of the people's money are justified in extending the pension laws so that they will furnish a channel of relief in every case of distress and hardship."

ABDUCTED AND MARRIED.

A Mother's Strange Story of the Loss and Recovery of Her Child.

NEWARK, N. Y., July 3.—Mrs. Isabella Green brought to Manchester, this county, last evening Mary E. Johnson, a little girl who was but 6 years of age on the 4th, and who says is her daughter. She said the girl was abducted from her home in Madison county and married to a young man 17 years old named John Green. The girl had last Christmas been placed in the house of Dr. Bonesteel, at Summerville, Sullivan county, and while there she became a relative of the girl's father induced her to leave Bonesteel's house and go with her. On April 5 the Bell woman, with Minnie Corwin and little Mary appeared before Justice Evans, at Burlingham, and they were married, the girl stating that she are to be 16.

Mrs. Green says that after hearing of the marriage of her daughter she went to Summitville, where she found Corwin and her child living together as man and wife at the Bell woman's house and took her away. The young wife is now with her mother and refuses to return to her husband.

It is claimed that the locomotives can maintain a speed of sixty miles an hour, drawing six to eight coaches.

An Ottawa, Ont., special says: "Regarding the seizure by the customs officers of the advance sheets of a report of agents for alleged violation of customs entries, the agent of the firm was at Ottawa yesterday and arranged with the customs officers for the redemption to enter custom at Montreal instead of Ottawa on July 15. The rate of duty being perfectly satisfactory to both parties. And indicates that this is the largest one ever entered this Dominion. The difference between the company and officials was settled by the agent."

LOOKS RATHER SERIOUS.

THE CANADIAN AUTHORITIES SEIZE ANOTHER FISHING VESSEL.

Charged With Taking Water on Board Before Reporting to the Custom House—Public Feeling at Portland Very Strong Against the Alleged Outrage.

PORTLAND, Maine, July 3.—Cushing & McKenny, the managing owners of the schooner Fred Fenn, seized by the Canadian cruiser Terror because Capt. Keene refused to have water on board before reporting at the custom house at Shelburn, have as yet received no information from Capt. Keene relative to the seizure. The City Point is valued at $15,000 and her outfit at $5,000. She was fully fitted out before leaving this port, and Cushing & McKenny are at a loss to understand why Capt. Keene put into port for water on Capt. Keene has the confidence of owners of the best and most successful fishing vessels in this port. He had with him fourteen men and was on his second trip for the season.

The feeling here is that the seizure of the City Point is a wrong and less justifiable than the seizure of the Ella M. Doughty. As soon as Capt. Keene is heard from the attention of the senator from Maine will be called to the matter and no obtainable information will be spared by Washington, says Mr. McKenny, of the firm of Cushing & McKenny. It seems to be that the action of the Terror is unwarranted and our men should be protected. Let the Terror be ordered off and the Yankee gunboat Yantic sent here. Let there be a strong naval force on the Nova Scotia coast and our men would not be molested, but there is only a contemptible collection of the contraband of the city."

HALIFAX, July 3.—The cruiser Terror captured two more American fishing schooners last night at Sand Point near Shelburne and took them up the latter harbor this morning. The schooners are the George W. Cushing and C. B. Harrington, both of Portland, Maine.

MINNIE WANTS A DIVORCE.

Serious Charges Filed Against Her Husband, Rev. William Hammond.

CLEVELAND, O., July 3.—Minnie L. Hammond, wife of the Rev. William Hammond, late of the First Welsh Presbyterian church, but now in jail at Montreal for theft and forgery, has applied for a divorce. She says she has suffered from Hammond and buried three wives before he married her, all of whom died under suspicious circumstances. She married him Feb. 5, and he fled April 15. He tried to get her property and completed her soon after the marriage to make a will in his favor. Thereafter he tried to poison her by drugs. She became sick. He claimed to have married again and insisted upon treating her himself. He failed to kill her. He afterwards without authority drew $2,000 of her money from the bank and stole a $1,100 mortgage from her. She had him arrested and he fled to Canada. The application will come up for hearing in October.

Father Barry's Goodness.

On Thursday evening next one of the most interesting and instructive entertainments of the kind ever given in this city will occur at Priory hall, St. Paul's church, when and where Rev. Father Barry will select one hundred from several thousand views and present them with his fine stereopticon. This entertainment will be given for the benefit of that most worthy public charity the Home for the Homeless. The people of Oswego should not fail to show their appreciation of this kindly act of Fr. Barry's. All know how many and how heavy are his cares and responsibilities, how laborious his life, and yet he finds time to set apart an evening to give an exhibition of his fine collection of pictures for the benefit of an institution which is at once a public care and a public benefaction.

The entertainment of Thursday evening will be unique in that the finest views from a collection of the largest and best in the state will be presented and fully described by Father Barry, who has thoroughly prepared himself for that work. It is to be hoped that the large and commodious hall will be filled on the occasion, both as a token of appreciation of Father Barry's kindness, and as a substantial aid to the Home for the Homeless which stands in need of assistance at this time.

Reported to be Insane.

The neighbors of Mrs. Polly Audlin, who resides on East Tenth between Mitchell and Van Buren, have reported to the charity commissioners that the old lady is insane and wholly unable to take care of herself. Mrs. Audlin is very old. The charity commissioners do not want to place her in the poor house as a pauper for the reason that she has considerable property on the East side, more than enough to support her comfortably until her death if it is converted into money. Something should be done by the board of charity and that speedily.

THE FAKIR CONVICTED.

Recorder Bulger Holds that He is Guilty of Larceny Under the Penal Code—Another Warrant for His Arrest Issued—His Escape Towards Fulton.

The evidence in the case of John H. Dalton, the fakir who swindled a number of people here out of money on Friday last, and who was arrested on complaint of Myron Allen on a charge of petit larceny, was finished last evening and the case summed up by the attorneys. Recorder Bulger said he would reserve his decision until this morning, and Dalton was allowed to go on the $250 which he had deposited with the county treasurer in lieu of other security. The usual crowd which has watched the trial since its commencement was present to-day, and when recorder Bulger took his seat the court room was quickly crowded.

The bail bond and certificate of deposit was returned and the recorder after briefly reviewing the evidence said he thought the prisoner was guilty of the crime charged under that section of the penal code which defines larceny as "where money or other goods have been obtained by the color or aid of fraudulent or false representation or pretense." The prisoner was then fined $50 or 50 days in the county jail. From a large roll of bills the fine was paid and hastily leaving the court room Dalton jumped into a hack and was driven rapidly over the lower bridge in the direction of the county treasurers office.

In the meantime Mr. Morehouse was busily preparing an affidavit for John McCormack, an old man who had invested $8 for chains, and a warrant was issued on his complaint charging Dalton with petit larceny in obtaining by fraud the above stated sum of money from McCormack.

The warrant was handed to officer Gettings and together with Mr. Morehouse they took a hack and started in pursuit of Dalton. It was learned that he had taken the east river road in the direction of Seneca Hill and was probably on his way to Fulton. The chase was discontinued and the officer returned to police headquarters and a description of Dalton was telephoned to Fulton and the authorities there notified to arrest him. His "pal" remained behind and will secure the money deposited with the county treasurer.

Up to 2 P. M. nothing had been heard from Dalton. The hackman who took him out of the city refuses to give any information. Should he not be captured, and the chances are that he will not be, the police have no one to blame but themselves. With the slight start he had he should have been overtaken.

Base Ball Notes.

Binghamton wants Kinzie of Rochester, who was released last week. Parsons, Rochester's pitcher, has been fined $110.

Backer of Corning, N. Y., is pitching for Canastota. He was tried by the Stars in one of the Buffalo-Star games, but wouldn't do.

Brill, formerly of the Detroits, has signed with Buffalo as a pitcher. He is regarded as an exploded phenomenon, like Parsons of Rochester and Sweeney late of the Stars.

To-day the Rochesters play at Toronto, the Buffalos at Hamilton, the Oswegos at Syracuse and the Utics at Binghamton.

The Utics cut capers not to the memory of third baseman Smith of the Torontos who was killed while bathing as detailed in another column, will wear an emblem of mourning to Binghamton to-day also on the ball field consisting of a miniature American flag and surmounted by a black bow of silk ribbon.

Below is the standing of the International league clubs up to date:

	Won.	Lost.	Per cent.
1. Utics	39	21	.650
2. Rochester	38	24	.613
3. Toronto	39	25	.609
4. Hamilton	34	29	.540
5. Stars	34	30	.531
6. Buffalo	31	33	.484
7. Binghamton	23	44	.343
8. Oswego	17	47	.266

The Oswegos cleared $450 on the western trip.

The Rochesters have played all their games at Hamilton.

The games to have been played at Toronto yesterday were postponed owing to Smith's death.

Golins, Oswego's former short stop, has been made manager and captain of the Norwich team.

After all, the Canadian cities prove poor ball towns. They have no crowds at all except on Saturdays, and the guarantees they pay often amount to more than the receipts.

Manager Ormsbee offered his resignation to the Oswego directors yesterday, but they would not accept.

The Syracuse Standard says Oswego has the best ball team now it ever had, and the team is respected everywhere outside of Oswego.

The body of Smith of the Torontos will be taken to Cleveland O., for burial. Smith played in the right field Saturday against the Oswegos and had six put outs. That morning he went hunting with Larkin, Corriman and others of the Oswegos. He was well liked by all ball players and was a favorite with the public. When the Torontos played in Syracuse last he took part in the second game but was absent attending his mothers funeral. Smith played last season with the Incumseths of London.

Sale of a Tug.

The tug Steve H. Lyons has been sold to Captain McLaren of Montreal for $1,100. She will be used at Welland for towing dredge scows. The price paid is about half what she is worth.

Dr. W. H. Blunt, celebrated physician and surgeon, will arrive this evening and stop at the Doolittle House for a few days. The doctor delights in chronic cases and has had most wonderful success with them. He has cured many cases of St. Vitus dance, consumption, dyspepsia, elliptic fits, and all of these cases which are usually considered incurable. The doctor is not an outside doctor but is surely a very fine physician and will soon tell you if he can cure or help you. During his three years residence in Watertown he has effected wonderful cures as the testimonials he brings will show. Call on him at the Doolittle House.

Yachting and Rowing.

Toronto World: The cutter Aileen dropped anchor at her moorings yesterday morning at 6 o'clock, having on board Lt Col. Grassett, IA.-Col. Fairtlough, R. M. C., Capt. Manley and George Hargraft, the remainder of the crew having preceded these by train. She left Oswego on Friday at 11 A. M and with fair but light weather reached off Victoria Park Saturday at 4 P. M. There she was becalmed all night, and took 14 hours to get in. The Cygnet arrived shortly afterwards. All aboard speak highly of the cuisine and the treatment abroad.

Buffalo Canal Freights.

Buffalo Courier to-day: Canal freights were active for wheat, but dull for corn. Rates were irregular, though stronger than on Saturday. Shippers were paying 4½ cents on wheat, and many boats accepted this price, though some got a quarter cent better from the forwarders. The rates on corn were 4½ and 4¼ cents.

For Beating Scab Sailors.

Charles Madison and Patrick Joyce, sailors, were arrested last night by officers Grant and Gittings for having boarded the schooner McVeigh while laying at the D. L. & W. trestle yesterday and assaulting non-union sailors and driving them ashore. They were arraigned on a charge of riot and pleaded not guilty, and furnished $300 bail for their appearance August 16. Warrants are out for two others on the same charge.

Invited to Participate

Chief Warsop of this city has received an invitation from chief Jewhurst of the Auburn fire department for himself and the department to attend the seventh annual parade of the Auburn fire department to be held Thursday, September 9. The invitation will be presented to the fire commissioners at their monthly meeting to be acted upon.

The Fulton Street Railroad.

The opening of the Fulton and Oswego Falls street railroad advertised to take place to-morrow has been postponed until further notice owing to some fault found with the curve. Due notice will be given as soon as the time for opening the road is determined on.

CANAL BOAT BLOCKADE.

A Leak at Lock 47 Which Will Delay Boats for Thirty-six Hours.

Syracuse Courier: Yesterday forenoon a leak was discovered at lock 47, near the tunnel, in the Erie canal. Investigation showed the leak was about 10 feet from the head of the lock and extended from the tow-path look through the small tunnel between the locks into the heel-path lock. When water was admitted to the tow-path look it ran through into the heel-path look. Workmen were at once put to work and this morning coffer dams had been constructed in both locks and the work of repairing the leak will be begun. All boats at the lock were passed through and the water on the short level drawn off. Boats will be delayed at least thirty six hours before the damage can be repaired. Early this morning the canal on both sides of the short level was blockaded for a long distance by the delayed boats. There are no boats grounded on the short level as all were passed through before drawing off the water.

Down the Lake and River.

Dr. Charles A. Neide, New York, secretary of the American Canoe Association which meets at Grindstone Island on Aug. 13, was in Kingston last evening. He says the gathering this year will be attended by 300 or 400 canoeists from Canada and the Eastern States, and by delegations from San Francisco, Cal; St. Paul Minn; Jacksonville, Florida and England. This is the pivotal year of the association. It is expected that division will hereafter be established with the present American canoe association as the parent body. Each division, Eastern, Western, Canadian and Southern will be governed by a vice commodore. Mr. Neide says that new features will be introduced at the assemblage this year. Besides the regatta and the international race there will be two cruises, one around Grindstone Island, led by Mr. Neide, and another among the Islands conducted by Commodore Rathbun. A tournament will also occur after the fashion of that of the South American Indians. The canoeists, standing in their boats will enter in combat with padded poles fifteen feet long and attempt to knock each other from their crafts. The victor will receive a valuable prize.

This is something of a week for politicians on the river. The Hon. James W. Husted, speaker of the Assembly, is at the Thousand Island house with his family. Bob McCord, Assistant Secretary Coon and D. W. C. Wheeler are now at the Crossman. Hon. Wallace Tappan, of Onondaga county, who championed the bills to reduce elevator charges and remove the state capitol to Syracuse so vigorously in the Assembly last winter, is now stopping in a cottage near the Bay. Warner Miller keeps the people well supplied with copies of his speech on the River and Harbor bill, and it is not expected that speaker Husted will gain much strength in northern New York.

The Fire Record.

At 3:30 this morning an alarm of fire was turned in from box 56, near the Oswego Manufacturing company's works. The fire proved to have caught in a small barn back of an unoccupied house owned by Patrick Malone, and situated on Seventh avenue near Schuyler street. The flames communicated to an adjoining house occupied by a Mrs. Bateman and owned by Mrs. Martha Barnes. Both buildings were destroyed. In the cellar of the unoccupied house owned by Patrick Malone was found a barrel filled with shavings and light kindling wood which had been set on fire with the evident intent of destroying the building. It was discovered in time to prevent much damage. It is probable that the fire in the barn was also of incendiary character. It was not learned whether or not the property destroyed was insured.

Shooting Stars.

To-night the eyes of students of astronomy will be turned heavenward to witness the annual appearance of the shooting stars known as the "Tears of St. Lawrence." This zone of fiery visitors follows in the orbit of comet No. 2 of 1862, one end crossing the earth's orbit, and the other extending far beyond the planet Neptune. Astronomers say that the display to-night will very likely be unusually brilliant. Star gazers should watch the constellation Perseus in the northeastern sky.

DENNIS MURPHY'S FIND,

The Queer Fish Picked Up in the Oswego River.

While crossing the old harbor in a yacht a few days since Mr. Dennis Murphy of this city scooped up a curious fish which he at once sent to Dr. Lee, teacher of zoology in the Normal school. The fish was a stranger to her as well as to the large number of Summer school students who came to see it. Some idea of the appearance of this little seven inch wonder may be given by repeating the comments of those who saw it, some declaring it was a young alligator, others an eel, while the better informed agreed that it resembled a gar pike, but differed in such important characteristics that it was not safe to call it a gar-pike. Like the gar-pike, this little fellow has what the boys call a bill. This bill or snout, is a third the length of the body and armed with a full set of very sharp teeth. Unlike the gar-pike our prize has no scales and sports the most wonderful tail in the world—perhaps it would be better to say the most wonderful two tails, for besides the ordinarily placed, rounded tail fin, he has above that, running out as a portion of the posterior end of the body, a small tail which looks much like the tail of a tadpole. This extra tail is a conundrum which he likes to flirish before the eyes of the ignorant. He moves it independently of the lower and larger tail and trills it very fast, first on one side of the body, then on the other. He comes to the surface to breathe air as do the gar-pike, and the scientific portion of our summer visitors were thoroughly puzzled, until an article appearing in two numbers of the Popular Science Monthly for 1877 and written by Prof. Wilder of Cornell university, satisfactorily cleared up the mystery.

Our stranger fish was described accurately as a young gar-pike whose scales have not yet been developed and whose extra tail is a peculiarity of these youngsters which is finally absorbed. The gar pike is found in Lake Ontario. Its habits are still almost unknown and the popular science suggests that those so fortunate as to be living upon the shores of Lake Ontario might advance science and immortalize themselves by investing from the gar-pike his private family affairs, and revealing them to mankind.

The Excursion Season.

On Saturday next the employes of the Kingsford factories and their families accompanied by members of the Sauveur Summer School of Languages will picnic at Sylvan Beach, on Oneida lake. It is believed that over 1,000 people will participate.

The excursion will be conducted by the Kingsford band. Tickets for the round trip $1. The band will give two grand concerts on the ground during the day.

The excursion of the First Baptist Sabbath school, which was to be given next Thursday is postponed until further notice.

Father Barry's Goodness.

On Thursday evening next one of the most interesting and instructive entertainments of the kind ever given in this city will occur at Priory hall, St. Paul's church, when and where Rev. Father Barry will select one hundred from several thousand views and present them with his fine stereopticon. This entertainment will be given for the benefit of that most worthy public charity the Home for the Homeless. The people of Oswego should not fail to show their appreciation of this kindly act of Fr. Barry's. All know how many and how heavy are his cares and responsibilities, how laborious his life, and yet he finds time to set apart an evening to give an exhibition of his fine collection of pictures for the benefit of an institution which is at once a public care and a public benefaction.

The entertainment of Thursday evening will be unique in that the finest views from a collection of the largest and best in the state will be presented and fully described by Father Barry, who has thoroughly prepared himself for that work. It is to be hoped that the large and commodious hall will be filled on the occasion, both as a token of appreciation of Father Barry's kindness, and as a substantial aid to the Home for the Homeless which stands in need of assistance at this time.

Celebrating the Fiftieth Anniversary

Fulton, Aug. 9.—Saturday being the fiftieth anniversary of the laying of the corner stone of the Episcopal church, services appropriate to the occasion were held. There was morning prayer at 10:30 o'clock followed by an address by the Rev. Mr. Beauchamp of Baldwinsville, after which the celebration of the holy communion by the Rev. Fredrick Winne of Canastota, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Beauchamp and the rector, the Rev. H. B. Goodyear. The bell, that has lain in the garret of the church so long, was placed in the new tower and rung on the occasion. Evening service was held at 7:30 o'clock and a sermon was preached by the Rev. Theodore M. Bishop of Hoosick Falls, who had been rector of the parish more than a third of the time of its existence.

Reported to be Insane.

The neighbors of Mrs. Polly Audlin, who resides on East Tenth between Mitchell and Van Buren, have reported to the charity commissioners that the old lady is insane and wholly unable to take care of herself. Mrs. Audlin is very old. The charity commissioners do not want to place her in the poor house as a pauper for the reason that she has considerable property on the East side, more than enough to support her comfortably until her death if it is converted into money. Something should be done by the board of charity and that speedily.

Foot Race at Oswego Falls.

Oswego Falls, Aug. 10.—Saturday at 2 P. M. will occur the great foot race between "Ed" Wilson and Sidney Clarke. Other races are being arranged so that a half day of sport is promised. Wilson is training for the race and his friends look for a victory over the champion of the State.

To Whom it May Concern

The custom of carrying accounts from six to nine and twelve months, as I have to do in many cases, has become so annoying, expensive and embarrassing, that in future accounts not settled monthly will be closed to further credit.

THE FAKIR CONVICTED.

The evidence in the case of John H. Dalton, the fakir who swindled a number of people here out of money on Friday last, and who was arrested on complaint of Myron Allen on a charge of petit larceny, was finished last evening and the case summed up by the attorneys. Recorder Bulger said he would reserve his decision until this morning, and Dalton was allowed to go on the $250 which he had deposited with the county treasurer in lieu of other security. The usual crowd which has watched the trial since its commencement was present to-day, and when recorder Bulger took his seat the court room was quickly crowded.

The bail bond and certificate of deposit was returned and the recorder after briefly reviewing the evidence said he thought the prisoner was guilty of the crime charged under that section of the penal code which defines larceny as "where money or other goods have been obtained by the color or aid of fraudulent or false representation or pretense." The prisoner was then fined $50 or 50 days in the county jail. From a large roll of bills the fine was paid and hastily leaving the court room Dalton jumped into a hack and was driven rapidly over the lower bridge in the direction of the county treasurers office.

In the meantime Mr. Morehouse was busily preparing an affidavit for John McCormack, an old man who had invested $8 for chains, and a warrant was issued on his complaint charging Dalton with petit larceny in obtaining by fraud the above stated sum of money from McCormack.

The warrant was handed to officer Gettings and together with Mr. Morehouse they took a hack and started in pursuit of Dalton. It was learned that he had taken the east river road in the direction of Seneca Hill and was probably on his way to Fulton. The chase was discontinued and the officer returned to police headquarters and a description of Dalton was telephoned to Fulton and the authorities there notified to arrest him. His "pal" remained behind and will secure the money deposited with the county treasurer.

Up to 2 P. M. nothing had been heard from Dalton. The hackman who took him out of the city refuses to give any information. Should he not be captured, and the chances are that he will not be, the police have no one to blame but themselves. With the slight start he had he should have been overtaken.

Base Ball Notes.

Binghamton wants Kinzie of Rochester, who was released last week. Parsons, Rochester's pitcher, has been fined $110.

Backer of Corning, N. Y., is pitching for Canastota. He was tried by the Stars in one of the Buffalo-Star games, but wouldn't do.

Brill, formerly of the Detroits, has signed with Buffalo as a pitcher. He is regarded as an exploded phenomenon, like Parsons of Rochester and Sweeney late of the Stars.

To-day the Rochesters play at Toronto, the Buffalos at Hamilton, the Oswegos at Syracuse and the Utics at Binghamton.

The Utics cut capers not to the memory of third baseman Smith of the Torontos who was killed while bathing as detailed in another column, will wear an emblem of mourning to Binghamton to-day also on the ball field consisting of a miniature American flag and surmounted by a black bow of silk ribbon.

Below is the standing of the International league clubs up to date:

	Won.	Lost.	Per cent.
1. Utics	39	21	.650
2. Rochester	38	24	.613
3. Toronto	39	25	.609
4. Hamilton	34	29	.540
5. Stars	34	30	.531
6. Buffalo	31	33	.484
7. Binghamton	23	44	.343
8. Oswego	17	47	.266

The Oswegos cleared $450 on the western trip.

The Rochesters have played all their games at Hamilton.

The games to have been played at Toronto yesterday were postponed owing to Smith's death.

Golins, Oswego's former short stop, has been made manager and captain of the Norwich team.

After all, the Canadian cities prove poor ball towns. They have no crowds at all except on Saturdays, and the guarantees they pay often amount to more than the receipts.

Manager Ormsbee offered his resignation to the Oswego directors yesterday, but they would not accept.

The Syracuse Standard says Oswego has the best ball team now it ever had, and the team is respected everywhere outside of Oswego.

The body of Smith of the Torontos will be taken to Cleveland O., for burial. Smith played in the right field Saturday against the Oswegos and had six put outs. That morning he went hunting with Larkin, Corriman and others of the Oswegos. He was well liked by all ball players and was a favorite with the public. When the Torontos played in Syracuse last he took part in the second game but was absent attending his mothers funeral. Smith played last season with the Incumseths of London.

Sale of a Tug.

The tug Steve H. Lyons has been sold to Captain McLaren of Montreal for $1,100. She will be used at Welland for towing dredge scows. The price paid is about half what she is worth.

Dr. W. H. Blunt, celebrated physician and surgeon, will arrive this evening and stop at the Doolittle House for a few days. The doctor delights in chronic cases and has had most wonderful success with them. He has cured many cases of St. Vitus dance, consumption, dyspepsia, elliptic fits, and all of these cases which are usually considered incurable. The doctor is not an outside doctor but is surely a very fine physician and will soon tell you if he can cure or help you. During his three years residence in Watertown he has effected wonderful cures as the testimonials he brings will show. Call on him at the Doolittle House.

Yachting and Rowing.

Toronto World: The cutter Aileen dropped anchor at her moorings yesterday morning at 6 o'clock, having on board Lt Col. Grassett, IA.-Col. Fairtlough, R. M. C., Capt. Manley and George Hargraft, the remainder of the crew having preceded these by train. She left Oswego on Friday at 11 A. M and with fair but light weather reached off Victoria Park Saturday at 4 P. M. There she was becalmed all night, and took 14 hours to get in. The Cygnet arrived shortly afterwards. All aboard speak highly of the cuisine and the treatment abroad.

Buffalo Canal Freights.

Buffalo Courier to-day: Canal freights were active for wheat, but dull for corn. Rates were irregular, though stronger than on Saturday. Shippers were paying 4½ cents on wheat, and many boats accepted this price, though some got a quarter cent better from the forwarders. The rates on corn were 4½ and 4¼ cents.

For Beating Scab Sailors.

Charles Madison and Patrick Joyce, sailors, were arrested last night by officers Grant and Gittings for having boarded the schooner McVeigh while laying at the D. L. & W. trestle yesterday and assaulting non-union sailors and driving them ashore. They were arraigned on a charge of riot and pleaded not guilty, and furnished $300 bail for their appearance August 16. Warrants are out for two others on the same charge.

Invited to Participate

Chief Warsop of this city has received an invitation from chief Jewhurst of the Auburn fire department for himself and the department to attend the seventh annual parade of the Auburn fire department to be held Thursday, September 9. The invitation will be presented to the fire commissioners at their monthly meeting to be acted upon.

CANAL BOAT BLOCKADE.

A Leak at Lock 47 Which Will Delay Boats for Thirty-six Hours.

Syracuse Courier: Yesterday forenoon a leak was discovered at lock 47, near the tunnel, in the Erie canal. Investigation showed the leak was about 10 feet from the head of the lock and extended from the tow-path look through the small tunnel between the locks into the heel-path lock. When water was admitted to the tow-path look it ran through into the heel-path look. Workmen were at once put to work and this morning coffer dams had been constructed in both locks and the work of repairing the leak will be begun. All boats at the lock were passed through and the water on the short level drawn off. Boats will be delayed at least thirty six hours before the damage can be repaired. Early this morning the canal on both sides of the short level was blockaded for a long distance by the delayed boats. There are no boats grounded on the short level as all were passed through before drawing off the water.

Down the Lake and River.

Dr. Charles A. Neide, New York, secretary of the American Canoe Association which meets at Grindstone Island on Aug. 13, was in Kingston last evening. He says the gathering this year will be attended by 300 or 400 canoeists from Canada and the Eastern States, and by delegations from San Francisco, Cal; St. Paul Minn; Jacksonville, Florida and England. This is the pivotal year of the association. It is expected that division will hereafter be established with the present American canoe association as the parent body. Each division, Eastern, Western, Canadian and Southern will be governed by a vice commodore. Mr. Neide says that new features will be introduced at the assemblage this year. Besides the regatta and the international race there will be two cruises, one around Grindstone Island, led by Mr. Neide, and another among the Islands conducted by Commodore Rathbun. A tournament will also occur after the fashion of that of the South American Indians. The canoeists, standing in their boats will enter in combat with padded poles fifteen feet long and attempt to knock each other from their crafts. The victor will receive a valuable prize.

This is something of a week for politicians on the river. The Hon. James W. Husted, speaker of the Assembly, is at the Thousand Island house with his family. Bob McCord, Assistant Secretary Coon and D. W. C. Wheeler are now at the Crossman. Hon. Wallace Tappan, of Onondaga county, who championed the bills to reduce elevator charges and remove the state capitol to Syracuse so vigorously in the Assembly last winter, is now stopping in a cottage near the Bay. Warner Miller keeps the people well supplied with copies of his speech on the River and Harbor bill, and it is not expected that speaker Husted will gain much strength in northern New York.

The Fire Record.

At 3:30 this morning an alarm of fire was turned in from box 56, near the Oswego Manufacturing company's works. The fire proved to have caught in a small barn back of an unoccupied house owned by Patrick Malone, and situated on Seventh avenue near Schuyler street. The flames communicated to an adjoining house occupied by a Mrs. Bateman and owned by Mrs. Martha Barnes. Both buildings were destroyed. In the cellar of the unoccupied house owned by Patrick Malone was found a barrel filled with shavings and light kindling wood which had been set on fire with the evident intent of destroying the building. It was discovered in time to prevent much damage. It is probable that the fire in the barn was also of incendiary character. It was not learned whether or not the property destroyed was insured.

Shooting Stars.

To-night the eyes of students of astronomy will be turned heavenward to witness the annual appearance of the shooting stars known as the "Tears of St. Lawrence." This zone of fiery visitors follows in the orbit of comet No. 2 of 1862, one end crossing the earth's orbit, and the other extending far beyond the planet Neptune. Astronomers say that the display to-night will very likely be unusually brilliant. Star gazers should watch the constellation Perseus in the northeastern sky.

DENNIS MURPHY'S FIND,

The Queer Fish Picked Up in the Oswego River.

While crossing the old harbor in a yacht a few days since Mr. Dennis Murphy of this city scooped up a curious fish which he at once sent to Dr. Lee, teacher of zoology in the Normal school. The fish was a stranger to her as well as to the large number of Summer school students who came to see it. Some idea of the appearance of this little seven inch wonder may be given by repeating the comments of those who saw it, some declaring it was a young alligator, others an eel, while the better informed agreed that it resembled a gar pike, but differed in such important characteristics that it was not safe to call it a gar-pike. Like the gar-pike, this little fellow has what the boys call a bill. This bill or snout, is a third the length of the body and armed with a full set of very sharp teeth. Unlike the gar-pike our prize has no scales and sports the most wonderful tail in the world—perhaps it would be better to say the most wonderful two tails, for besides the ordinarily placed, rounded tail fin, he has above that, running out as a portion of the posterior end of the body, a small tail which looks much like the tail of a tadpole. This extra tail is a conundrum which he likes to flirish before the eyes of the ignorant. He moves it independently of the lower and larger tail and trills it very fast, first on one side of the body, then on the other. He comes to the surface to breathe air as do the gar-pike, and the scientific portion of our summer visitors were thoroughly puzzled, until an article appearing in two numbers of the Popular Science Monthly for 1877 and written by Prof. Wilder of Cornell university, satisfactorily cleared up the mystery.

Our stranger fish was described accurately as a young gar-pike whose scales have not yet been developed and whose extra tail is a peculiarity of these youngsters which is finally absorbed. The gar pike is found in Lake Ontario. Its habits are still almost unknown and the popular science suggests that those so fortunate as to be living upon the shores of Lake Ontario might advance science and immortalize themselves by investing from the gar-pike his private family affairs, and revealing them to mankind.

The Excursion Season.

On Saturday next the employes of the Kingsford factories and their families accompanied by members of the Sauveur Summer School of Languages will picnic at Sylvan Beach, on Oneida lake. It is believed that over 1,000 people will participate.

The excursion will be conducted by the Kingsford band. Tickets for the round trip $1. The band will give two grand concerts on the ground during the day.

The excursion of the First Baptist Sabbath school, which was to be given next Thursday is postponed until further notice.

HOW BILLY SUNDAY BECAME CONVERTED

Outdoor Meeting Turned Him to God After He'd Been Drinking---Prayed to Make Catch

By Frank G. Menke

New York, April 22.—The story of Billy Sunday's conversion to religion while he was one of baseball's greatest stars, is an old old story, but the fans seem never to tire of hearing it. In response to numerous requests, here is the story again, as it appeared in the April issue of the Baseball Magazine. Sunday tells the story and adds a few new features:

"About 28 years ago I sauntered down State street in Chicago one Sunday afternoon with some baseball players. We went into a saloon and had several drinks and then started down the street again. When we reached a vacant lot at Van Buren street, there stood some men and women with Harry Monroe as their leader, singing gospel hymns and playing on a cornet. We sat down to listen.

"I had heard those same hymns bask in the little Methodist building at Ames, Ia., where I used to go to church. I had heard my mother sing them. I bowed my face in my hands for a little while and then arose and said to the other fellows: 'Boys, it's all off; we have come to where the roads part,' and I bade them good-by.

"When the men and women had finished singing, Harry Monroe said: 'Boys, we invite you to come to the Pacific Garden Mission to listen to the story of some down and outers—girls who have sidestepped but are now going square.' I followed along to the mission and I liked the meetings and went back to others the following nights.

When He Was Converted

"One night I went forward and got on my knees and gave my heart to God. Then I went over to the West Side and joined the Jefferson Park Presbyterian Church. I was keeping company then with a young woman, Nell Thompson, who is now Mrs. Sunday. Nell was a Presbyterian so I became a Presbyterian. If she had been a Catholic I would have become a Catholic.

"After that I didn't sleep for several nights and ate little, for I was afraid of the horse-laugh that the boys would give me. One morning I went to the ball grounds for practice. The first man to meet me was Mike Kelly, our catcher. 'Mike' had a heart in him as big as a woman. He came up to me and said:

"'Bill,' religion ain't my long suit, but if ever Mike can help you, just let me know, for I won't knock you.'

"Then up came 'Cap' Anson, Ed Williamson, John Clarkson and every member of the famous White Stockings. They all gave me the glad hand. There was none of the raillery or knocking.

"That afternoon we were playing the old Detroit team and we were fighting hard for the championship. 'Mike' Kelly was catching and John Clarkson pitching. We had them beaten by one run when it came up to the last half of the ninth inning. Detroit had men on second and third with two out. Charley Bennett, their old catcher, was at bat. Charley caught a low one on the nose.

Prayed to Make Catch.

"I saw it coming out to right field like a shell out of a mortar and it was up to me. There were thousands of people out in the field, for the grandstand and bleachers had overflowed. I whirled and went with all my speed. I could do 100 yards in 10 seconds from the crack of the pistol and I had run the basses in 14 seconds. I was going so fast that day that you couldn't see me for dust. I yelled to the crowd. 'Get out of the way' and they opened up like the Red Sea for the rod of Moses.

"And as I ran I offered my first prayer and it was something like this:

"'God, I'm in an awful hole. Help me out, if you ever helped mortal man in your life, help me get that ball. And you haven't much time to make up your mind.'

"I looked around and saw that I was about under the ball. I shot out my left hand and the ball struck and stuck. I fell under the feet of a team that stood there but jumped up with the ball in my hand.

"Then up came Tom Johnson, who later became Mayor of Cleveland, and his brother Al.

"Al said to me: 'Here, Bill, is $10. Go and buy yourself a new hat and tomorrow I'll buy you the best suit of clothes in Chicago. That catch won me $1,500.' Some fellow once asked me, 'Did you take the $10?' And I said. 'You bet your life I did.'

"I believe the Lord helped me get the ball that day, because I was trying to trot on the square with Him."

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, April 24.—Patterened after the law which was enacted in this State last year relative to the compensation of workmen, the State of Colorado has just adopted a statute drafted by Former Assemblyman Cyrus W. Phillips of Rochester, the father of the Workmen's Compensation Commission in New York State.

For nine weeks Mr. Phillips remained in the western city assisting in the passage of the bill and explaining its merits and workings in his native State back east. He has just returned to his duties as an assistant workman compensation commissioner.

Back in 1909 Assembyman Phillips, for he was then a member of the legislature, introduced a bill to provide a joint legislative committee to investigate the subject of which J. Mayhew Wainwright was selected as chairman, he being at that time a member of the senate from Westchester county. It made a thorough investigation into the subject of compensation and reported its findings to the legislature of 1910 This resulted in the introduction and passage of a bill, which in reality was a double bill, there having been two measures necessary in order to achieve the result desired.

The Court of Appeals declared that one of the bills was unconstitutional and it was necesary to amend the State Constitution so as to include in it the ideas which had been evolved by Assemblyman Phillips and his associates. A bill providing for such amendmeent was introduced by the Rochester law maker and after its passage and approval by the governor, was submitted to the people in the form of a refereendum in the fall of 1913. Thee proposition was approved by five hundred thousand voters.

The legislature, still in session because of the impeachment trial of William Sulzer was brought togeteher by Governor Glynn, who succeeded Sulzer automotically, and was requested to pass a workmens compensation act. This result was accomplished. Inasmuch as the provisions of the bill prescribed that the law should not take effect until January, 1914, more entanglements were encountered which caused the Republican Assembly of 1914 to re enact the bill.

What is regared as the last step in the creation of a workmens compensation commission is that which has just been taken by the Republican senate and assembly which consolidates the State department of labor and the workmens compensation commission, both Democratic bodies which were created by Governor Glynn. Other than to reduce the force of employees, it is said that the consolidation will have little effect.

Assemblyman Phillips is regarded as perhaps the first authority upon the question of workmens compensation. He has visited all parts of the United States as chairman of the commission of the National Civil Federation and the American Federation of Labor to investigate the workings of workmens compensation laws in various States. His report was incorporated among the senate documents of the United States an thousands of copies were distributed.

Several months ago Governor George A. Carlson, Republican executive of Colorado, invited Mr. Phillips to come to that State and assist in the drafting of a workmens compensation bill identical to that which was passed in New York State, or as nearly like it as possible. The coal strikes in Colorado made such a law imperative there.

BAR WILL OPOSE ABOLITION OF ELECTION

The Oswego County Bar Association will hold a special meeting Monday morning at 11:30 o'clock at the Court House to take action on the proposed amendment to the constitution providing for an appointive instead of an elective juriciary and abolishing the county court and surrogate courts. It is expected that the bar will oppose the proposed change, as other upstate association have done.

OUR COUNTRY HOME

"County children should be taught in terms of country life," declares W. T. Hodges in a bulletin just issued by the United States Bureau of Education. In order to recover some definite things that have been done in rural Public schools toward infusing into both parents and pupils the "stay-on-the-farm" spirit, Mr. Hodges sent 3,500 letters to superintendents throughout the country who have rural schools under their supervision. From the replies many suggestions of special value have been received.

"Farm arithmetic, farm geography, and textbooks in agriculture" have been secured by Berks county, Pa. Newton county, Mo., has succeeded in making the school a community center by having work done to supplement that done at home and by inducing patrons to visit the schools. The latter is accomplished by the "old farm-wagon and big-dinner" plan, whereby as many as 2,000 persons in the community have visited one school on a certain day in the year.

A teacher of Warren county, Ind., who gave her pupils the "option of work in agriculture or Virgil," was astonished to find that in practically every instance the students took both subjects, and the grades rose beyond anything before experienced.

"We have improvised domestic science teaching by means of coal-oil stoves and kitchen utensils which the patrons of the school gave through a kitchen shower," says an enthusiastic teacher from Chester township, Ohio. A teacher who was not a graduate in domestic science, but who had "grit and determination," put the girls of this school in preparing hot lunches which were sold at a few cents. A varied menu was provided.

Plainville township, Conn., selects one school in each village and makes of it "a model school," to demonstrate what a rural school under ordinary conditions may become. The result has been that the standard in all the schools in the country has been elevated.

In Caroline county, Md., lantern-slide views contrasting the best and poorest agricultural and domestic conditions are used to good effect.

Summing up the results of his investigation, Mr. Hodges declares: "The letters received reveal improvement everywhere in the schools for country children. There is a feeling that the country child will be best educated for whatever life he may lead, whether in the city or in the country, if taught in terms of country life. The movement toward this is nation-wide. Country schoolhouses are used to some extent as civic centers in all States of the Union. No special feature of rural school work is confined to any one State or section. The home-project method of teaching agriculture, used in Massachusetts is also used in Louisianna, Wisconsin and other States. Boys' and girls' agricultural clubs are found in almost every State in the Union."

JAPAN EAGER TO HOLD LANDS WON.

Public Opinion Against Returning Captured German Territory.

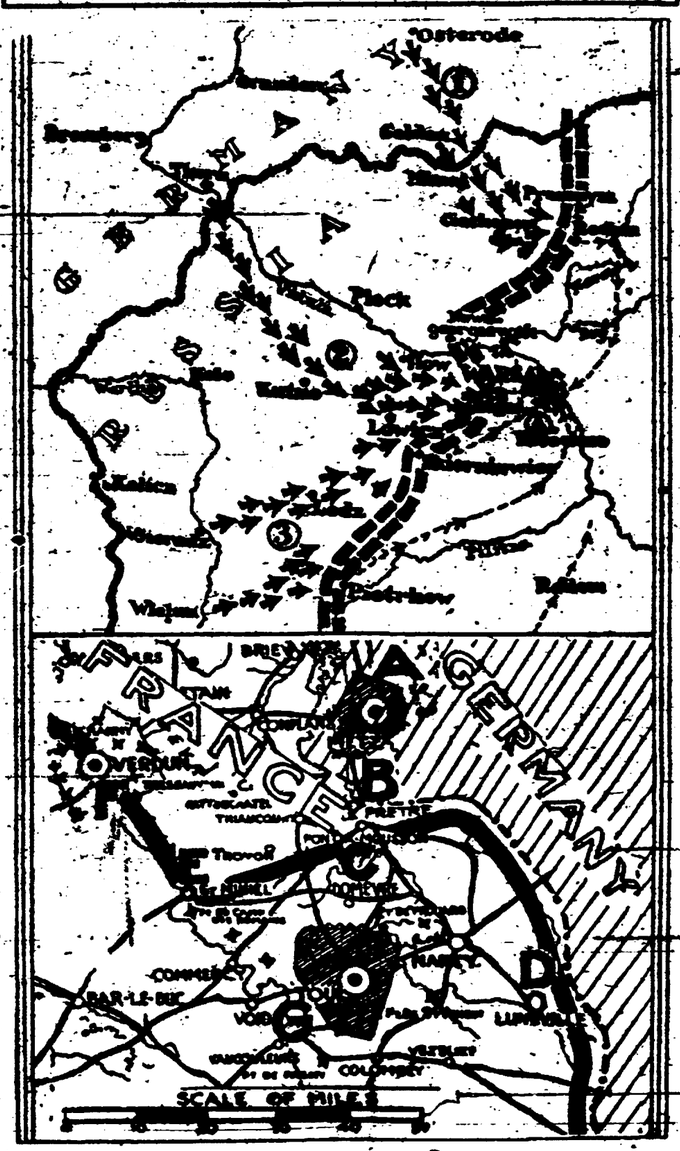
London, Dec. 19.—The strong feeling in Tokio for retention of the captured territory which has cost Japan much blood and treasure is shown by an interesting mail dispatch received by "The Morning Post" from its Tokio correspondent, in which he declares that ships have already set out for the South Sea island to investigate their colonization possibilities. In view of this new division of interests between Japan and Australia, the matter assumes importance. The dispatch reads in part as follows:

"To appreciate the Japanese point of view all the circumstances must be fully considered. In the Western countries emphasis appears to be laid on the conditions in Japan's ultimatum to Germany promising to to return the territory to China on condition that Germany relinquished her hold without force. But Germany did not surrender without much cost to Japan. Thus the circumstances, from the Japanese point of view, are entirely altered. The reduction of Tsing-Tao has cost Japan a good deal in blood and money. There is also the further outlay for policing the Pacific with a widely scattered fleet.

"From all that has been said it is clear that the general feeling in Japan is that none of the German possessions captured can be lightly released. In any case, Japan cannot relinquish them without a quid pro quo. Owing, however, to the tendency toward apprehension in the United States, such questions are not yet open to discussion, although the jingo press has not hesitated to parade its views, even to a sensational degree.

"Ships have already set out for the South Sea Islands, with a view to their use for prospective colonies, and boards of trade are busy making plans for the extension of national commerce in the newly acquired territories. Japan has done a great deal to help the Allies in this war, and she is earnestly hoping that their gratitude in return will assume a practical shape and assist her toward her peaceable progress among the world's great nations."

COSTLY PIECES OF ART.



Chicago, Dec. 19.—Twelve paintings and one piece of sculpture have been purchased by the mayor's committee on art as the nucleus of the first municipal art collection in America. The thirteen works were selected from several hundred exhibited at the art institute. The prices asked came to more than $5,000, but every artist joined in halving his price to enable the city to buy the collection for the $2,500 appropriated.

Sets An Increase.

The salary of under sheriff, to which Supervisor Schulz has just been named, was fixed at $1,200 per year. The salary has been $1,000. Every county in the State except Oswego pays $1,200 a year or more to the under sheriff. The matter was made a special order for Monday night.

Maps of German Drive to Warsaw And French Drive Toward Metz.

Three points of the German drive toward Warsaw, Poland, are indicated by numbers and arrows in the upper map. For weeks reports have been conflicting as to just how far the Germans have advanced. The plan of the German general staff directing the operations in the east is to capture Poland and then hold their defenses on the natural barrier of the Vistula. Official reports and news dispatches indicate that the allies are fighting their way to Metz (A) and add that they have been bombarding the German forts at that point. B is Le Pretre, from which the allies are moving on to Metz; Pont-a-Mousson (C) and Luneville (D), between which towns the allies have regained possession of the frontier for an unbroken length of forty miles; St. Mihiel (E), between which point and Pont-a-Mousson the allies, under General Joffre, broke through the German line. St. Mihiel (E) is the one link in the chain of French forts from Verdun (F) to Toul (G) that the Germans captured and have held for several weeks, but the isolation by the allies of St. Mihiel is of greatest importance.

Old and New Christmas

So many people habitually feel more or less out-of-sorts for the few days following Christmas that Christmas ailments have come to be recognized as a necessary aftermath of the festivities.

Of course, the children will always over-eat themselves; if they were not allowed to eat all sorts of indigestible things, they would feel they were being cheated out of half the joy of the gay Christmas season. As a matter of fact, it is not the children at all who make up the bulk of sufferers from Christmas complaints. It is the grown-ups who, simply through carelessly neglecting to subscribe to one simple rule of health, frequently find themselves more or less unhappy inside, and more tired and run-down physically, at the end of the Christmas holidays than before them.

Of course, children do over-eat themselves more often than grown people. They rejoice, however, in the possession of powers of recuperation which grown-ups, even in the prime of life, can only look back on with envy. Too much plum-pudding, too many sausages with Turkey, too many sweets between meals, may bring on a sharp digestive upset, but in a few hours all traces of it have disappeared, and the one-time sufferer is soon eager for more of the rich foods which caused him pain.

With grown people, after-Christmas ailments are not so much due to indiscriminate eating of indigestible foods as to an utter neglect of any precautions to adapt their systems to the new conditions which reign during the Christmas holidays.

Take the case of the average father of the family, who this year will leave all office work behind him for several days. How does the change affect him? In the first place, the dull monotony of his days is broken in upon and his brain can relax from the high pressure of the office. This much, of course, is a change in the right direction. All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy physically as well as mentally. At the same time, however, staying at home has drawbacks of its own, for it means less exercise, which in its turn should suggest a cutting-down of the food supplied to the body.

You may say that in your particular case, your day's work brings you no exercise at all. The answer, of course, is that although your muscles may not be given any considerable amount of physical work to keep them hard and supple, your brain is nevertheless, actively working—in other works, exercising—and so using up the body's vitality.

To replace this used-up vitality, whether spent in muscular or mental work, a suitable amount of nourishing food must be eaten. As the work falls off, so the amount of food ought to be curtailed. During the Christmas holidays just the opposite nearly happens. Work falls off. Paterfamilias sits at home, reads his paper, has a try at somking and some of the cigars his devoted wife has presented him with, and in general kills time until another meal arrives. At the best he may exert himself to the extent of attending a Christmas service, and then taking a little stroll afterwards before attacking the abundant midday meal. This, of course, corresponds closely to his average Sunday regime.

"That does him no harm," you may say; "in fact, the day's rest does him good."

The difference is that the Sunday is one day by itself, whereas to many people the Christmas holidays will be four days in succession. Too much food and too little exertion may not appreciably affect the health one day a week, but when repeated four days running they are almost certain to upset the digestion and clog up the various organs whose duty it is to separate the waste matters from the good in the food we eat and rid the body of these poisonous products.

The remedy is perfectly simple. There is no need to stint yourself of the good things of the table. Eat, drink, and be merry, within fair moderation, of course. However, you must help your digestive organs by taking plenty of vigorous outdoor exercises.

A two-hours' walk before the midday meal, a round of golf or some other outdoor game with the children in mid-afternoon, and a brisk two-mile walk in the half-hour, before the evening meal will be found worth more than any amount of doctor's prescriptions directed towards relieving the first symptons of biliousness, the mental irritability, disturbed sleep, sour taste in the mouth, loss of appetite, etc., which are such a common aftermath of the Christmas holidays.

At Least This Is the Tone of the British Press; Nothing Official From Foreign Office

By Herbert Temple

London, Jan. 4.—"There is not the remotest question of relinquishing our right of search, which would militate against the interests of allies to the advantage of the enemy; the most that can be expected is that every care will be taken to insure that our right is exercised with the medium amount of care and the minimum amount of hardship and friction."

The British press association today thus forecasted the answer of the British government to President Wilson's note protesting against interference with American merchantmen by the British men of war on the high seas.

"The reply of the British foreign office to the American note has not developed," the press association continues.

"Walter N. Page, the American ambassador, called at the foreign office on Saturday afternoon, but the visit was not prompted by the expectation of a delivery of a reply by that time. The whole matter is receiving earnest, careful consideration. The government's reply will be made in due time in considrable dtail. The British government is not being actuated by diplomatic considerations alone but is being guided largely by naval and military expert opinion."

Washington, Jan. 4.—An amieable answer from Great Britain before the close of the week to the American note of protest against interference with shipping is expected by the administration officials. It was pointed out today that precedents show the arguments used in the American note are based on the attitude taken by England during previous wars in which the neutral commerce of Great Britain was hindered by the warships of belligerents. This, it was stated, practically assures concessions from the British government in conformity with this practice.

There was one discordant note, however, in the harmony idea and that was the statement of the British embassy that rubber had been shipped from this country "under disguise." This was pointed out by diplomats as indicating a determination on the part of the London foreign office to emphasize alleged attempts of American exporters to evade contraband regulations and to press the point strongly in hes answer to this government.

BRITISH PRESS COMMENDS U.S. UPON ITS VIGILANCE

By John C. Foster.

London, Jan. 4.—With the exception of The Globe, the London press today was practically unanimous complimenting the U. S. government upon its vigilance in suppressing the so-called "passport conspiracy" organized to aid German reservists in leaving that country to serve against the allies, the Globe, which was the only paper to give voice to harsh criticism in the comment upon President Wilson's note protesting against interference at sea with American shipping by British warships, says:

"We do not ask much of the United States, but laxity in the government offices which makes it possible to obtain the stamp and regulation official seal upon documents on which they should never appear, indicates a condition of affairs requiring immediate remedy."

The Pall Mall Gazette says: "President Wilson's firmness in dealing with the monstrous conspiracy to smuggle German and Austrian reservists to Europe from New York should be warmly recognized in this country. We do not know what the American people, apart from the German element think of the abuse of American hospitality and the laws of the U. S. involved in the wholesale fabrication of American passports, but it should show them the sort of foe with whom we are dealing and the urgent necessity for vigilance at sea which lies upon us. The incident will also serve to make us realize the difficulties under which the government of the United States is laboring to preserve its neutrality and thus it should lead to a better understanding in the minds of both peoples."

BERLIN ADMITS FRENCH SUCCESSES AT FRONT

Berlin, Jan. 4.—Via wireless—French success is admitted in an official report from German headquarters given out here this afternoon. It says the greatest activity is now being displayed in Alsace. Operations along the remainder of the front are being mainly confined to artillery conflicts.

"In the western theatre of war it is generally quiet except for artillery combats more or less heavy. Only about Thamm and Aubestretree has the enemy showed great activity. After an overwhelming bombardment of the heights west of Stemmheim the enemy occupied and demolished trenches. During the night three of the heights were retaken at the point of the bayonet. Fighting at the village of Steinbach continues. At the eastern seat of war the situation is unchanged.

New Year Brings Peace Message To America With New Prosperity.

For America the new year, 1915, truly is a messenger of peace. It bids fair to grow quickly into a year full of prosperity. So healthy and happy a youngster is the new year at the start that every indication points to a strong, lusty growth, and the nation consequently rejoices. The one New Year's wish of the average neutral American is that 1915 may bring the end of the awful war in Europe and the return of peace and prosperity to the entire world.

Restricted Trading Marks Exchange Opening

BY HERBERT TEMPLE.

London, Jan. 4.—After a suspension of five months, caused by the war, the London Stock Exchange reopened today for business on a restricted scale. There was a large attendance and the opening tone was fairly steady, considering the prevailing conditions. In British financial centers the reopening of the exchange at a time when Great Britain is in the midst of the war was regarded as an indication of the strong financial position of the Empire.

The most important international shares (those in which there was normally heavy American and English trading) opening at the following prices: Amalgamated Copper 53 3-8; Atchison, 95 3-8; Canadian Pacific 159 7-8; Erie 22; Union Pacific 118 3-4; United States Steel 50 1-2.

The British war loan was quoted at 94 9-16.

The Governors of the exchange issued a set of rules which will govern trading. A minimum price list was established upon which the quotations are equivalent to the minimum prices adopted by the governors of the New York exchange when it reopened recently.

The Governors forbid arbitrage trading, a common practice among English and American brokers when trading conditions are normal.

In Lombard street, the Wall street of London, the opinion was expressed that trading will be continued without further interruption from the war.

Trading was light during the forenoon, the smallness of the transactions being mainly attributed to the fact that dealings were strictly limited to cash transactions. At 12.30 Anaconda Copper showed a gain of 1-2, Canadian Pacific ruled unchanged and Pennsylvania and Union Pacific were respectively off 1 and 3-8. Pennsylvania fell from 53 3-4 to 53 1-4. Sonsols sold at 68 9-16.

Compared with New York parity, Atchison and Union Pacific showed losses of 1-2, Steel was off 3-8, Canadian Pacific and Erie were practically unchanged. There is no change in the London and New York prices of Amalgamated Copper.

MINE WRECKED DESTROYER OF H. M. S. FORMIDABLE

BY FREDERICK WERNER.

Berlin, via Amsterdam, Jan. 4.—It is reported here, though not officially confirmed that a German submarine sank the British battleship Formidable with two torpedoes and was herself sunk three hours later by a mine. It is said that all on board the submarine was lost.

The identity of the submarine is not revealed in the reports telling of her loss. They are being widely circulated, but the admiralty states that at present it has no information to give out.

Hospitals Full of Sick Allies; Fevers the Cause

Bullets of Germans Have Their Terrors, But Life In Trenches Not Found Joyful; Troops Neglected

BY FRANKLIN P. MERRICK.
(International News Service Correspondent.)

Paris, Jan. 4—It is in the hospitals that the allies are suffering their heaviest losses now. Thousands of British, French and Belgian soldiers are dying from pneumonia and kindred diseases brought on by exposure in the trenches to the stormy weather, and thousands of others are incapacitated by rheumatism. The cold, wet weather is also working its devastation among wounded soldiers, many of whom contract fever from the exposure to which they are subjected upon the field before they can be transported to first aid stations or the base hospitals.

The British base hospitals at Bolougne are filled to overflowing and the same condition prevails in the base hospitals of Dunkirk and those of the Belgiums at Calais Thousands of sick and wounded British and Belgium troops are being transported to England because there is no room for them in northern France. Sickness outrivals the bullets of the Germans as an agency of death in the ranks of the allies.

Every hospital train that leaves the front bears its cargo of sick as well as those suffering from rifle or artillery wounds. Soldiers in the delirium of fever to whom the utmost care would be given under ordinary circumstances, are compelled to ride for many hours and even days in dark, damp freight cars, with only a pile of mouldy straw for a bed, without water, food or medicine.

Official dispatches indicate that the French and Belgians have renewed their efforts to weaken the German grip upon the North sea coast east of Nieuport, and desperate fighting is again in progress among the sand dunes.

Between Albert and Roye the Germans are violently bombarding the French lines lying east of Amiens, but they have not succeeded in making any gains there.

Artillery duelling continues the most prominent factor in the fighting. In the northern part of the Argonne district, in the forest of La Grurie, near Verdun, on the heights of the Meuse and in upper Alsace the German guns are roaring constantly in a great effort to check the painful progress of the French.

The French have succeeded in massing a quantity of artillery in range of Altkirch, about eight miles southwest of Muelhausen and are bombarding that place.

There is fierce fighting around Thann and Steinbach, in Upper Alsace, where the Germans have been reinforced and where they are delivering severe counter attacks in an effort to dislodge the French.

RUSSIANS HOLDING BACK AUSTRIANS IN GALICIA

BY FRANCIS LAVELLE MURRAY.

Petrograd, Jan. 4.—The Austrian armies in Galicia are panic stricken and whole regiments are laying down their arms and surrendering to the Russians. Dispatches from Lemberg state that the resistance of the Austrian forces as an organized body has completely collapsed and that the troops of the dual monarchy are offering an effective defense only at isolated points.

The garrison at Przemysl is making daily attempts to smash the iron ring that Russia has made around the stronghold. From the desperation of these attacks upon the forces besieging Przemysl it is believed that the larger part of the garrison consists of German troops. The garrison has lost heavily in its latest sorties and it is believed here that Przemysl will soon be compelled to fall.

The situation in Poland shows no indication of an immediate break in the deadlock that has developed from the trenches of the Germans and Russians only a few yards from each other.

The Germans are being steadily repulsed in isolated attacks along the Bzura and along the Pilica. The official Russian reports make no claims of great gains for the Czar's troops, but claim that their positions are being maintained despite attacks by the Germans by night and day.

Along the Rawka river the conditions have not yet reached those of a siege such as prevail on other portions of the front. Both sides are fighting for the possession of the town of Rawa and the heights upon which it stands.

North of Vistula the situation is developing. On Saturday a small German force crossed the Vistula near Plock, attempting to effect a junction with the Germans have advanced toward Mlawa. The Russians at Plock turned back the Germans, however, and the attempt at a junction proved abortive.

Special to The Evening Times.

Petrograd, Jan. 4.—Defeat of the Turks and the capture of 5,000 prisoners by the Russians are announced in an official report received from the headquarters at Tiflis today. It said: "We have captured the 50th regiment of Turkish infantry almost in its entirety and with all its officers in a violent engagement in which we completely routed the enemy.

"In these operations we have taken to date 5,000 men and forty officers. Our success is being maintained at every point."

GOV. WHITMAN LIKES TO WALK

Dislikes Big Dinners; Sidesteps Them Whenever It Can Be Done

Albany, Jan. 15.—If many persons throughout the state had their way, the governor and the members of the legislature would do little else than make speeches at banquets. There is a constant demand on the part of innumerable organizations to have the executive, senators and members of assembly respond to toasts.

It is known that Governor Whitman has taken the position that the requirements of his great and important office are such as to prevent him from sitting at the festive board.

Few appear to realize that the time of the governor is taken up all day with a thousand and one matters and that frequently at night he is called upon to consider vital political topics as well as matters of state. Courtesy has been the slogan of governors of the past and many a time they have dropped important subjects to attend a banquet. It has been a frequent occurrence for a governor to leave the banquet hall before the end of the speech-making in order to take up again the thread left untied earlier in the evening.

Regular Habits.

The daily routine of Governor Whitman is one of regularity. After the business of the day he walks from the Capitol to the Executive Mansion on Eagle st., eight blocks away. Often Mrs. Whitman and his little daughter Olive meet him on the way. Together the three walk over Hawk st. to the Mansion, Olive skipping ahead. The executive has not as yet graced any function with his presence, though his military secretary J. Stanley Moore has received and declined numerous invitations for his chief.

In the daily mail of the governor there are from a dozen to twenty invitations to attend this or that function. The invitations come from all parts of the state. A Buffalo organization would like very much to have the governor open its new hall on a certain evening and a New York city club would also be pleased to have him as its guest on the same evening. It is the duty of Colonel J. Stanley Moore, the suave military secretary of the governor, to answer these invitations and announce the policy of the governor.

There is one dinner, however, that the governor will not be permitted to side-step; the dinner of the Legislative Correspondents of the state of New York. No governor has ever ever refused to be present in the past even though it is known beforehand that both he and his administration will be the subjects of good-natured criticism and banter. Affairs of state, where there are gathered heads of departments and important politicians, are likewise excepted from the executive rule of non-appearance.

Members of the legislature are also always in demand to act as dinner orators. Church clubs are usually the first to request the members of the two houses to deliver addresses. In that the subject is invariably left to the speaker, some important matter before the legislature is usually exploited.

The fact that the session is still young, seems to have made little difference as regards the volume of invitations which have been received by those of the two law-making bodies who are known to possess oratorical ability.

WAR, THE MOTHER OF INVENTION

Special International News Service Dispatch.

Amsterdam, Jan. 15.—All over Southern Holland new towns are arising. They are the homes of the clusters of Belgian refugees. The largest of these places boasts a population of 13,000, while another has 10,000.

I have recently taken a trip to this refugee village of 13,000 men, women and children, and many odd sides of life are to be found there.

The new Belgian town is near Harderwijk, in Gelderland. It is built on the wind swept, heather grown, moorland. Every building is of wood and the whole is enclosed by a city wall of good strong barbed wire—to make the job of policing it easier.

The wooden buildings, which have been constructed by the hospitable Dutch government, are little better than sheds, but they have double walls covered with a kind of rainproof asbestos and are stout and serviceable. Two hundred and fifty persons lodge in each "apartment house," there being a room to each five residents. Huge stoves give a good heat and keep them warm and cosy.

The town, for better policing, is divided further by barbed wire into three parts. Hussars guard the lines of wire inside and out. Not all the fugitives are properly appreciative of what is done for them and disorders make it necessary from time to time to shut up a culprit in one of the two prison sheds, "Caledonia" for the men, or "The Congo" for the women. These stand in the middle of the town and have an especially formidable wall of barbed wire all their own.

There are several dining rooms each capable of seating 1,000. Here the inhabitants without regard to previous condition of poverty or affluence eat seated on benches, pulled up to the long tables. In the kitchen sheds nearby ten large stoves cook, cook, cook, all day, for it takes a lot to feed 13,000.

To guard against fire in this wood town, no cooking or smoking is allowed in the other buildings. The one luxury is electric light, which is plentifully supplied everywhere.

Other buildings include a school, a church, an assembly hall and a post office. In a little store the few refugees who have brought money with them and still have some left can make their frugal purchases.

Many of the inhabitants of this town were at first lodged in the quarters of Dutch soldiers at Oldebroek, which the latter vacated to house the thousands which came limping over the border from smoking Belgium. The first refugee camps, it is found, must be vacated for sanitary reasons, especially those in Zeeland, Limburg and North Brabant.

The Dutch government appoints a Burgomaster for each of the refugee towns, although there is a measure of "home rule." Below the Burgomaster are the parish priests, each at the head of the flock which he shepherded from their sacked homes. The priests constitute a kind of town council and choose reliable men, who keep order in the various houses and tell the people's grievances to the Burgomaster.

The Burgomaster also has a quaint custom of making the round of the town once a day, when any one who has something to say can speak to him face to face.

LIGHTING MINUS ILLUMINATION

The Declaration Made By President of Civic Association; City Not Getting Results

Syracuse, Jan. 15.—Syracuse as a city has tremendous possibilities, but unless its citizens realize the value and importance of proper municipal planning those possibilities will be lost forever, according to J. Horace McFarland of Harrisburg, Pa. president of the American Civic Association, who spoke last night at Syracuse University on the subject, "Wanted—American City Planning for American Cities."

Mr. McFarland, who has become noted as a lecturer upon civic problems throughout the United States, is contributing editor to many magazines and has conducted striking campaigns for the preservation of Niagara Falls and for developing national parks.

His ideas of Syracuse, gained on a tour of the city yesterday afternoon in company with members of the City Planning Commission, are in part complimentary, and in part otherwise. For instance, one Syracuse enormity—in Mr. McFarland's eye—one which will strike a majority of citizens as difficult to believe until they listen to Mr. McFarland's reasons, is the lighting system.

Syracuse Must Be Wealthy.

"Syracuse must be a tremendously wealthy city," said Mr. McFarland in an interview following his tour of the city. "If the city were not rich, I don't see why it is paying lighting company's high rates and keeping the iron foundries so busy turning out ornamental posts.

"You have too much light here and not enough illumination. The purpose of a street lighting system in the downtown section is to provide merchants with illumination. Your merchants aren't getting the illumination they are paying for. The light is there, but the illumination isn't.

"Your posts are too close together, not properly placed or spaced, and in the daytime are a living advertisement to your extravagance.

"Your city planners ought to go to Washington and study lighting conditions in that city. I consider the Washington system the best in the world, bar none. New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Cleveland, London or Paris can't begin to compare with the capital in that respect.

"Furthermore, they are getting light—better light than yours—for one-fifth of what it costs you. That is the most radical change I could suggest for the betterment of Syracuse, and it is the most outstanding piece of extravagance and foolishness I have seen in this city.

"Take your posts in the daytime and compare them with those in Washington. Here they stand forth, as I said, as a monumental advertisement of extravagance, unsightly, and without any utilitarian excuse.

"In Washington the posts are so designed and so painted that in the daytime they melt away. They were designed by Frank Millet, who lost his life on the Titanic. After a great deal of experimenting a neutral color was found which in the sunlight made them as unobtrusive as possible. They are not blatant, in short."

Cornered the Market.

A long haired chap who walked into the general store at Quog said:

"Do you sell stale eggs?"

"No," said the grocer, with a smile. "But I've got some."

"Well, give me all you've got," said the stranger.

The grocer as he bundled up the eggs, laughed and said:

"I guess you're going to see 'Hamlet' tonight at the Opera House?"

"No," said the stranger grimly. "I'm going to play 'Hamlet' tonight at the Opera House."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

War: Pathos and Humor

Berlin, Jan. 25.—A German journalist serving in the Kaiser's aviation corps on the battlefields of France, sends a vivid description of a spirited battle in the air in which he participated. He was decorated with the Iron Cross for the bravery he displayed in this spectacular conflict.

"The weather was miserable during the last weeks," he writes. "We had rain, snow and fog. The air was very unfavorable for aviation. Gusts of wind made it difficult to navigate and gave one a feeling similar to seasickness.

"However, we kept up our practice and tried to do as much damage as possible to the enemy. Our opponents were very daring and I must give them credit for the bravery shown in their flights above our ranks. They were not afraid of our batteries and managed to escape the hail of shots directed at them.

"So we decided we would have to fight them in the air. We organized a system of espionage and one day we received word that five machines of the enemy had arisen in the neighborhood of A. and were coming our way. At a moment's notice we got our machines in positions, the motors were whirring and in intervals of one half minute each we rose in the air.

"Immediately we took our course in the direction of A. and tried to reach a greater height than the French, determined to send them to the ground. We were armed to the teeth, so to say. We not only carried bombs, but also machine guns.

"In the neighborhood of A. we saw the French machines cruising. Machines of the single and double decker type were flying around in open formation taking observations of our positions. As we were flying in close formation it seems they did not recognize how many we were. So they went for our first "taube" in a body.

"But this little 'dovey' ducked and rising again sent a shot at one of the French double deckers which seemed to put its propeller out of commission. At least, we saw the ship gliding gracefully down to the earth.

"In the meantime we had made ready for business and now began a fight of one machine against the other. The French tried their best to get above us, in order to drop bombs upon us. But we frustrated their game by following them up higher and higher.

"I saw my colleague, Lieutenant M. about 600 yards to my left, finish his adversary. He must have received serious injury, for he went down like an arrow. The second one was also put out of business very soon.

"Then came my own and my companion's turn. A powerful double decker was firing furiously at us. A great number of bullets cut holes in our canvas wings, when my companion signalled to me with his arms to make a sharp turn to the left.

"Our apparatus came to an almost perpendicular position sideways and then our machine gun began its deadly work. Within two seconds the enemy's machine began to shake and shiver, then it rose like a horse on his hind legs and finally it turned a somersault, going down very fast, head first. When we looked around again the rest of the enemy, two machines, were in full flight.

"In the meantime we had been discovered from below. They opened fire upon us and we had to rise higher in order to get out of their range. Still we were determined to reply to their greetings. We circled above A. and dropped a number of bombs which did good work, as we could observe with the aid of our field glasses. First the gas works were hit and blew up. Then we attacked two railroad stations and left them a mass of debris. I am sorry to say one of our machines was forced to and, but as a whole our expedition was a huge success."

Origin of War Terms

With the exception of shrapnel, named after its inventor, an English colonel, there are very few war terms now in use which have a British origin.

Sword, musket, grenadier, dragoon are all alien terms. "Grenadier" is generally supposed to come from the French. The word is, however, of German birth, and originally was "grenatier," the farce owing their name to the hand-grenades with which they were armed.

The word "musket" has an Italian derivation: "moschette," which was really a species of small sparrow-hawk. In ancient times and in the middle ages the name musket was used to designate a small mortar which threw arrows.

When gunpowder was discovered a small cannon was baptised "musket," and later the rifle of the ordinary infantryman earned the name, while the whole unit was called "musketiers."

Both "dragoon" and "cuirassier" come from the French. The dragoond had a dragoon painted on their shields, and the cuirassiers carried a breast-protection made of copper—in French "cuivre."

"Hussar" comes from the Hungarian, word "husz," which means twenty.

The force derived its name from the fact that long ago every twentietr recruit in Hungary was placed in one of the mounted regiments.

The Uhlans, owe their name to the Turks. It comes from the Turkish word "oghlan," youth.

"Sword" comes from the Polish word "szabla," and "pistol" from the Italian town Pistoja, which was famous in the middle ages for its arms factories.

The bayonet takes its name from the French town Bayonne, where the inventor lived some 125 years ago.

"Howitzer" is derived from the Czech word "houfinice," a wooden apparatus used in ancient times for the purpose of throwing stones. We meet with the word also in the Hussite war, in the fifteenth century, where the weapon figures as "hauffnitz."

The officer's rank of major was derived originally from the Spanish word "mayor," signifying great or high.

Even "war" itself comes from a foreign source, coming down with the Italian and Spanish "guerra," and the French "guerre" from the old German "werra."

DONOVAN THE MAN AND THE MAN AS MANAGER

By FRANK G. MENKE.

New York, Jan. 26.—One of the mysteries of baseball is: Why didn't Ban Johnson and his American league associates give Frank Farrell a little help and keep him in the league as the owner of the Yankees?

Johnson got a first class manager for the new owners. He gave them five ball players. So anxious was Johnson to get the Ruppert-Huston crowd into the ownership of the Yankees that he got the American league to agree to make up the difference in the price that Farrell wanted for his club and the price that the Ruppert-Huston faction wanted to pay.

In other words, the American league stood ready to pay $50,000 out of its pockets, give full bal players and work himself into a state bordering on collapse to get the new crowd the manager it wanted. But it wouldn't raise its hand to help Farrell in years gone by.

The new Yankee owners are nursing the hope that their club will be in the pennant fight this summer. It seems a faint hope. The five players that the Yankees got as gifts from other clubs may develop into real ball players—and they may not.

The Yankees pitching staff is ordinary—and nothing more. Caldwell is ranked as the star twirler. When Caldwell is right he is a very good pitcher. When he isn't he's awful. Caldwell is unreliable. Maybe Donovan can bring the best there is out of him. Maybe not.

Donovan is new to the team. He has a lot of new players to work with. Even if he finds that there are quite a number of stars on the roster he will have to do considerable experimenting early in the season. Experiments usually mean lost games.

The Yankees, as we view the situation from this angle, won't land better than sixth—if they land that high—unless another baseball miracle is wrought. Which seems very unlikely.

There is no doubt about Donovan's ability as manager. He is brainy, experienced and he knows how to handle men. He can get the best out of his men without driving them to the point where they want to assassinate him. That was the greatest fault of Frank Chance. He made enemies among his men; Donovan will make friends of them.

Donovan has that knack in handling men that makes them all feel that they are brothers, fighting for a common cause against a common enemy. He develops team spirit the greatest asset of a ball club. He is not the fault-finding kind. He doesn't apply vile language to a man simply because the man might have made a foozle. If he takes a man to task he does it in a way that leaves no sting and no bitterness.

Ruppert and Huston first insisted upon Connie Mack as the manager for their club, but when this demand could not be granted and Donovan was suggested to them, they looked into his record. A few looks convinced them that he would do. And so they grabbed him.

Donovan was popular as a major league pitcher. The fans liked him. And the fans who once idolized him for his wonderful skill as a moundsmen now unite in wishing him luck in his new undertaking.

Several State Fairs Planned.

Oswego county may lose some of the money that has annually been appropriated to it by the state for its fair, according to stories going around the State capital that the appropriations for a number of such associations may be sliced.

There is also a plan on foot it is understood to have two or three state fairs like the one at Syracuse, it being planned to take some of the money formerly appropriated to the county fairs for state events.—Palladium.

MILTON STOCK HOPES TO MAKE M'GRAW SORRY FOR LETTING HIM GO.

Milton Stock, one of the men traded by the Giants for Hans Lobert, hopes to play such a good game with the Phillies this year that McGraw will be sorry the trade was made. And Stock stands a good chance of doing just that. He batted only a few points behind Lobert last season, and as he is young he ought to improve, while Lobert fell off materially from his batting in previous years. Stock fields his position, third base, well and all he needs to be a star is to make a few more safe hits.

About Sports Generally

By FRANK G. MENKE.

New York, Jan. 25.—And now, gentlemen of the jury, it develops upon you to render a verdict in the case of Jimmy Johnson vs. Cadillac, Mich.

The facts that you must consider, in keeping with the evidence, are these:

Johnson, who is a New York fight promoter, recently went to the aforementioned town of Cadillac, Mich., and remained there for a certain period. Upon his return to this city, Johnson had a few things to say about Cadillac, in which the following remarks were included:

"Cadillac is an awful town. Every time the natives sneeze, they blow out kindling wood from their noses. Every time they scratch their heads they get splinters in their fingers. The largest building in the town is the railway depot. I wanted to get out of that town as soon as I could and I went to the depot. I just missed the train. There wasn't another train for many, many hours. I asked the station agent about hotels and he told me that the only hotel in town closed its doors at 7.30 p. m. It was after that hour so I had to sit in the depot and try to take a nap there until the next train came.

"The population of the town consists of five people as far as I could figure out. One was the depot master, the other was the police force, the third member was Ad Wolgast and the other two were men that I saw sneaking past the depot, probably hoping to get home before the curfew bell tolled.

"Ad Wolgast tried to entertain me—by nearly talking me to death about himself.

"A grand old town is Cadillac—nit!"

In rebuttal, gentlemen of the jury, you will recall the testimony of the defendants in this case—the townsfolk of Cadillac. They said:

"Johnson, glittering with diamonds, or near diamonds, slept all night in a frigid depot although there were at least three hotels in town where he could have secured a room and bed for 50 cents. If he didn't want to pay that much he could have gotten a bed in the Y. M. C. A. for 25 cents. But it seems to us that he didn't want to be so extravagant. What is the use of paying out two bits for a bed when you can sleep in a depot for nothing?

"Further investigation on our part disclosed the fact that all the time he was in this city Johnson never spent as much as five cents. Ad Wolgast paid all his bills, provided all the treats, kept him in his home and kept him plentifully supplied with cigars and cigarettes."

Jurymen, you also must consider the facts presented by the defendants. These facts tend to show that the population of the said city of Cadillac is not 5, as Johnson stated, but is 8,375, as shown by the 1910 census. Undoubtedly the town has grown since then.

Furthermore the town, according to the hotel directory, has at least one hotel. It operates on the American plan. Its rates are $2.50 to $4.00. The sliding scale indicating that not only can one get a room and bed there, but a private bath as well. Such a condition speaks highly for any hotel. Investigation seems to convince this court that the hotel does not close its doors at 7.30 p. m. as is charged in Johnson's eidence, but that the doors remain open for a considerable period thereafter.

Now, jurymen, beat it to your room and decide among yourselves whether Cadillac is all that Johnson says it is or whether Johnson is a "Cheap John" as Cadillac charge.

HOT LINERS.

The pop bottle's whiz and the wordy affray
Must sound like sweet music to old Hank O'Day
For the sport writers say, as they stifle a laugh
That he wants to get back to the umpiring staff.
No manager's seat, with its power and its pay
Can satisfy longings of Mister O'Day.

He trembles with joy at such phrases as these:
"Hey, murder the umpire! He's nothing but cheese!"
Which leads us to say, and it's gospel, bejabers
That it's hard to account for the doings of our neighbors.

Willard-Johnson fight. The sensational comedy film. In eight thrilling reels. (One reel for each round).

Round 6—As the gong sounds, Johnson rushes to that portion of the ring that is nearest to the moving picture operator. "Lookah heah, lookah heah," he shouts, "I'se gwine end dis fight right now," waving his arms back of him so as to frighten off any rear attack by Willard. "No, no, no," yells the "movie" gent, "You gotta keep your agreement. Don't end it until you've agreed to end it."

"Ah ends it right now unless I gets $1,000 extry 'cause when I made dat agreement I didn't 'spect Ah was gwine hafta wuk so hahd." "All right—that extra thousand goes," yelled the movie man. "Get on with that fighting." Gong.

The Johnson-Willard fight. The sensational pugilistic comedy film. In eight reels. (One reel for each round.)

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Carl Morris, Heavyweight, Who Is Coming Back.

A little more than three years ago Carl Morris of Sapulpa, Okla., was regarded as the logical candidate for the crown of Jack Johnson. He was of enormous size, possessed of immense strength and had beaten every man he had gone against. Then came the memorable night of Sept. 15, 1911, when he crossed mitts with Jim Flynn, "the fighting fireman," at Madison Square Garden, New York. Although Flynn was six inches shorter and fifty pounds lighter than Morris, he gave him an unmerciful beating. Morris was game, but he lacked skill and ring experience. After that Carl lost decisions to several mediocre white hopes.

Now he is coming back. During the past year he has won nine fights out of ten by the knockout route and has twice laid low Jim Flynn, his ancient enemy. He has beaten every man who had previously won decisions over him and seems to have developed into a fairly clever ring general. He has yet to win from Gunboat Smith, who won from Carl on a foul.

New Baseball Play.

During the last game of the season at the Oakland (Cal.) grounds a play came up that escaped attention at the time, but since has created a deal of argument pro and con. This is how it happened: Fitzgerald was on third and O'Leary at bat when a ball caromed off Catcher Yantz's mitt and went to the grandstand. Krause covered the plate, but O'Leary was in the line of the throw, and the ball hit him on the back of the head, Fitz scoring.

Now, what is the decision? Captain Rodgers claimed interference, while Umpire Billy Phyle ruled that the run scored. His contention was that O'Leary was in his rightful position in the batter's box and was watching the play without intentionally getting into the line of play. Phyle argues that O'Leary did not know where the ball went and that he stood where he belonged.

President Baum at first thought that the umpire was wrong and that there was interference, but after thinking it over he decided that the decision was right and one of the first of its kind he had ever heard of.

Jack Dempsey Was Game.

Bob Fitzsimmons, the greatest fighter in all the history of the ring, had his own theory of a knockout.

"It doesn't hurt anybody to be knocked out," Fitz used to say. "I like to be gentle and considerate and knock 'em out in a hurry. I put it over as soon as I can instead of beating them down gradually. The gentlest way is to land a clean one punch knockout. It doesn't even leave a headache."

Fitzsimmons once met a man who took a number of hard knockdowns and still struggled to his feet, at last standing in a nearly helpless condition and refusing to give up. This was Jack Dempsey, who was losing the world's middleweight championship. Fitzsimmons appealed to the referee to stop it and when that official declined because it was a championship fight turned to Dempsey and said: "Jack, you've done all a game man can do. I don't want to hit you again. Give it up."

"You'll have to knock me out," muttered Dempsey. And Fitz did.

Maulbetsch Spikes Rumor.

Halfback Johnny Maulbetsch of the University of Michigan was asked recently concerning the story that he ate two mince pies of his mother's making for dinner each night during the training season, pie being especially taboo by trainers for athletes during the playing season.

"The story was slightly exaggerated," replied the stocky Michigander with the same modesty regarding his gastronomic prowess as he has shown regarding his football ability. "I rarely ate more than one and one-half pies for dinner."

Wisconsin Bars Negro Fighters.

The Wisconsin boxing commission ruled against granting a permit to a Milwaukee boxing club for a bout between Sam Langford and Sam McVey, negro heavyweights. Permits for contests in Wisconsin, it is announced, will be confined to white boxers.

GERMAN CIVIL COURTS.

Mode of Procedure Where Commercial Cases Are Tried.

The "handelsgericht," or commercial court, is presided over by one judge and two laymen known as "handelsrichter"—commercial judges nominated by commercial bodies and appointed by the government. Any German is eligible who is registered as a merchant, thirty years old, and otherwise qualified as specially provided by law. Only commercial cases are sent to this department upon motion of either party. I witnessed a trial between merchants and was much pleased with the speedy method of determining the case.

Instead of submitting technical business questions to a jury, who in all probability never heard of the like before, and then offering the testimony of experts on each side of the case, which often has a tendency to confuse the jury rather than to enlighten them, the German commercial judges possess personal experience in business and skill in affairs of commerce of the greatest value in arriving at correct conclusions. Besides, the procedure, as a rule, is brief and to the point and causes little delay to the litigants. So far as I could observe, this system worked very satisfactorily. —Fred H. Peterson in Case and Comment.

THE MAN WHO LAUGHS.

The Reason He Does So From the Physical Point of View.

Laughter is an involuntary response of certain muscles to a communication from nerves controlling their action. We laugh because we receive an impression through our sensory nerves that causes a demonstration from the muscles which express mirth. The vigor or heartiness of laughter depends upon the susceptibility of the brain to what is received through the sensory nerves.

They get the impression in three ways—from something we see, feel or hear—and send it along to the nerve center. From there it is sent along other nerves connected with certain muscles or glands and excites them to activity.

The nerves are like so many electric wires, and the sensory nerves act as a battery, by means of which the electric currents of life are transmitted. The muscles have the power to express the state of gladness, indicated by laughter, according to the positiveness of the impressions passed along the nerves which operate them. You laugh less heartily the second time you hear a funny story because the impression is less positive. — Rocky Mountain News.

A Book That Wasn't Published.

A singular plan for honoring heroes was proposed in 1832. If we may credit the following footnote to "La Typographie," a poem by Le Pelletier, published in that year at Geneva: "In February last several newspapers announced that the largest book ever printed will shortly appear in London under the title 'The Pantheon of English Heroes.' The pages of this book will be twelve feet long and two feet wide and the letters six inches high. It has been found necessary to erect special machinery for the manufacture of the paper required. This gigantic work will be printed by steam in characters of gold, no ordinary printing ink being used in the process. Only a hundred copies will be issued, and these will serve to adorn the principal libraries in England." You will not find that book in any public or private library.

Pearls.

The use and popularity of pearls date back to about 300 B. C., but they were known to yet older peoples, and especially to those of the east. The Chinese records go still farther back, and oyster pearls were received as tribute in the twenty-third century B. C. It is probable that they were found in the waters of Ceylon and India 2,000 years ago, and the Greeks of course both knew and recognized the value of the pearl. But it was not until the Roman empire was beginning to rise that the knowledge of the value of the pearl became general.

Unfortunate Namur.

From the tenth century to 1421 Namur was the capital of a dukedom, but was merged in the Netherlands in 1421. It was captured in 1692 by Marshal Vauban in the Netherlands war and three years later by William of Orange. Again in 1746 the French General Clermont took it, and it was taken from the French by Joseph II. in 1794, but restored again later. In 1815 it was defended with great bravery in the Waterloo campaign.—London Answers.

ARMY CAMP WATER.

How the Supply Is Conserved and Used in the German Army.

Suitable drinking water is of vital importance to an army, and this is only one of a multitude of problems that must be studied carefully by those who conduct a successful campaign. The water supply of a camp is a matter of great importance. Only running water is used.

In the German army the upstream water is used for drinking purposes and the downstream water for watering horses and [illegible]. Suitable signs notify the men which water is safe to drink and which may be used only for bathing. In shallow or narrow streams basins are dug or small dams built so as to form a reservoir of ample dimensions.

Stepping stones are provided to keep the water clean, as well as board protection to prevent the banks from crumbling. Basins are dug for watering horses; troughs are provided only in case of necessity and are then propped on posts and filled by means of pumps. Pipes may be driven if water lies at a reasonable depth—in other words, not more than twenty feet. Depending upon their size, these pipes will deliver from four to twenty-two gallons of water per minute.

If water lies very near the surface a hole is dug and a cask, the bottom of which has been knocked out, is placed in the hole to form a basin. If the water lies at a greater depth the basin may be formed of box sections driven in one on top of the other.—Scientific American.

FISHES WITH ITS WINGS.

The Cassowary Has a Way of Its Own For Capturing Its Prey.

Habits of the cormorant and of our native fish hawk are generally known. Their methods of taking fish are very much like those of birds of prey. But the cassowary fishes according to a method of its own. A well known naturalist witnessed its operations on a river in the island of New Britain.

He saw a cassowary come down to the water's edge and stand for some minutes apparently watching the water carefully. It then stepped into the river where it was about three feet deep and, partially squatting down, spread its wings out, submerging them, the feathers being spread and ruffled.

The bird remained motionless and kept its eyes closed as if in sleep. It remained in this position for a quarter of an hour, when, suddenly closing its wings and straightening its feathers, it stepped out on the bank. Here it shook itself several times, whereupon a quantity of small fishes fell out of its wings and from amid its feathers. These the bird immediately picked up and swallowed.

The fishes had evidently mistaken the feathers for a kind of weed that grows in the water along the banks of the river in this island and which much resemble the feathers of the cassowary. The smaller fishes hide in these weeds to avoid the larger ones that prey on them.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Camels in Warfare.

Camels are a feature of warfare in the far east. Basar was in the year 656 the scene of a fight known as the battle of the camel, in which Ayeshah, the wife of Mahomet, headed the charge mounted upon one of these beasts. And down through the centuries Arab hosts have been led by a girl riding on a blackened camel, singing songs of encouragement to her own side and insult to the other. According to the strict rules of the game her capture or death meant the flight of her tribe, while in the event of victory she led the triumphal march.—London Chronicle.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

Boy Scout Remained on Guard.

Last year a tenderfoot in a Massachusetts city, who had joined the boy scout movement only a few weeks before, showed what stuff he was made of at a daytime Christmas tree celebration in the open air. He was put on guard to see that no one robbed the tree of its adornments and was told not to leave the post until he was relieved. The celebration was over and the crowds went home, but the scout stuck to his job. He had been there several hours. It was long past dinner time, dark and cold, but the scout stuck. Finally about 7:30 a passing policeman saw the solitary figure and came to find out what the trouble was. The scout said he was on duty and could not leave until his scoutmaster told him to. In vain the policeman told him that he must have been forgotten and that there was no need for him to stay any longer. The scout refused to relinquish his post until the scoutmaster was hunted up and hurried to the spot to give the loyal protector of the tree his release. Hearing of the scout's loyalty, one of the women who had had charge of the celebration took him home in her automobile and gave him the biggest Christmas dinner he had ever eaten. The scout did not understand at all "why they made such a fuss over him." He had only done what any other scout would do, he felt sure.

About Girl Scouts.

Girl scouts are organized in "patrols" of eight girls each, the lower age limit being ten years and the upper limit seventeen. Three or more patrols form a troop.

The single patrol, or a troop, must be in charge of a captain, who must be over twenty-one years old, and who is given her commission as captain by the national headquarters.

In the newly organized patrol each girl is a "tenderfoot" for at least a month, when she may become a second class scout by meeting certain required tests of behavior and of ability to do well certain specified tasks.

The requirements for advance to "first class scout" are considerably greater and stand for a considerable degree of competence in a variety of matters.

Besides these three ranks, or grades, there are other distinctions to be won in the shape of proficiency badges. There are twenty-one proficiency subjects, and the scout who qualifies in any one of these receives a badge bearing the emblem of that subject.

The badges are embroidered in blue on white felt and are worn on the left sleeve. They include such as child nurse, needlewoman, swimmer, dairy maid, cook, health, pathfinder interpreter, rifle shot, farmer, horsemanship, music, and so on.

Stool Ball—A Good Outdoor Game.

A certain number of "stools" (flat stones in the open air and cushions indoors) are set in circular form, at a considerable distance from each other, and every one of them is occupied by a single player, when the ball is thrown with the hand up in the air by "it," who stands in the center of the circle, every one of the players is required to alter his situation, running in succession from stool to stool, and if he who threw the ball can regain it in time to strike any one of the players before reaching the stool to which he is running, "it" takes his place, and the person touched must throw the ball until he can in like manner return to the circle. Rising quickly from the stools or cushions requires considerable agility on the part of the players.

A Lightning Calculation Trick.

By means of a simple arrangement of numbers a calculation can be made which will easily puzzle any unsuspecting person. If the two numbers 41,096 and 83 be written out in multiplication form very few will endeavor to write down the answer directly without first going through the regular work. By placing the 3 in front of the 4 and the 8 back of the 6 the answer is obtained at once, thus: 41,096×83=3,410,968. A larger number which can be treated in the same way is the following: 4,109,589,041,096×83=341,095,890,410,968.—Popular Mechanics.

Boy Scouts Save a Life.

Members of the Pleasantville (N. J.) patrol of the boy scouts recently saved the life of twelve-year-old Clarence Doughty, who was caught in the quicksands of a swamp some miles back on the mainland from Atlantic City. Young Doughty had been missing several hours when they instituted search and tracked him to the swamp, where he had gone to cut a tree. He had been drawn down almost to his waist.

The Two Kings.

Yesterday, while the Frost King slept,
The round old Sun King slowly crept
Into his enemy's kingdom chill
And kissed all the Frost folk against their will,
And when they scolded he scorched their ears
And left the Frost fairies all in tears.

Then the Frost King woke and the Sun King hid
Down in the deep, deep sea he slid,
And the Frost King hastened through the air
Seeking the Sun King everywhere,
But as he went he dried the tears
And cooled his fairies' sun burned ears.

The Frost King searched all through the night,
But the coward Sun kept out of sight
Till the tired Frost King fell asleep;
Then the laughing Sun began to peep
Over the ledge of old Frost's domain
And began his frolicking over again.

Human Life.

Human life is the same everywhere. If we could but get at the truth we should find that all the tragedy and comedy of Shakespeare have been reproduced in this little village. God has made all of one blood. What is true of one man is in some sort true of another. Manifestations may differ, but the essential elements and springs of action are the same.—Whittier.

Sleep in the Dark.

The most undisturbed sleep is always enjoyed in a thoroughly darkened room. Light acts upon the brain, and those who keep their blinds up will find that in the summer time, when so few hours are really dark, their sleep is restless and disturbed. This is often attributed to the heat, but more often than not it is the light which causes wakefulness.

HINTS FOR THE BUSY HOUSEWIFE

Unobtrusive Retainer That Keeps Rubbers on the Feet.

The humiliating experience of losing an overshoe in the middle of the street will never happen to the person who equips himself with the overshoe retainer that has just appeared. Unless some such precaution is taken the incident is likely to happen to any one for the reason that a pair of rubbers bought for one pair of shoes will not adjust themselves to another pair which happens to be a shade larger or smaller or of a little different shape. The retainer consists of a loop of wire which fits around the heel, and it is supplied with straps passing one in front of the foot and the other back and over the heel. With this in place the overshoe cannot become separated from its rightful owner at the critical moment of crossing a muddy road or street.

Household Helps.

When washing real lace let the final rinsing be in skimmilk if you would give it a soft, creamy tone.

When preserved citron gets dry and hard it can be softened by pouring hot water over it and letting it stand.

To make a faded dress white boil it in two gallons of water in which a half cupful of cream of tartar is dissolved.

Use milk instead of water for making pie crust which is to be served cold. It will keep crisp longer.

When iodine is spilled on sheets or clothing simply soak the article twenty-four hours in cold water.

Cooling the Oven.

If the oven is too hot when baking cake it may be cooled by leaving the door slightly ajar or by placing a dish of cold water on the grate in the oven. If the cake bakes too fast on top cover the upper grate above the cake with a piece of heavy paper. If the paper is laid directly on the cake itself and the cake splits open the paper will probably cling to the batter. If this should happen the paper should not be removed until after the cake has cooled, when it may be gently torn off.

Whole Wheat Bread.

One tablespoonful of lard, one tablespoonful of sugar, one tablespoonful of salt, one cupful each of boiling water and hot (not boiling) milk, a yeast cake dissolved in one-half cupful of warm water, one cupful of white flour, three cupfuls of whole wheat flour or enough to make a soft dough. Mix, knead for ten minutes, cover and let it rise in an even temperature to twice its first bulk. Make into small loaves, place in greased pans, let rise an hour or until puffy and bake.

Tomato Maigre.

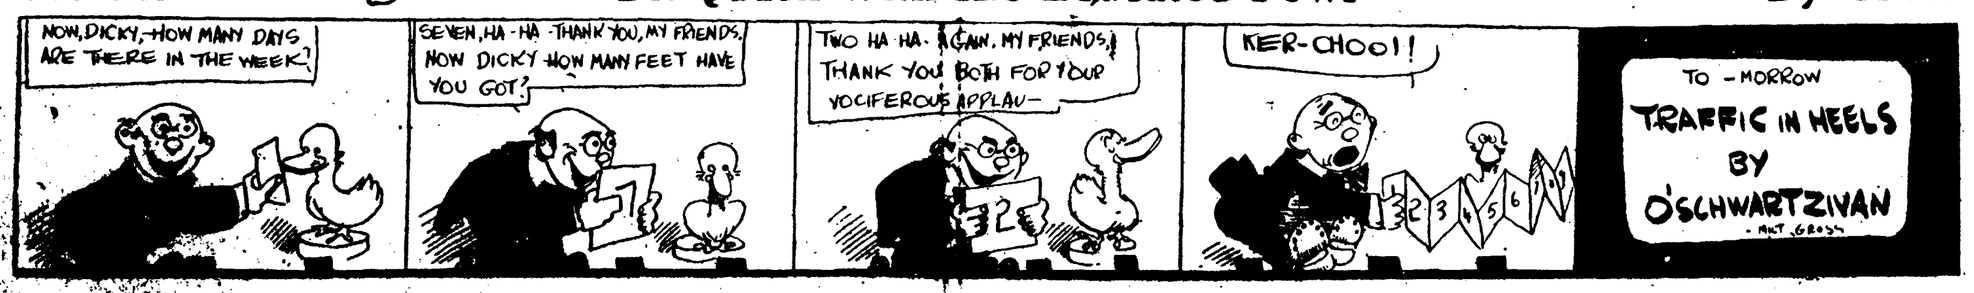
Fry a sliced onion brown in the bottom of the soup kettle and pour in the contents of a can of tomatoes and two cupfuls of boiling water; simmer until the tomatoes can be pressed through a colander, press them through and return to the fire; add a cupful of well boiled rice, a tablespoonful of flour rubbed smooth with a tablespoonful of butter; boil up and serve.

Eggs in Bread Cases.

Cut two inch slices of bread and scoop out a hollow in each slice. Put the bread cases in the oven until they are brown and crisp. Moisten each with a little melted butter and cream and break an egg in each. Sprinkle with pepper and salt and put in the oven until the eggs are set.

Polishing the Stove.

Stove blacking when mixed with turpentine and applied in the usual manner is blacker and more glossy and more durable than when mixed with any other liquid. Turpentine prevents rust and when put on an old, rusty stove will make it look as well as new.



Sardines and Bacon.

Drain sardines and rub off the skins. Wrap each in a thin slice of bacon and fasten with a tiny wooden skewer or a toothpick. Drop into hot, deep fat and fry until bacon is crisp. Drain and remove skewers and serve very hot.

To Clean Pewter.

Remove the spots on the pewter with a swab of whiting lightly dipped in oil. Wash in a weak suds, rinse well with boiling water, dry and polish with hot sand and a stiff brush. Use a clean flannel cloth for the furniture.

LAWYERS GALORE MAKING LAWS

All Trades and Professions Well Represented in the State Assembly and Senate

By FREDERICK T. CARDOZE.

Albany, Jan. 26.—Viewing the situation from a legal standpoint, there should be no flaws in the statutes enacted by the New York state legislature this year. The reason is that long before final action has been taken upon any of the measures they will have been carefully scrutinized by a galaxy of attorney members of both the senate and assembly.

Although there has always been a substantial number of lawyers in the legislature, the present year law-making body has among its members seventy-three representatives of that profession; the total number of senators and assemblymen is two hundred and one. In the senate, twenty-one of the fifty-one senators practice law; in the assembly fifty-one of the one hundred and fifty members are also attorneys.

A glance at the different walks of life presented by the membership of both houses discloses diverse callings which range from that of brick-laying to undertaking. There are indeed so many interests represented that it would seem all but impossible for all the members to be satisfied as to what should and what should not be enacted into law.

In addition to the twenty-two lawyers in the senate, there are six real estate dealers, four farmers, three bankers, three manufacturers, two editors, two lumber dealers, two insurance men, one contractor, a bookkeeper, an architect, a teacher, a merchant, a pharmacist and a retired farmer.

In the assembly in addition to the lawyers there are sixteen farmers, two undertakers, a doctor, a dentist, a hatter, an electrician, a chemist, a stenographer, a cheese manufacturer, an advertising expert, a machinist, a traveling salesman, a hotel proprietor, a reporter, a miller, a bond salesman, a brick layer and a number of contractors and business men dealing in various commodities.

The policy of the present legislative body as to prospective banking legislation has not yet been defined. If the wishes of the state superintendent of banks is followed out, no amendments to the banking law will be submitted this year. Last year the banking law was amended in a sweeping manner and Superintendent Eugene Lamb Richards of the banking department feels that the amendments are sufficient for the present. His views upon this subject are shared by George C. Van Tuyl, Jr., who was succeeded as superintendent of banks by Mr. Richards.

Early in the year it was the rumored intention of Governor Whitman to recommend certain changes in the banking law; with the evident intention of making it unpleasant for Superintendent Richards. It was widely noised about that the executive and the state superintendent of banks were upon anything but ardently friendly terms. For the past few weeks these rumors have been silent, however.

The bill drafting commission is working upon the administration measure to reorganize the conservation commission. There has been no radical change in the original intention of the Republican leaders to reduce the number of commissioners from three to one.

Large appropriations for the department of agriculture, desired for the reimbursement of owners of cattle which were slaughtered by department agents because they were infected with the foot and mouth disease, are expected soon. Last year these items were pruned by the governor, so that a number of cattle owners are at present greatly embarrassed.

Upon these and other bills, the lawyers, real estate dealers, farmers and business men of the legislature will be called to pender and vote upon. The fact that hard common sense is usually to be found in abundance among representatives who are just plain men of business, leave legislative matters in a satisfactory state, in spite of criticism frequently directed at the haste with which bills are "jammed through" the legislature.

Who lays down the money and does it quite gladly,
And casts round the office a halo of cheer.
He never says: "Stop it; I cannot afford it,

Official Reports from Engaged Forces Show Progress of War

Russia:

On January 24th in the region between the Vistula and the Mlawa railway there was no important modification to report, but there have been engagements between small numbers of units and rifle firing. On the left bank of the Vistula a relative lull prevails.

North of the Borjimow farm the Germans were successful on January 23d in capturing from us one of our advanced trenches of secondary importance. On the 24th near the same region the Germans attempted an offensive, and were successful in moving forward one by one and occupying another of their own trenches which they had previously abandoned. But as a result of our efficient fire they were obliged to evacuate that trench, which we seized.

On January 24th our artillery checked seriously the movements of their troops along the front. At one point we captured by means of our heavy artillery fire a trench of the enemy, together with machine guns.

In the region of the village of Kourjeschine, about five miles north of Bawa, our artillery destroyed an armored automobile which was advancing to bombard our positions.

In Galicia we note a certain animation and activity among the Austrians among all the Carpathian passes, beginning with that of Dukla.

France:

There is nothing to report.

Austria.

In Poland and Galicia no important engagements have occurred, with the exception of on the Nida, where there was a violent artillery fight.

The Russian attacks with the purpose of recapturing the positions taken by us in the Upper Ung valley and near Vezerszalles were repulsed with heavy losses.

In the battles during the last two days in the Carpathians we have taken one thousand prisoners.

ANNULLMENT OF AUTHORITY IN BELGIUM, MADE PUBLIC

London, Jan. 26.—Unless a positive guarantee is given that the cargo of foodstuffs on the American steamer Wilhelmina, which sailed from New York Friday for Germany, will not reach the German army, it is likely the ship will be stopped by the allies. Because of the alleged practice of the German authorities in seizing for military use any foodstuffs, it is stated that the British officials would not regard the consignment of the food ship to some individual or firm any proof that its ultimate destination is not the army.

Under the conditions that are alleged to exist in Germany it is believed here that it is virtually impossible to guarantee that any foodstuffs destined for civilian use will reach the consignees.

Under the terms of the ordinance, the aldermen will visit Gary and any other cities where the Gary system is in use. There is no limit set upon the time they may spend. The expenses will be paid out of the traveling expense account in the Council budget.

SUFFRAGISTS SERVE LUNCH.

Local Workers are Preparing for a Seige Upon State Grange; Said to be Favorable.

Oswego, Jan. 26.—Preparations for the woman suffragists' part in the State Grange convention are being made. The Oswego Suffrage club will keep open headquarters every day and evening. The State Grange has repeatedly endorsed woman suffrage in New York state and it is expected that the Grange will be pretty solid for votes for women at the November election. At the same time, the women do not want them to forget that their case is to be voted on this fall and special efforts will be made by the Oswego club to help. The work during the week will be in charge of the local organization and the women will be assisted by Miss Portia Willis, of New York city, who is a daughter of former Congressman Willis, and is one of the best speakers in the state, and Miss Crane, of Putnam county. Miss Harriet May Mills, of Syracuse, who is well known in Oswego, will also be in town and will speak for the cause. A number of other suffrage women, including Mrs. H. S. Holden and Mrs. W. W. Chapin, will be present at various times and the various suffrage clubs in Oswego county, of which there are twenty-one, will be represented and aid in the work. A large amount of literature has been ordered, meetings will be held at various times and the women do not intend to let any granger leave Oswego without knowing that woman suffrage, to their minds, is the live question of the hour.

The women have also arranged an attractive feature at their headquarters which Republicans and Democrats have not yet put into practice in the Oswego campaign. Tea and sandwiches will be served to the delegates every afternoon without charge.

There will be a meeting of the suffrage club and of all those interested in suffrage work at the residence of Mrs. Luther W. Mott Tuesday afternoon at 3.30.

INCREASED SALARY GRANTED TO CITY ENGINEER WOOLEY.

W. Thomas Wooley, city engineer, will dray a salary of $4,000 a year during 1915. The Common Council decided this yesterday afternoon.

The decision was reached despite a speech by Alderman Isaac C. Davis, opposing the ordinance. It was one of the career of the alderman from the Ninth ward, but he mustered only two votes, his own and that of Alderman James P. Murphy of the Eighth ward.

Mr. Davis' chief argument against the increase of 500 a year carried by the ordinance was that if Mr. Wooley is dissatisfied with that salary, "which," he said, "is plenty for any ordinary man to live on, there are among the unemployed in Syracuse now many engineers who would be glad to take the position at that salary.

"My friend Davis over here," Alderman Davis said, "is so afraid that the city engineer would quit his job. Now, John, if you were getting $3,500 a year would you quit?

It was after lengthy debate voted to grant Mr. Wooley the demanded increase of $500 yearly.

About Sports Generally

By FRANK G. MENKE.

New York, Jan. 29.—Hockey—there's a grand little game from the spectators viewpoint. When played strictly according to Hoyle on hockey, it createst a large flock of thrills and when played with variations it leaves nothing to be desired.

They played a game with amusing variations in New York a few evenings ago, and just about the same time they varied the game in Cleveland by busting a fellow's skull and wounded about six other players so that medical assistance was very, very necessary.

The variation in New York came during a game played in St. Nicholas Rink. An extra whistle was injected into the frolic by a spectator, and just as too many cooks can spoil the concomme, so can too many whistles put the blink on a hockey game.

It may be explained for the benefit of our southern brethern who don't see an ice hockey game very often, that a whistle in the hands of a referee is a very important factor in a hockey game. A toot from the whistle stops the game or it starts the game, as the case may be.

The crowd had settled in its seat, the players had lined up. Everything was ready. The referee tooted on his nice, new whistle and the game got under way. But it remained under way for just about one minute. Then a whistle blew. The notes that issued forth on the amonia scented air sounded just like those that ooze from the referee's whistle. Hearing a whistle—a signal to halt—the players halted, and looked inquiringly at the referee. Why was he halting the game? No fouls had been committed; no one was injured or dying on the ice.

The referee returned the glances of the players. Why had those players halted? He looked hither and thither, saw no reason for the halt in operations and then tooted the players back into action.

Silence reigned for about 18 seconds. That is to say, no piercing blasts of a whistle were heard for that period. And then—"Toot! Toot!" Once again the players stopped.

"Hey, whatsa matter at one another and then in chorus, shouted at the referee:

"Whatsa matter with us? Hey, you boob, whatsa matter with you? Tryin' to tset out your lungs on that new whistle of yours, hey?"

"Who me?" demanded the referee, a bit mystified. "Why, I ain't blew on this here whistle, since the game started except to get you fellows to movin' when you stopped before."

"You ain't?"

"No, I ain't, and dontchu fellows try to say I am. I won't stand for any sassin'. Get busy. Play ball." And he tooted his tooter.

About one minute later the blasts of a whistle were heard again. The players ceased work, but this time they didn't stand around. They made a concerted dash for the referee.

"Hold on; hold on, gents" shouted the referee waving them back. "Tain't me that's been a-blowin' that whistle. It's somebody in the galleries. I didn't hear it the first two times because I don't hear extry well. But that last time I did."

The game was delayed until the ushers passed among the crowd and remarked that anyone displaying or tooting a whistle would be dealt with as befitted such a crime. Thereafter, only one whistle whistled within the rink.

Some few evenings ago a Canadian team and a Cleveland team staged a hockey game in the Ohio city. For a certain period all went well. Hockey was played strictly according to Hoyle on hockey.

From a nice, refined hockey game the ice became a scene that reminded many of the description of a bayonet battle in France. The players ceased using their clubs for swatting the rubber disc and began swatting each other upon the knobs.

Down went the players like soldiers in front of a machine-gun. The ice became cluttered with prostrate and bleeding forms.

Just when it looked as if the battle would end because of lack of warriors, the spectators heard the call of the wild. They responded and charged onto the floor of the rink. Emitting battle cries they started to take up the battle when it was beginning to end. Then the guardians of the law got busy and stopped further bloodshed.

An ambulance carried away one player with the busted skull and an emergency corps of doctors at once busied themselves rendering first aid to the injured.

A great game is hockey.

MEN FAINT AT SUNDAY'S TALK

No Words Were Spared As Sunday Flailed Vice, Drink and the Church

The 26,000 or more men and boys who listened to Billy Sunday "for men-only" sermons in the Tabernacle, at 19th and Vine sts., Sunday afternoon and evening, were raked over the coals for fair.

Billy's subject was vice, disease and drink. He returned to the gospel only incidentally. He was a crusading moralist, rough shod, with a tongue like a whip.

No man who ever spoke publicly in this city has had the nerve-or the ability-to go to the heights and the depths he sounded at the men's meetings yesterday. He was as frank as the captian of an oyster boat and as keen and prophetic as Eguene Brieux.

All the terrible knowledge usually locked up in clinics, laboratories and operating rooms was shouted into the faces of men who watched the speaker as if they were observing a procession of ghosts.

His arraignment of immorality among men was blistering. And Victor Hugo never conceived anything more human and more tragic than the climaxes in which Billy told of his own life and of the time when, blank drunk, he sat in the rain on a Chicago curb with Silver Flint, Mike Kelly and Frank Williamson, the beloved gladiators of the old White Sox, who later died in destitution.

About a dozen men fainted at each of the two meetings before the evangelist, bent double with fatigue, and in a voice worn down to a rasping whisper, begged his hearers to live decently and spit defiance at the rum-bund.

The discourse was interrupted by the storm of whistles and cheers that goes up when a ball sails over an outfield fence. Once Billy held his nose and jumped from the platform to the saw dust below to imitate a man jumping off a ferryboat—the fate he recommended for the seducers of women.

Again, in a marvelous word picture of the death of Flint, his old "sidekick," Billy crouched and slid across the platform as a runner slides to first. That was Flint, he said, making one last trial for life after the forces of evil had made a wreck of him.

Billy's voice rose as wild and clear as Homer Rodeheaver's trombone, when after telling of the degraded end of his old pals, he straightened up and faced the silent auditorium.

"Boys!" he cried, "that was more than twenty-five years ago. Silver and Mike and Williamson are in the dust and they died broken men. I left them there on the curb in the rain when a mission band came along singing hymns. I decided that I'd give myself to God and be decent. Who won—who won? They or I?"

In all his experience Billy has never had such a day's harvest. Eleven hundred and thirty men flocked forward at the afternoon and evening meetings, and pledged themselves to a religious life. At the morning meeting, which was open to everybody, 313 men, women and children advanced as penitents. The total for the day was 1,443, and it broke all records for the evangelist's work in this or any other city. The number of converts so far recording in this city is now 8,245.

Both afternoon and evening Billy reiterated that hidden immorality among men causes the deaths of thousands of innocent women each year, and that social contagions widely spread are the blight of the nation. For the ordinary sinner against decent women Billy reserved the ultimate of his terrific vocabulary.

"If some great emetic could be poured into the lowest and deepest pit of hell," he said of this type, "the last imp to come out of the very bottom would be an archangle in good standing compared to that man."

Now and then, while the evangelist unfolded all the pathological horrors and menace of social contagions, countless men in the audience fanned themselves with hymn books.

The evangelist reiterated his denunciation of the liquor traffic and called Pennsylvania "a stain on the map when it came to booze."

Billy gave his audience frequent laughs to lessen the tension. One of the songs requested and sung with a roar at the opening of both meetings was the famous "Brewers' Big Horses."

The Morning Sermon.

Sunday morning Mr. Sunday took "Prayer" as the topic of his sermon. His text was the opening of the Lord's Prayer, "Thy Kingdom Come." He said: "Thy Kingdom come" means to have a part in the greatest business in which men can be engaged. It means to go into partnership with God in the work of saving the world.

"When God's will is done on earth as it is in heaven, this earth will be like heaven. To pray 'thy kingdom come' means to want everything to go that hinders the reign of God in every heart. It means to pray for right conduct, decent living everywhere; to pray for honesty, uprightness, square dealing; it means to pray for purity in public and private life.

"It means to stand against wickedness of every kind, no matter how profitable that wickedness may be, or how respectable it might seem.

"If a man truly prays this prayer as Jesus meant he should, he will require that very dollar that he has be as religious as himself, and he will try to say 'Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

"'Thy kingdom come' not mean only in our own heart, in our own home, in our family, or in our own church; but it means 'Thy kingdom come' wherever there is a soul that does not know God. 'Thy kingdom come'; help save the prostitute, the bum, the drunkard, the degenerate, the convict, the afflicted—all of them have souls, It's easy for you to sit in the cushioned pew in church and sing 'Rescue the Perishing." It's easy for you to sit in the parlor or in drawing room with your feet incased in slippers toasting before a nice, warm fire and sing, 'Come, Ye Disconsolate, Come to the Mercy Seat.' It's easy to pray to God to save the world, while you loaf on the job. That's not religion That's sentiment—that's dreaming. If you want to rescue the perishing, go where they are, touch them, handle them, mingle with them, talk to them.

"We talk about the non-churchgoers. Talk about the non-going church instead. We slander people when we say that they don't want God; that they don't want to be saved: that they are hostile to religion. It's nonsense; it's not true, I will not hear them libeled. They do want God; to be saved through Jesus Christ; they hate the shams, the hypocrisies, the caricatures they find in the church; they do not hate Jesus Christ. They like to see a man that can deliver the goods.

"God can make diamonds out of dwarfed, twisted, crooked humanity that never had a chance to be any different. Christ died for the worst as well as for the best. He died for the poor as well as the rich.

"Pray first, eat later. Oh, you old sinners, who look at your watches when a preacher preaches to you fifteen minutes longer than you think he ought! You make me sick.

"We cannot say 'Thy kingdom come,' in the land bordered on the north by Canada and British Columbia, on the south by Mexico and the Gulf of Mexico, on the east by the Atlantic Ocean and on the west by the Pacific Ocean, and let the rest go to hell. No. We pray for nobody unless we pray for everybody. You want Philadelphia to be like heaven. The only reason it isn't is because a lot of you are fools, serving the devil.

Don't Be Good On Sunday Only.

"Your prayers or anything you do in the church on Sunday mean nothing if you don't do the same thing in business on Monday. I don't care how loud you call out in prayer meeting, if you go out and skin somebody next day.

"It will not take the pure food law to keep a man who truly prays 'Thy kingdom come,' from putting chalk in the flour, sand in the sugar, brick dust in red pepper, ground peanut shells in breakfast food.

"The man who truly prays 'Thy kingdom come' cannot pass a saloon and not ask himself the question, 'What can I do to send that saloon to hell?' You cannot pray 'Thy kingdom come' and then rush to polls and vote for the thing that is preventing that kingdom from coming and make the devil laugh. For the man who truly prays 'Thy kingdom come' it would be impossible to have one kind of religion on his knees and another when he is behind the counter; it would be impossible to have one kind of religion in the pew and another in politics. When a man truly prays 'Thy kingdom come' he means it in everything or in nothing.

"When we really pray, the church won't have to depend on oyster stew and side shows. When the Lord separates the sheep from the goats, those on the right will be those who prayed, 'Thy kingdom come'; and those on the left will be those who did not.

"When we pray and live that prayer, here will not be a saloon, a brewery, penitentiary. We won't need police. We won't have to have armies, battle ships and guns then, for the peace of God will regin from sea to sea, as He intended it. We will live by the golden rule. Oh, you are a big fool, an idiot, to serve the devil as you ought to be in the bughouse Some men are so busy getting ready to be angels, they forget all about being men. They are so busy figuring on St. Peter's ledger, they forget the grocery man's.

"Tote fair with the Lord. Don't give God Almighty a nickle and spend tens of thousands on your old carcass. Live by the golden rule; that explains, you old choir members, why we haven't been able to get you off that choir platform. You are not praying. You haven't been saved yourselves. Oh, these old, black-hearted liars who are going about denying the divinity of Jesus Christ. 'Thy kingdom come.' Pray it with your hearts, your hands, your minds, your feet. Give God all."

BREAD GOES UP IN NEW YORK

City May Do Baking; Flour Cost to Baker Less Than 1 Per Cent Higher

New York, Feb. 11.—Indignant protests are bing voiced by housewives all over the city today as the result of New York bakers raising the price of bread from five to six cents a loaf. The increase has added to the cost of living in New York city the annual sum of $16,000,000, increasing the total breadb ill from $45,600,000 to $61,500,000.

Investigation by state and municipal authorities has already started. Deputy Attorney General Alfred L. Becker is probing into the causes of the rise for the State. Alderman Dowling has introduced an ordinance requiring that the standard loaf sold in New York shall be sixteen ounces. There is no law regulating the price of bread. The alderman even goes further and advocates a plan of having the city operate municipal bakeries at which bread will be made and sold at the old prices. Here is what he says:

"Let the city of New York bake bread for the poor in Blackwell's Island and other city institutions.

"Let the city buy bread at wholesale.

"Let the city retail all this bread at cost at its 56 public milk stations.

"Big baking houses buy their flour a year in advance. Undoubtedly they still have several months' supply bought at the old prices, before wheat and flour began to soar. What excuse have they for boosting the price of bread?

"If the increased cost of wheat is a legitimate excuse for raising the retail price of bread, why doesn't the United States government place an embargo on exporting wheat."

The bakers deny the charge that they have raised the price insorperly. They assert that the cost of uour has compelled the raise. tSatisticians, however, have present figures showing that the actual cost per loaf to [illegible] due to the rise in the price of flour is less than 1 per cent. and that the one cent increase in the price of a loaf is not justified.

Mrs. Julian Heath, president of the Housewives' league, in protesting against the increase, urged a dead line in the poorer districts of the city where bread could be sold at the old price.

ROBIN HOOD DOES NOT LOSE POPULARITY

The Auburn Advertiser says of "Robin Hood," that pretty comic opera coming to The Quirk tomorrow night:

"Bringing back memories of the famous "Bostonians," that immortal operatic organization, the old but ever popular DeKoven opera, "Robin Hood," was sung, and very well sung, at the Auditorium last evening, and a large audience, made up of the discriminating class of local theatregoers, listened raptly to the soft and vigorous and rollicking airs with which the uncommonly tuneful opera abounds.

"No doubt there were some in the audience, who, having seen Henry Clay Barnabee, who died at a ripe old age only a short time ago, in the Bostonians' production, and heard Jessie Bartlett Davis sing "Oh Promise Me," and who remembered Alice Neilson and Eugene Cowles, were not inclined to admit a comparison was justified. But memories in such cases influence opinions. There is no doubt however, that last night's production afforded keen delight; the principal roles were in good hands, the chorus was excellent and pains had been take nto mount the piece as it deserved. And there was a pleasing briskness, and harmony of sound, settings and costumes.

"Two performers well known in this city are with the company. Tillie Salinger, who plays Dame Durden, is still very sprightly and comely though age's encroachments show. Phil Branson, who is the sheriff of Nottingham, is as funny as ever. These two membersof the summer opera which James A. Hennessy made a trial of several years ago in the now abandoned theater at Island Park. Both were warmly welcomed by last night's audience.

"Robin Hood," well sung as it was here should be a treat anywhere and a relief to those jaded by the girlish and garish modern musical comedies."

MEETING POSTPONED

The annual meeting of the Woman's Civic League which was scheduled for Friday has been postponed for one week. A complete re-organization of the league may be made.

The work along civic lines in Fulton is a purely pioneer effort, and although during the first year of the league's existence a public playground, a baby welfare station and a girls club were established and maintained the work has been experimental.

The members feel the necessity of Civic League is sufficient to warrant its existence, and that Fulton can and will furnish enough women who are unselfish and big hearted enough to aid working out the life problems that lay within the gates of our own city.

The Quirk theatre benefit to be given this week was postponed for a short time in order that the work might not conflict with that for the Charity ball to be held Monday evening.

"IS IT WELL WITH THEE?"

DEMANDS BILLY SUNDAY

Oh, for business men that would forget their mad, wild rush after money and go back and pay their clerks. Oh, for school teachers that would stop their miserable, good-or-nothing whining, snapping and fault-finding with my vocabulary and get on your knees and pray. If you could do better than I come up and do it.

I am getting tired of some of you rattle-brained school teachers growling about my preaching. You quit card playing, dancing, wine and beer drinking and you won't have time to find fault with me.

I would like to make the application of my message tonight so personal that not a man, woman or child can go out of here and say:

"He didn't mean man. it didn't touch me, it didn't apply to me."

Now—

"Is it well with thee?"

Says He Finds Women Are Better Than Men.

I will answer that much of it for every unsaved man, woman and child in this building tonight.

I know, men, that there are trials. I know there are temptations. I have been privileged of God to lead more men than women to Christ, not that I preach especially for them—well I do, too. I believe that if the womanhood of America was no better than the manhood God would have dumped the whole thing into hell long ago and shut up shop.

There is many a young man going to hell tonight, because he was influenced by the gang he trains with, and he goes with the wrong mob, and they will put any fellow into the penitentiary and hell if he stays by them long enough.

There is many a man influenced by the gang he goes with to do things which, after he has done them and when he is alone, he hates and despises himself for.

He condemns himself to think he didn't have manhood and decency enough to say:

"No."

And he could not look his mother or his sister or his wife in the face without blushing to the roots of his hair, and when alone in the quiet of his room and he can review what he did, he despises himself to think he didn't have grit and manhood enough to refuse the gang.

There are men in heaven tonight because they had manhood enough to choose the right company, and there are men in hell because they were dragged there by the gang they went with.

Is it well with the man that will sit at the gaming table and run the risk of being a black-legged gambler?

Is it well with the man who will take even an occasional drink and run the risk of becoming a sputtering, vomiting, reeling, jabbering drunkard, staggering to the pit of hell?

Is it well with the man that is taking God's name in vain on his lips and pouring out his polluted oaths and blasphemy?

Is it well with the man that will hang on the walls of his memory vile, lewd pictures and approach in his thoughts the secrets of others?

Is it well with the man or woman that is careless of his or her associates, of the Sabbath day and the laws of God?

No! No! Ten thousand times no.

God pity you, if you go out into eternity with the sin on your life that is there tonight as you sit and listen to me!

Father Forgave His Son; God Will Forgive You.

There are reasons why you ought to come. In the first place God is ready and willing to forgive you, no matter how black your sins may have been.

Years ago my friend, S. H. Hadley, in the old Water street mission, sat teetered back in a chair on a hot summer day, [illegible] street came a boy, a young fellow about fourteen, and he walked up in front of my friend as he sat blinking in the sun and said:

"Is this Mr. Hadley?"

My friend said:

"Yes."

He said:

"Can you give me a needle and thread?"

My friend said:

"What for?"

"I want to mend my trousers."

"You haven't enough on you to bother about mending, kid. You go upstairs and see Mrs. Hadley."

He went upstairs and she soon had him in her arms and on her lap, and from his lips a confession.

He worked for his father in a store in Philadelphia, and one night he stole $95 and he fled. He went up and down the land spending that money to keep away from his parents, thinking that if they caught him they would have him arrested and confined in a reformatory, and the father was pouring out money like water.

The mother was dying. Sleep forsook her couch, her appetite failed, she was grieving herself to death, and the father had hired the best detectives that Pinkerton had and had offered a reward of hundreds of dollars for any information that would lead to his discovery and arrest.

When my friend heard the story he sent a telegram to Philadelphia to the name and address given and a little while back came the answer:

"Tell the dear boy to come home. Buy the ticket; we will meet him at Broad Street Station. Tell him to come home."

God says:

"You go down and stand and tell them that I will forgive them. Tell them, yes, they have broken My law. Tell them, yes, in their fear and their knowledge of sin they are getting away. They are trying to drown it in pleasure."

God says: "Stand and tell them I will forgive and blot out their transgressions."

God stands ready and willing to forgive you and by and through the sacrificial death of Christ I am able to stand here tonight and bring you this message.

No Sacrigce to Compare With That of Jesus

During the English mutiny in India the English defeated and a large number were captured and taken to Delhi, the headquarters of the Sepoy.

Among the number was an English officer named Baird. While they were in prison an Indian officer came in carrying a number of chains, and he started to wrap a chain about each of the English officers.

When he approached a man lying on the floor bleeding from wounds, so weak he could not stand, he started to wrap a chain around him and he staggered and fell.

Baird rushed to his side and said:—

"Great God, have you neither heart nor sympathy? Don't you see he is so weak now he can't stand, and you will not add to his burden by compelling him to lie there with a chain wrapped about him?"

"There are as many chains as there are prisoners and every chain must be worn."

"Then," said Baird, "put two chains on me. I will wear mine and the one intended for him. Wrap and lock two, sir, about me."

And they did it, and they dragged Baird off to the dungeon, where he died, and they dumped his body into the well with others.

This man was exchanged as a prisoner. He went back to dear old England, and until the day he died he never tired, in private or in public, of sounding forth the praise of the man who, by wearing his chain, had made it possible for him to walk again into the arms of his loved ones.

Had Baird worn all the chains, even that would not have been analogus to what Christ did when on the Cross, who took upon Himself your guilt and mine and opened up a plan of redemption to keep us out of hell.

Friends, our friends in heaven are anxious. I have no doubt every man and woman in this city, their hearts would leap for joy if you would give your heart to Jesus Christ.

"Say," said a man in Huntingdon, Pa., to my friend, Dr. Chapman, with whom I traveled for two years, "would you [illegible] with a redeemed drunkard?

"Yes," said Dr. Chapman, "I would like to shake hands with anybody that has been redeemed from the power of sin and the devil, especially strong drink."

Tells Awful Story of Downfall and Redemption

"Then take my hand. I used to be a prosperous man in this town. I owned the three tallest buildings. When you get near enough to them look up and you will see my name carved in the stone.

"I could not stand the prosperity and I took to drinking, gambling and buying stocks. My wife and my friends remonstrated and pled with me, and little by little I saw my property slip away. I had to mortgage one building to keep another going, the mortgage was foreclosed and I lost that one, and then another and another until, discouraged, I plunged deeper into drink and all was gone and I became a common drunkard.

"One day I was lying in the stairway of a building I used to own, where I had my office, and a man came and aroused me from my stupor and said:—

"'If you want to see your boy alive you had better hurry home. The doctors have had a consultation and say he cannot live.'

"I had been on a drunk for a month and hadn't been home for a week. I hardly knew what he said, but I leaped to my feet and hurried down the street, weeping as I ran. I hurried to his bedside. He slipped his arms about my neck, drew me down and said:—

"'Promise me you will be good to mamma; promise me you will meet me in heaven for I am going to die.'

"With his arms around my neck and his dying words ringing in my ears, I promised him, and from that day to this I have kept this vow. Now when I go down the street past the open saloon, and the fumes belch through the door, and I am tempted to go in, I know that if I did it would be all up with me. Many a time I cross the street, just to prevent going by a saloon, and run to be sure I'll get by and that I won't get in.

"I know there is one up in heaven that is waiting to welcome me, and I would not disappoint that boy for the world."

Friends yonder are anxious. God is anxious. Christ is anxious. Is it well with thee? No, No.

I had a friend who used to be secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in New York city and among his duties he visited Castle Garden and gave advice and instructions to the young men who came as strangers to our shore, and one day he met a ship load from Glasgow, Scotland. He was especially attracted by a keen, snappy looking young Scotchman. He walked up, handed him his card and said:—

You Cannot Win Life Without Jesus Christ

"My name is Smith. I represent the Y. M. C. A. Can I be of any help to you in directing you to a church home or boarding house?"

"No," said the Scotchman. "I know where I'm going. I don't need your help."

Then my friend put to him the inevitable question:—

"Are you a Christian?"

"No, I am not a Christian and furthermore I never expect to be a Christian."

My freind said:—

"Well, now, see here. I have seen stronger men than you wrecked who have tried to win without Jesus Christ."

"Oh," said the Scotchman, "I could take you and throw you in the bay," and as my friend contrasted his physique with that of the young Scotchman he never questioned his ability, but left him with these three verses of Scripture:—

"He that being often reproved hardeneth his neck shall suddenly be destroyed and that without remedy."

"In hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torment."

"It is given unto [illegible] once to die, but after that the judgment."

And with that he left him.

My friend was transferred to Chicago and among his duties he visited the hospitals, the Cook county especially. When he resigned from the Y. M. C. A. and I quit playing ball in Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, I took his place in Chicago, and among my duties I had the ones he had performed.

The Cook county hospital is a charity institution. One day, along toward evening, the telephone rang and some one asked for a young man to talk and pray with some one in the hospital, dying.

That being my friend's duty, he stepped on a car and hurried to the hospital. He found the warden in the [illegible] his errand known the warden said:—

"No, you can't see that young man for several reasons. It is past visit-

OSWEGO TO FIGHT WHITE PLAGUE

Former Movement Resulted In Establishing Orwell Hospital; Committee Has Money

Oswego, Jan. 8.—On Monday evening at 8.15 there will be a meeting in the Y. M. C. A. to revive the interest in a local campaign against tuberculosis. Six years ago a similar campaign was started and resulted in the establishment of the County Tuberculosis hospital at Orwell. Of this the committee appointed at that time has not been particularly active but it is now felt that another active campaign should be started and kept up motion indefinitely, or until the white plague has been thoroughly stamped out in this section of the state. There is a substantial sum of money on hand as the result of Red Cross Christmas seals and the expenditure of this money will be one of the matters to be decided upon.

If there is any city in the state which should be interested in the fight against tuberculosis it is Oswego. While the disease may not be as prevalent here as it is some other localities at the same time there is enough of it to be a serious menace against the general health of the community. There have been many deaths here in the past from tuberculosis, which with the knowledge of the present day might easily have been prevented. The idea of the present day is a campaign of education and prevention. Proper measures adopted in homes where there is tuberculosis will not only save the life of sick person but will prove a safeguard against infection among other members of the family. A campaign of prevention should go hand and hand with a campaign for cure and it is hoped and confidently expected that both can be successfully carried on in Oswego.

New System of Garbage Collecting.

The city of Syracuse, N. Y., has instituted a novel type of automobile garbage collection by which it has rid itself of the nuisance of open wagons scattering garbage through the streets and giving off an unpleasant odor, says the American City.

Two motor trucks are used for the new service, and each is of three tons capacity and carries 108 cans of 100 pounds capacity. As the cans are not always full the average load is about three and a half tons. Each truck employs a force of six men. Two are stationed at all times on the folding running boards. Their work is to place in position on the car the cans which are brought from the yards by the four collectors.

When loaded the trucks go to the reduction plant outside the city, where the truck driver and two assistants empty the truck. These assistants stay at the plant. Part of their duty is to wash the cans and have them ready for the next day's service. In the meantime clean cans, which have been used on the previous day, are placed on the truck, which returns to the city for the next load. The trucks are neat and attractive in appearance, and if the system, which is in the experimental stage, proves satisfactory a sufficient number of trucks will be purchased to extend the service over the entire city.

A Popular Movement.

About 100 boys, the sons of members of the Rochester (N. Y.) Chamber of Commerce, recently made a day's trip to two of the Rochester factories. This custom, instituted by the Chicago Association of Commerce, seems to be gaining in popularity throughout the country.

"A cup of good coffee at breakfast is the first step in the day's success."—Downey.

And so it is! Can any beverage be better to the coffee judge than a cup of good coffee—coffee well made—and can anything be worse—than poor coffee—coffee improperly made.

In making good coffee we must have first the brand and then the process. Here follows a few points on coffee.

The coffee tree is native to Absynnia but is now grown in all tropical countries. Brazil produces about two-thirds the coffee used. Central America, Java and Arabia are also coffee centers. Java coffe is considered finest. Mocha commands a higher price owing to certain acidity and sparkle, which alone is not desirable, but when combined with Java, in proportion of two parts Java to one part Mocha, the coffee best suited to average taste is made. Old government Java has deservedly gained a good reputation, as it is carefully inspected, and its sale controlled by Dutch government. Strange as it may seem to the consumer, all coffee sold as Java does not come from the island of Java.

The best way in buying coffee is to get the coffee in the berry and grind it with the home mill as it is needed. Of the different method in making coffee the French method of the filtered or percolated coffee is by far the most satisfactory. The cold spray of water is raised fountain-like in percolater as soon as the pot comes in contact with the heat; this continues for from 4 to 8 minutes, according intensity of the heat. With the water gradually heating and being sprayed over the ground coffee the best qualities are extracted, and poured there is a cup of clear, sparkling, aromic coffee that gives delight.

The new electric percolators are a wonderful success. With these a cup of perfect coffee is possible in 4 minutes.

Tea.

Tea is used by more than one-half the human race, although the United States is not a tea-drinking country, one and one-half pounds are consumed per capita per annum. Black, green and uncolored are the kinds of tea.

Black tea comes from India and Ceylon. Some familiar brands are Oolong, Formosa, English Breakfast, Orange Pekoe, and Flowery Pekoe. The last two named, often employed at the "five o'clock tea" commands high prices; they are made from the youngest leaves. The green tea comes from Japan. Some familiar brands as Hyson, Japan and Gunpowder.

The best brands may produce a poor cup of tea.

First, in making tea the water should be fresh; water that has once been boiled and allowed to stand in the teakettle should not be reboiled. At the first boil of the water it should be poured in the pot (glazed preferred) which has been freshly scalded and in which the proper amount of tea has been placed. The pot is then covered closely and allowed to infuse. Tea should never be boiled, nor should it be allowed to steep long as this destroys the delicate flavor.

By trying the different brands on the market a favorite can easily be found.

REMINISCENCE

(By Mrs. Isador E. Hyde.)

When brother Ed was twelve years old,
And I was four years younger;
We turned our small world up side down;
We had to pluck or plunder.

Our father thought he had us learned,
The old boy was mistaken
If he had known of half our pranks,
There'd been a kids awakening.

We found that eggs were good to eat,
With sugar whipped up foaming;
We gathered hen fruit on the side,
And ate them in the gloaming.

Ed swiped big chunks of sugar,
And I the cup and spoon;
Those good old times we used to have
Have all passed by too soon.

We scooped the cream from pans of milk,
Ah, me! I taste it now;
And think I'll paste this to my prayers,
"God bless that old red cow."

The cooky jars were stowed away,
Our cook thought she was wise,
We cribbed those cookies one by one,
As well as pumpkin pies.

We jumped the fence and climbed the trees,
We swam the creek and river;
We shot at crows, we hit our game,
They'd drop without a quiver.

We wrestled on the lawn at eve,
This practice gave us muscle;
Sometimes, Dad played at boy again
And joined us in the tussle.

We rode the oxen out to' drink,
This stunt was simply crazy;
Ed always straddled brindle Bright
Because Buck was so lazy.

One day, Dad caught us riding out,
And we caught raps-a-dandy;
Ed whispered low, "Don't cry old sport,
We'll do the next thing handy."

And once, I made a button buzz,
(I guess I'll pass that over)
Next day Dad cut his whiskers off
And I kept under cover.

Those good old times passed by too soon,
Ed was a good old rover;
And could we live our lives again
We'd do the same things over.

Wireless Range Increasing.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 8.—The tall wireless towers at Arlington are in uninterrupted communication with Eiffel Tower, in Paris, both day and night, a feat which heretofore has been possibly only at night because of static conditions.

They have been in communication during the day with San Diego, Cal. Radio experts are elated at the wonderful development of the station's range and power.

BEAUTY DOCTORS HAVE A NEW WRINKLE.

Post Office Department Halts Work of Firm Which Sold Fair Complexions by Mail.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 8.—Wrinkles and their relation to love is the tender subject of a fraud order sent out today by the ordinarily hard hearted Post Office Department. Through this action a beauty shop in a western city which has been doing a tremendous mail order business in selling a complexion treatment to women who are in fear that they will be unable to retain their husbands is branded officially, "a scheme for obtaining money by means of false and fraudulent pretences."

The firm advertised extensively with the picture of a woman before and after treatment, promising to give the secret to those who wrote for it. In return the firm sent out a mass of "literature," including a letter which said, in part:

"Whenever there is a woman mentioned as a correspondent in a divorce case, in nine cases out of ten we find she had a fairer complexion than the wife. Does it not prove that a fair skin is the greatest attraction that a woman can possess? To acknowledge the truth of that and then not strive to obtain a clear complexion is to admit that you are willing to stand in your own way and let greater happiness pass you by."

Forts and Ships Suffer In Action

stable and fell into the sea. Both officers were injured. Flight Lieutenant Douglas, reconnoitiring at close quarters in another seaplane, was wounded, but returned safely.

"On the 5th seaplane, No. 172, Flight Lieutenant Bromet pilot, with Lieutenant Brown, was hit twenty-eight times, and seaplane No. 7, Flight Lieutenant Hershaw pilot, with Petty Officer Merchant, was struck eight times in locating concealed positions.

"The Ark Royal (the mother ship for seaplanes) is equipped with every appliance necessary for the repair and maintenance of the numerous aircraft she carries."

Another announcement by the Admiralty has reference to the activities in the Gulf of Smyrna, based on a report from the commander in chief in the East Indies, Vice Admiral Sir Richard Peirse, who is operating there with his squadron. From the report it appears that, having bombarded Fort Yeni Kale on March 5 and severely damaged it, the vice admiral proceeded on March6 to sweep his way through the mine fields until he drew the fire of several subsidiary batteries, one containing four 6-inch guns, near Paleo Tabia Point; another with five 4.7 guns 150 feet up the hillside, and three field guns in the earthworks in the Chiflik guard house. There also were several smaller guns concealed along the shore to the eastward.

These positions were engaged by the ships at from 7,000 to 8,000 yards. The batteries replied vigorously, but after one hour of firing all were silenced. In the afternoon the war ships steamed in to a closer range and engaged the Paleo Tabia battery and the other batteries on the hill. The fire was continued until all were put out of action.

Vice Admiral Peirse reports that the cruiser Euryalus and one of the battle ships were hit by 6-inch projectiles and that the mine sweepers were struck by fragments of shells, but that the British casualties were slight. The vice admiral says the operations are continuing.

On behalf of the Russian naval General Staff the official Press Bureau last night made the following announcement:

"On Sunday our fleet bombarded Zunguldiak, Kozlon and Kilimli (ports on the Black Sea), destroying all structures and plants for the shipment of coal. The bombardment was followed by a terrific explosion and fire. Four batteries were silenced and eight steamships destroyed. Our casualties were three men wounded."

In a statement issued earlier in the evening regarding the recent fighting between British troops and Turkish forces at the head of the Persian Gulf, the Official Press Bureau said:

"The enemy's losses near Ahwaz (in Khubistan) on March 3 were heavier than previously reported. Six hundred were killed and many were wounded.

"In the action on the western flank the enemy lost 300 men killed."

The Morning Post's Amsterdam correspondent says the Niews Van Den Dag, discussing the consequences of the bombardment of the Dardanelles, declares:

"In the German press, which by its firm confidence in the future has sustained so admirably the courage of the people during the last half year, we never have seen so much uneasiness and nervousness as at the present time."

A dispatch from Amsterdam to Reuter's Telegram Company quotes the following official statement given out yesterday in Constantinople:

"The British ships Majestic and Irresistible have reinforced the enemy fleet. The fire of our batteries put a French armored cruiser out of action and damaged a British armored cruiser.

"Owing to our bombardment the hostile ships retreated and ceased their fire. Our batteries suffered no damages."

GERMANS CAPTURE 3480 RUSSIANS AT RIVER RAWA

Berlin, March 9.—Both Petrograd and Berlin announce that the operations now under way on the left bank of the Vistula river to the West and southwest of Warsaw will have a vital bearing on the outcome of the campaign in the East.

The German arm yheadquarters says 3,480 Russians have been captured in the encounters at Rawa.

The fighting in the Carpathians, which for prolonged and desperate encounters rivals any phase of the war, continues without a decisive victory for either side.

Vienna announces a substantial gain and the repeated repulse of Russian attacks near Leupkow. In Russian Poland and West Galicia the Austrians have captured several advance points and have taken about 2,300 Russian prisoners.

In Northern Poland the Russians are stillp ressing forward in an effort to expel the invaders, but apparently the resistance of the Germans has stiffened, following their defeat at Przasnysz, and they are holding their positions firmly.

Attacks and counter attacks form the text of both the Paris and Berlin official communications covering events on the western battel front, but there is no indication of a decisive gain by either side.

A Paris newspaper, in a description of the recent battel at Notre Dame de Lorette, says the Germans lost 3,000 men. Although they succeeded in capturing the three lines of French trenches, they are said to have been expelled from them in a furious night battle.

RUSSIANS FORCE GERMANS BACK FROM THE NIEMEN

London, March 9.—Frederick Rennett, the Daily News correspondent, telegraphs from Petrograd:

"In the north and south the Russians are now steadily establishing an ascendancy. They have driven the right wing of General von Eichborn's army, which recently attempted to cross the Niemen above Grodno, back toward the wide marshy clearing outside of Augustowo Forest, never permitting the German rear guard to halt. The Russian advance here reached a remarkable pace, considering the miserable condition of the ground.

"At Ossowiec Fortress the Russian artillery silenced two German heavy batteries Saturday. They continue the shelling of the Lyck road to keep back the German reinforcements. The number of Germans who surrender, especially among the fresh conscripts, far exceeds anything expected in the earlier stages of the war.

"Of a first consignmnet numbering, 800 of a total of 10,000 prisoners taken during the Przasnysz battles, recently brought from the first field base to the railroad, scarcely fifty could walk steadily. Others were crippled in both feet and complained that their boots were bad and too heavy. From them it has been learned that with four corps involved in the defeat at Prsasnysz, Field Marshal von Hnidenburg is again striving to distract attention from this tragic end to his northeastern campaign by directing sharp infantry attacks on a six mile front above the left bank of the Hilitza, in the direction of the Rawn road.

"A sharrp battle in this district of Central Poland has now lasted three days. It evidently aims at preventing the Russian outer lines in the region southwest of Warsaw from sparing forces to go elsewhere, as there are indications that the Germans fear a new and strong offensive on Nida and Dunajetz against the armies protecting cracow."

LATE WAR BULLETINS

London.—A Reuter despatch from Athens says Mr. Zaimis has declined to form a Cabinet to succeed that of Mr. Venizelos, which resigned on Saturday, and that King Constantine will summon Mr. Gounaris, deputy for Patras, for the task.

Mr. Zaimis was asked on Saturday by Kin Constantine to form a Cabinet after the resignation of Mr. Venizelos had been announced, following a disagreement with the King, who has been exerting his influence to maintain the neutrality of his country in opposition to Mr. Venizelos. Mr. Zaimis, who is governor of the National Bank of Greece, asked the King to give him until yesterday to consult his friends before giving his answer. Mr. Zaimis was Governor of Crete from 1909 to 1911.

London.—One of the most picturesque bits of the day's news is a report from Bucharest stating that the Sultan Abul Hamid has regained his freedom and is gathering his friends and supporters around him. It is asserted that he may seek to play an important part in his country's affairs.

London.—The correspondent of the Daily Telegraph at Copenhagen telegraphs:

"A high official who has connections with the best German sources learns that there is great talk of peace in official circles in Germany, where it seems to be considered that the war will be ended by June. It is said to be certain that the Germans will not risk another winter campaign in Russia."

Paris.—The Germans made a heavy attack on the Allies ni the dunes on Sunday night. They began by bombardment of the trenches at half-past eight o'clock and followed this up by three infantry assaults. The fighting continued this morning, but there was no indication that the Germans had gained the slightest headway, as they repeatedly failed to secover trenches they had lost.

London.—That captured crews of German submarines will be tried in the British courts for murder on the high seas—in effect, for piracy—was indicated in a statement issued yesterday by the Admiralty.

Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, retired, and other prominent Britons have demanded that such prisoners be treated as pirates, and the Admiralty's announcement is evidently made in view of these demands.

It is not justified, the Admiralty announces, in extending honors to the crews of German submarines, owing to their methods, and that it is intended to segregate them under special restrictions pending their possible conviction when peace is restored.

Geneva.—One thousand French civilians who have been prisoners in the portions of France occupied by the Germans arrrived here yesterday. Most of them came frorm Lille and Maubeuge. The majority were women and children of the poorest classes. They will be sent to the French departments nearest Switzerland.

Berlin.—An item given out for publication by the Overseas News Agency shows that various banks and other institutions in Germany have subscribed $11,916, 000 to the war loan.

London.—A dispatch from Amsterdam to the Exchange Telegraph Company says that, according to Vienna telegrams, Count Stephan Tisza, the Hungarian Premier, will soon be appointed Austro-Hungarian Foreign Secretary. The dispatches further add that the Count will rerceive the title of Imperial Chancellor, with powers similar rto those held by the Gerrman Imperial Chancellor.

ASSEMBLY WORKMEN'S BILL LOSES IN SENATE

Conference Committee Appointed to Meet with One from Lower.

Albany, March 9.—Refusing to accept the Assembly idea of a workmen's compensation bill, the Senate tonight voted to non-concur, and appointed a conference committeee to meet similar committee from the other house.

Senator Wagner protested against that action which, he said, meant delay. He drew a pitiful picture of the employes of the Workmen's Compensation Commission starving for lack of their salaries and forced to lean against their mahogany desks for support.

Many of them, Wagner declared, were really in sore straits, as they had received no pay in two months.

"Will the Senator produce a list of the low salaried men in the office?" Senator Brown asked skeptically.

Wagner assured Brown there were some men in the employ of the commission on extremely meagre salaries—as low as $900 a year, he said. Brown looked as if he didn't believe it.

"They are Civil Service men," Wagner hastened to add.

Senator Sage, chairman of the Finance Committee and in charge of the Workmen's Compensation bill, refused Wagner's appeal to pass the appropriation for the commission now and leave amendments of the law for a future day.

There was a brush between Brown the floor leader, and Lieutenant Governor Schoeneck over the appointment of the Senate Committee on Conference.

GUARDING GOLD AT SEA

Armor Plate Rooms on Ocean Liners For Holding Bullion.

It would be natural to suppose that shipments of gold bullion back and forth across the Atlantic on big liners would be attended by considerable precaution, but there is probably no other place in the world where the transport of great wealth is carried on with such simplicity.

One of our great liners has two strong rooms, the smaller being in close proximity to the captain's quarters, while the other is next to the provision department. The small strong room has its walls, door and ceiling lined with two inch steel plate and contains nothing in the way of furnishing other than shelves. This has more than once contained enough gold to buy the liner many times over.

The locks, which are of the double variety, are rendered still more secure by covering the keyholes with steel hasps, which are themselves locked in place with massive padlocks. This strong room, being located in the most frequented portion of the ship, is passed by persons at all hours of the day and night, which, after all, is the great protection.

The strong room located near the provision department is twelve feet long by four feet wide, and it often happens that both these rooms are filled to capacity with gold bullion. On one occasion the two rooms contained £20,000,000 in gold bullion, packed in small kegs bound with steel hoops.—London Answers.

TAUGHT HIM HIS DUTY.

Now He Knows All About the Etiquette of the Droshky.

The Siberian method of riding in a droshky requires an etiquette all its own, which, although sometimes surprising to the English traveler who encounters it for the first time, is based upon practical considerations. The danger of being thrown out has determined the prevailing usage, says Mrs. John Clarence Lee in "Across Siberia Alone."

If a gentleman escorts a lady it is his task to hold her in the carriage—not an easy occupation. He accomplishes it by putting his arm round her waist. A man who fails to do so is considered as lacking in courtesy. When you have become acquainted with the custom it seems entirely sensible and comfortable, but it seems strange at first to find yourself settling back into a stranger's arms.

An American who had lived in Russia and whom we met in China told us that he was driving with a woman physician, a Russian, middle aged and of rotund Russian type. He knew nothing about his duty toward her, and they thrashed round that three by five droshky until the woman turned angrily toward him.

"Have you been brought up in the backwoods that you don't know enough to hold me in this droshky?" she said.

He immediately put his arm round her waist or as it would go and held on hard.

How Standing Armies Originated.

The earliest European standing army was that of Macedonia, established about 350 B. C. by Philip, father of Alexander the Great. It was the second in the world's history, having been preceded only by that of Sesotris Pharaoh of Egypt, who organized a military caste about 1900 B. C. Of modern standing armies, that formed by the Turkish janissaries was first, being fully organized in 1362. It was a century later that the standing army of France, the earliest in Western Europe, was established by Charles VII. in the shape of "compagnies d'ordonnance," numbering 9,000 men. Rivalry thereupon compelled the nations to adopt similar means of defense. In England a standing army proper was first established by Cromwell, but was disbanded under Charles II., with the exception of a few regiments called the guards, or household brigade. This was the nucleus of England's present army.

Force of Habit.

A consul in Guatemala tells a story of a man who ran a store in Retalhuleu who had been ordering candles from Germany for many years. Each candle was wrapped in blue paper. One shipment came wrapped in yellow paper. The people would not buy them. In vain he argued and showed that the candles were the same as he had been selling. It was no use, and he could not sell those candles until he sent to a paper supply house in Guatemala City and bought sufficient blue paper in which to wrap them. Then he had no difficulty in selling them.

DIAMOND MERCHANTS RETURN EMPTY HANDED FROM EUROPE

With the supply of rough and finished stones practically cut off, the most serious situation that has confronted the diamond trade in years now exists, according to the statement yesterday of a prominent Maiden Lane diamond merchant who recently returned from abroad after an ineffectual atempt to buy stones.

The merchant said that he was accompanied by six other diamond buyers, all representatives of the largest Maiden Lane houses, and after four weeks spent in London, Antwerp, and Amsterdam, the centers of the European diamond trade, they were not only unable to obtain a single first class gem, but found the supply of brilliants and small stocy so badly curtailed that they came home empty handed.

"What little is felt of the diamond industry on the Continent now centers in Amsterdam," said the merchant. "Before the war there were thirty thousand men employed in finishing stones in the three cities of Amsterdam, Brussels and Antwerp. The German invasion paralyzed the industry in the two Belgian cities and now there is not a single stone to be purchased in either of these places.

"Of the thirty thousand diamond workers about eight hundred—most of them novices—are employed at the trade in Amsterdam, where they are immune from the repredations of war. None of these workers, however, are handling first class gems, their work being almost entirely devoted to small stock.

"We were the first of the buyers to go abrorad. It had been generally understood that the industry was at a standstill, but reports were current that impoverished Belgians and Germans were selling their family jewels and that great bargains were to be had. This report was found to be erroneous on our arrival in Belgium and Holland. There were no bargains to be had, not even in London. As a matter of fact, we found prices soaring in the English capital and many of the largest dealers were greatly concerned over their future supply.

There are plenty of pessimists who persistently refuse to look on the bright side of things for fear the light will hurt their eyes.

CHAPTER VIII.

The First Mate Talks.

PERSONALLY, I was convinced that Turner was guilty. Perhaps, lulled into a false security by the incarceration of the two men, we unconsciously relaxed our vigilance. But by the first night the crew were somewhat calmer. Here and there a pipe was lighted and a plug of tobacco went the rounds.

I find, on consulting the book in which I recorded, beginning with that day, the incidents of the return voyage, that two things happened that evening. One was my interview with Singleton; the other was my curious and depressing clash with Elsa Lee, on the deck that night.

Turner being quiet and Burns on watch at the beginning of the second dog watch, 6 o'clock, I went forward to the room where Singleton was imprisoned. Burns gave me the key, and advised me to take a weapon. I did not, however, nor was it needed.

"For God's sake, Leslie," he said, "tell them to open the window. I'm choking!"

He was right; the room was stifling. I opened the door behind me, and stood in the doorway against a rush for freedom. But he did not move. He sank back into his dejected attitude.

"Singleton," I said, "I wish you would tell me about last night. If you did it, we've got you. If you didn't, you'd better let me take your own account of what happened, while it's fresh in your mind. Or, better still, write it yourself."

He held out his right hand. I saw that it was shaking violently.

"Couldn't hold a pen," he said tersely. "Wouldn't be believed, anyhow."

The air being somewhat better, I closed and locked the door again, and, coming in, took out my notebook and pencil.

Briefly, Singleton's watch began at midnight. The captain, who had been complaining of lumbago, had had the cook prepare him a mustard poultice and had retired early. Burns was on watch from 8 to 12 and on coming into the forward house at a quarter after 11 o'clock to eat his night lunch reported to Singleton that the captain was in bed and that Mr. Turner had been asking for him. Singleton therefore took his cap and went on deck. This was about twenty minutes after 11. He had had a drink or two earlier in the evening, and he took another in his cabin when he got his cap.

He found Turner in the chart house playing solitaire and drinking. He was alone, and he asked Singleton to join him. The first mate looked at his watch and accepted the invitation, but decided to look around the forward house to be sure the captain was asleep. He went on deck. He could hear Burns and the lookout talking. The forward house was dark. He listened outside the captain's door and heard him breathing heavily, as if asleep. He stood there for a moment. He had an uneasy feeling that some one was watching him. He thought of Schwartz and was uncomfortable. He did not feel the whisky at all.

He struck a light and looked around. There was no one in sight. He could hear Charlie Jones in the forecastle drumming on his banjo and Burns whistling the same tune as he went aft to strike the bell—it was the duty of the officer on watch to strike the hour. It was then half after 11. As he passed the captain's door again his foot struck something, and it fell to the floor. He was afraid the captain had been roused and would still swear he heard him breathing regularly again. Then he stooped down. His foot had struck an ax upright against the captain's door and had knocked it down.

The ax belonged on the outer wall of the forward house. It was a rule that it must not be removed from its place except in emergency, and the first mate carried it out and leaned it against the forward port corner of the after house when he went below. Later, on his watch, he carried it forward and put it where it belonged.

He found Turner waiting on deck, and together they descended to the chart room. He was none too clear as to what followed. They drank together. Vail tried to get Turner to bed and failed. He believed that Burns had called the captain. The captain had ordered him to the deck, and there had been a furious quarrel. He felt ill by that time, and when he went on watch at midnight Burns was uncertain about leaving him. He was not intoxicated, he maintained, until after half-past 1. He was able to strike the bell without difficulty, and spoke, each time he went aft, to Charlie Jones, who was at the wheel.

After that, however, he suddenly felt strange. He thought he had been poped and told the helmsman so. He asked Jones to strike the bell for him and, going up on the forecastle head, lay down on the boards and fell asleep. He did not waken until he heard six bells struck—3 o'clock—and before he had fully roused I had called him.

"Then," I said, "when the lookout saw you with the ax you were replacing it?"

"Yes."

"The lookout says you were not on deck between 2 and 3 o'clock."

"How does he know? I was asleep."

"You had threatened to get the captain."

"I had a revolver. I didn't need to use an ax."

Much as I disliked the man I was inclined to believe his story, although I thought he was keeping something back. I leaned forward.

"Singleton," I said, "if you didn't do it—and I want to think you did not—who did?"

He shrugged his shoulders.

"We have women aboard. We ought to know what precautions to take."

"I wasn't the only man on deck that night. Burns was about, and he had a quarrel with the Hansen woman. Jones was at the wheel too. Why don't you lock up Jones?"

"We are all under suspicion," I admitted. "But you had threatened the captain."

"I never threatened the girl or Mr. Vail."

I had no answer to this, and we both fell silent. Singleton was the first to speak.

"How are you going to get back? The men can sail a course, but who is to lay it out, Turner? No Turner ever knew anything about a ship but what it made for him."

"Turner is sick. Look here, Singleton, you want to get back as much as we do or more. Wouldn't you be willing to lay a course if you were taken out once a day? Burns is doing it, but he doesn't pretend to know much about it, and—we have the bodies."

But he turned ugly again and refused to help unless he was given his freedom, and that I knew the crew would not agree to.

"You'll be sick enough before you get back!" he snarled.

With the approach of night our vigilance was doubled. There was no thought of sleep among the crew, and with the twilight there was a distinct return of the terror of the morning.

Gathered around the wheel, the crew listened while Jones read evening prayer. Between the two houses, where the deck was roped off, Miss Lee was alone, pacing back and forward, her head bent, her arms dropped listlessly.

The wind had gone, and the sails hung loose over our heads. I stood by the port rail. Although my back was toward Miss Lee, I was conscious of her every movement, and so I knew when she stooped under the rope and moved lightly toward the starboard rail.

Quick as she was I was quicker. There was still light enough to see her face as she turned when I called to her:

"Miss Lee, you must not leave the rope!"

"Must not?"

"I am sorry to seem arbitrary. It is for your own safety."

I was crossing the deck toward her as I spoke. I knew what she was going to do. I believe when she saw my face that she read my knowledge in it. She turned back from the rail and faced me.

"If you didn't do it, who did?"

"Surely I may go to the rail."

"It would be unwise if for no other reason than discipline."

"Discipline! Are you trying to discipline me?"

"Miss Lee, you do not seem to understand," I said as patiently as I could. "Just now I am in charge of the Ella. You will go back to the part of the deck that is reserved for you or you will go below and stay there."

She flushed with anger and stood there with her head thrown back, eying me with a contempt that cut me to the quick. The next moment she wheeled and, raising her hand, flung toward the rail the key to the storeroom door. I caught her hand—too late.

But fate was on my side after all. As I stood still gripping her wrist the key fell ringing almost at my feet. It had struck one of the lower yard braces. I stooped and, picking it up, pocketed it.

She was dazed, I think. She made no effort to free her arm, but she put her other hand to her heart unexpectedly, and I saw that she was profoundly shocked. I led her unprotesting to a deck chair and put her down in it, and still she had not spoken. She lay back and closed her eyes. She was too strong to faint. She was superbly healthy. But she knew as well as I did what that key meant, and she had delivered it into my hands. As for me, I was driven hard that night, for as I stood there looking down at her she held out her hand to me, palm up.

"Please!" she said pleadingly. "What does it mean to you, Leslie? We were kind to you, weren't we? When you were ill we took you on, my sister and I, and now you hate us. Please!"

"Some one will suffer. Would you have the innocent suffer with the guilty?"

"If they cannot prove it against any one"—

"They may prove it against me."

"You!"

"I was in the after house," I said doggedly. "I was the one to raise an alarm and to find the bodies. You do not know anything about me. I am—Elsa's jailbird!"

"Who told you that?"

"It does not matter—I know it. I told you the truth, Miss Elsa; I came here from the hospital. But I may have to fight for my life. Against the Turner money and influence, I have only—this key. Shall I give it to you?"

I held it out to her on the palm of my hand. It was melodramatic, probably; but I was very young, and by that time wildly in love with her. I thought for a moment, that she would take it; but she only drew a deep breath and pushed my hand away.

"Keep it," she said. "I am ashamed."

We were silent after that, she staring out over the rail at the deepening sky; and, looking at her as one looks at a star, I thought she had forgotten my presence, so long she sat silent. The voices of the men aft died away gradually, as, one by one, they rolled themselves in blankets on the deck, not to sleep, but to rest and watch. The lookout, in his lonely perch high above the deck, called down guardedly to ask for company, and one of the crew went up.

When she turned to me again it was to find my eyes fixed on her.

"You are not getting much chance to rest," she said, with a sigh, and got up. I went with her to the companionway and opened the door. She turned and looked at me.

"Good night."

"Good night, Miss Lee."

"I—I feel very safe with you on guard," she said and held out her hand. I took it in mine, with my heart leaping. It was cold as ice.

That night, at four bells, I mustered the crew as silently as possible around the jolly boat and we lowered it into the water. The possibility of a dead calm had convinced me that the sooner it was done the better.

We dropped the jolly boat astern and made fast the rope. It gave me a curious feeling, that small boat rising and falling behind us, with its dead crew and its rocking light and on its side above the water line the black cross—a curious feeling of pursuit, as if, across the water, they in the boat were following us. And, perhaps because the light varied, sometimes it seemed to drop behind, as if wearying of the chase, and again, in great leaps, to be overtaking us, to be almost upon us.

THE CITY SURVEY.

Quite rapidly the commercial organizations throughout the country are coming to a realization of the need of more accurate study and knowledge of the conditions in their own cities. The time of the holder of the sinecure in commercial bodies is drawing to a close. The day for wild, blatant, irresponsible publicity is passing. The dawn of the new day finds men in every city thinking of something more stable, more constructive than mere advertising of generalities.

Today the commercial executive is studying his city and putting thoughtful moments toward learning the conditions which exist, the promised results being a change in those conditions which are not directly helping the city.

"Survey" has become a very commonly used term in this day. A survey is nothing else than a careful study of the conditions surrounding a phase of a city's life or activity, coupled with figures concerning that life or activity if they may be gathered and brought to bear on the condition, or the condition may be brought to bear on the figures.—Town Development Magazine.

BEAUTIFYING A STREET.

Michigan Avenue of Chicago to Be Widened and Extended.

World-famous thoroughfares—like the Champs Elysees, Paris; Unter den Linden, Berlin; Ringstrasse, Vienna; Piccadilly, London, and Fifth avenue, New York city—do as much perhaps to lure travelers from the uttermost parts of the world to their respective cities as any other single object of interest in them, writes Walter D. Moody, managing director, Chicago plan commission, in the American City.

Perhaps the most spectacular and most needed street improvement ever undertaken in a large city is the Chicago Michigan avenue extension, approved by the people at the Nov. 3 election and which will cost $9,000,000. It is likely that Chicago today in its fascinating mile section of Michigan avenue skirting the lake front and coursing the heart of the city possesses the most splendid business thoroughfare in the world. This is not only true because of the magnificent facade of the palatial buildings, but also on account of the fine perspective afforded by the great open space just opposite in Grant park.

The widening and extension of Michigan avenue is to be on the two level plan, the river to be crossed by a double deck bascule bridge. This mammoth bridge, the first of its kind to be constructed anywhere, will have a span of 210 feet and a width of ninety feet. Light traffic will take the upper deck and heavy traffic the lower.

The two level extension of Michigan avenue is proposed solely for the purpose of separating the north and south from the east and west traffic. North and south approaches to the upper level will be on so slight a grade as to make the elevation almost imperceptible.

The significance of the Michigan avenue improvements in the plan of Chicago is best seen in the fact that it forms the eastern boundary of the "quadrangle" in the plan. This "quadrangle" is bounded on the north by Chicago avenue, on the west by Canal street and on the south by Twelfth street. These four streets are destined to bear the heaviest traffic of any four streets in Chicago. The development of the "quadrangle" will complete the foundation of the street circulatory system in the plan of Chicago. No improvement is needed in Chicago avenue. That thoroughfare is now 100 feet wide.

Laughter.

The man and woman who can laugh together can ride over almost any disillusionment, almost any bitterness. Not a chuckle, not a ripple of merriment, but a great, soul drenching laugh that leaves them limp, wet eyed and helpless, will turn many a domestic tragedy into wholesome farce.—Dramatic.

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL

NEW TYPE OF PUBLIC WATERING STATION.

Late Device For Quenching Thirst of Man and Beast.

Public watering stations are what we in Somerville call our latest devices for the watering of man and beast, writes Frank B. Merrill, water commissioner of Somerville, Mass., in the American City. They supplant the public horse troughs, which are believed to be responsible for the rapidly spreading disease of glanders, and at the same time provide sanitary bubblers for human beings and drinking bowls for dogs.

The keynote of the construction is simplicity. The device may be described as fixing in its essential parts a piece of twelve inch cast iron pipe set in the ground with its bell end upward, the face of the bell being twenty-nine inches above the sidewalk grade and the other end being a sufficient distance below the surface to obtain stability. A one inch service pipe from the street main makes into a two inch riser which comes up through the center of the standard and is held in position by a cast iron strainer resting in the bell of the large pipe. This riser is capped with a side outlet cross standing twelve inches above the top of the bell end of the pipe, which forms a convenient ledge upon which to rest a pail while filling. Into one of the outlets of the cross is inserted a three-quarter inch self closing hose bibb, so that a hose line may be attached if needed for any purpose. Into two other outlets are inserted self closing plain bibbs, and into the outlet facing the sidewalk is fitted a bubbler controlled by a self closing cock. In this condensed space are found, therefore, opportunities at once for three teamsters to draw water and for another one to obtain a refreshing draft for himself.

Attached to the side of the twelve inch standard near the sidewalk grade is a bowl for dogs. This is kept supplied with fresh water by the drip of the bubbler overhead, the water being caught in a funnel set underneath the strainer and conveyed through a small pipe into the dog bowl. The waste from the faucets and a dog bowl is discharged into the interior of the twelve inch standard, which has a cement bottom, at which point an opening allows the waste to escape into a drain pipe leading to the sewer. Under the bubbler is fastened a step at a convenient height for children to reach the water from that fixture.

All the materials used in the construction of this watering station are, with the exception of the castings for the strainer, dog bowl and step, such as are found in every water works shop or supply house. The cost of the outfit made up in a water works shop and ready to set in position will be found to be about $20. To this should be added about as much more for the cost of installing it, with supply and drainage connections, thus providing a pretty complete watering combination at a very moderate outlay of money.

Virginia Municipal League.

Following an address by Richard R. Watrous, secretary of the American Civic association, on city planning at the recent convention of the League of Virginia Municipalities, held in Norfolk, Va., the following resolution was adopted:

"Be it resolved by the League of Virginia Municipalities, That a committee of three members be appointed by the president of the league to prepare and submit to the legislature a bill providing for the appointment by each city and town in the state of a city planning commission to prepare a suitable plan for the symmetrical growth of the city, so as how to meet its future

DRY CLEANING OF STREETS IN PROVIDENCE.

Municipality's Bituminous Pavements Are Not Sprinkled With Water.

The fact that bituminous pavements laid in the city of Providence are not sprinkled with water is a subject that has occasioned frequent comments on the part of visitors to this city who are interested in the maintenance and cleaning of such pavements, says Walter F. Slade, commissioner of public works of Providence, R. I., in the American City. He says:

I will say briefly that we are convinced that bituminous pavements maintained in good repair can be kept in a condition more satisfactory to all classes that travel the streets, both afoot and in vehicles, without rather than by using water for sprinkling.

We keep them clean by the patrol system and reasonably free from dust. We believe that the use of water has an injurious effect upon the durability of the pavement. It emphasizes every slight depression and gathers and retains the fine particles that collect on a street, creating an unsightly appearance and a muddy, slippery condition. This results in the skidding of automobiles and a vast increase in the number of accidents.

By keeping the pavements free from water we escape another prolific source of complaint. Upon the best of pavements there will be depressions sufficient to retain a thin sheet of water. The rubber tires of the swiftly moving auto, and especially the auto truck, will act as a syringe and force the muddy water in a small stream upon the clothing of any one passing along the sidewalk and even across the sidewalk, covering windows and buildings with muddy spots.

That more might be learned about the action of water as affecting the durability of bituminous pavements it would be instructive to bring out the results of laboratory tests and a comparison of the condition of streets laid about the same time where water was used and where not. The whole question is a subject worthy of the earnest consideration of all officers that have charge of the maintenance of bituminous pavements.

THE BILLBOARD MUST GO.

Supreme Court of Illinois Upholds Ordinance Against It.

The law is a progressive science—even if legal procedure lags badly behind with us—and occasionally a court of last resort takes a long, bold step forward that surprises a whole community very pleasantly, says the Chicago Tribune.

Our own supreme court has just treated us to a pleasant surprise in its decision in the Chicago billboard case. It has upheld a city ordinance declared null and void in a lower court—an ordinance which, by giving property owners in residential districts the right to veto ugly, unsightly and offensive billboards by withholding consent, enables them, and consequently the community as a whole, to control the billboard and preserve or promote the amenities of city streets, to cultivate external beauty and symmetry and to force narrow, shortsighted commercialism to reckon with national artistic standards.

A few years ago the courts everywhere treated billboard regulation ordinances with severe and icy legalism. Safety, they held, in billboard construction the cities had a right to demand; art and beauty were strangers to the law, and the citizens who complained of ugliness risked ridicule.

We have moved onward and forward since. The city planning movement, the educational campaign for civic art and the restoration of the landscape and the development of public taste have conspired to raise even the legal standards of municipal outdoor living. The courts are marching, and the choice between wholesome beauty and the beast of towering, screaming, offensive billboardism is getting to be consonant with reason and public interest.

Enviable City Record.

Kokomo, Ind., is proud of the fact that in the last quarter of a century there has been neither a strike nor a lockout among the 7,000 factory employees of the town and that the death rate of the city has never exceeded 18.5 per thousand.

QUALITY OF LIGHTING.

The citizens of one city may demand and their municipal authorities agree to supply a high degree of illumination on congested thoroughfares or a more uniform distribution of lighting units, including the lighting of alleys, while another city which is satisfied with much less illumination may establish a policy to appropriate proportionately more for policing their streets than lighting them. The solutions of this economic problem of the protection to our citizens should be gradually brought about by bettering the quality of lighting in each city, thereby aiding the present police force, rather than by appropriating proportionately more for additional policemen.—American City.

FUN RAYS

By Ray F. Hoppman

THE DOG.

Be he setter, hound or collie, dachshund, bull or St. Bernard, he will stick to you, by golly, for he is a faithful pard. He may be a ragged mongrel or a dog aristocrat, but he never will desert you—paste this proverb in your hat. You may be a reckless outlaw with a price upon your head, you may be a humble beggar, asking alms and begging bread; you may be a lowly toiler, yet a multi-millionnaire couldn't separate him from you by the wideness of a hair. He will love the starving master as he loves the man with dough, for there is no class distinction with the canine crew, you know. You could feed him on a thistle, yet your side he'd not forsake, though a passerby should tempt him with a juicy slice of steak. Should your coin wild be depleted, should your troubles reach the sky, yet you always would be greeted with the lovelight in his eye. He will share your tribulations with the calmness of a sage, he will ever dog your footsteps till he falters from old age. We have lots to learn, my shipmate, from this loyal quadruped, for he's got some things we lack, pard, sticking in his canine head. I have yet to see the canine with a stationary tail—I have yet to find the dog, friend, whose manhood would ever pale. Yes, it's hats off to the canine, be he doubly pedigreed—outside of a hundred trophies, get a dog of lowly breed. If you want the kind of friendship that will never slip a cog, get a wagging tail kyoodle, get a faithful, barking dog.

Opinions

Music

In a typical county of a Middle Western state a careful study has been made of girl life in the open country and the small village. Among the questions asked was this: "What is your favorite accomplishment" Of the 269 girls who replied, 238 named music. The second preference, which was for embroidery, had only nine votes in its favor.

As the love of music is not exceptionally great in that particular neighborhood, what a light the answers throw on the puzzling problem how to create an acceptable social life for young people in the country!

The old-fashioned singing school, so dear to the hearts of our country grandparents, should be revived. It might be difficult to get again the old fashioned singing master, but it is quite possiblee to form a singing club, and to select from the neighborhood the person who has had the best training for musical leadership. If no fitting person can be found, some one from a near-by own could be employed. Much has been done in some places through thec hurch choir. In one case a minister made a notable success. He gathered the young people from the farms into his choir, and trained them so well that not only were they a source of joy to their own community, but they were invited to sing at festivals all over the state. He revived the beautiful old idea of the Easter serenade, and also brought music and cheer to the old and the "sut-ins" through his young people's choir.

The boys' band and the school orchestra can also be used to advantage in country regions. One successful country pastor in North Dakota reached some very rough boys and young men in his community through a band, which had as soothing an influence upon their turbulent spirits as the strains of David's harp had upon Saul.

Not only does music meet the social need of young people, but the habit of singing together fosters the spirit of co-operation. Professor Carver of Harvard has called attention to that fact. In speaking of the improved rural life in Denmark he says: "Every student who is intimately acquainted with the history of the movement agrees that the popular recreations and festivities have been powerful aids in creating this spirit; and that the popular songs and them together on all occasions, have given to these recreations and festivities a patriotic and religious character that is to be found nowhere else to-day on so large a scale."

We need just that spirit in our own country.—Youth's Companion.

TROLLEY CAR NUISANCES

Street railway officials in many of the large cities of the country have done good work in supressing the economical men who make a practice of carrying cigar or cigarette stumps into their cars, or who carelessly expectorate right and left, irregardless of all ancient and modern teachings for cleanliness.

There are other trolley car nuisances, but it is doubtful whether there can be found anywhere the equal of the economical saver or the reckless spitter. The stump savers' offense is the more offensive in the trolley cars wherein are not provided compartments for the convenience of smokers. Women and children are made to endure the vilest of odors, and men hardened in the use of the weed, but who for the sake of sensitive passengers refrain from dragging into cars the cigar or cigarette stump, sometimes quail at the fumes that arise from the stump carried by the thoughtless saver.

Smoking compartments are sources of joy to the minds of smokers only. They are nuisances extremely to passengers who by reason of having paid their fares are entitled accordingly to some sort of protection by the railroad company. This protection should come from the men employed by the company to collect fares and otherwise look after valuable property, but if in their indifference to the rights of passengers having keen senses of smell they fail to forbid the carrying of stumps into cars, or they fail to keep closed the door dividing the smoking compartment from the other portion of the car, the travelling public is nevertheless entitled to protection, and no one should hesitate to report the offense to headquarters.

Spitters anywhere and everywhere are nuisances, even more so than the economical stump saver. Indeed, they are worse than nuisances, health departments everywhere according them that distinction. Various means may be employed to escape obnoxious odors arising from the stump savers' economical streak. One may leave the car, or he may admit through a raised window enough fresh air to kill off bad odors, but how is one to escape from the disgusting sights left between the seats of trolley cars by the fellow who disregards the admonishing signs and injunctions of the corporation owning the car or the people whose servants are permitted to use franchises for profit.

It is very evident to the average trolley car rider in these days that company employes are needful of a little training that would embrace the rules of common decency and simple hygiene, and it is up to the railroad companies to give the requisite training. If they fail it is then up to the public to make the biggest kind of a noise.

ON EATING TOO MUCH

"Anyone can live on twenty-five cents a day," declares an out-of-doors woman, whose chief occupation is climbing mountains for fun. "I drink a cup of coffee with condensed milk for breakfast, skip lunch usually and at dinner cook myself a little meal of omelet, shredded codfish and sometimes a bit of chop."

One does not question this woman's memory or dispute her claim. But suppose some one who dotes on a certain dish she detests should prescribe it for her in future? Telling me how much I should eat is often as impertinent as telling me what I should like to eat.

Economy is a fine thing. But the races which excel in life are not those which strive to see how little they can subsist on. "Creating a demand" is one of the fine arts of modern business. Fancy the crash in the business world that would come if people should begin living on twenty-five cents a day!

But they will not. An old story will illustrate. Uncle Mose set out to train his mule to live on less oats. He held out one quart a day. Then he held out two quarts, substituting a few wood shavings. So it went for a time. "An' jes' when I had that mule broke in to pure excelsior, an' likin' it, she ups and dies on me."—The Bulletin.

Great Britain Yields on the Blockade Issue

In the two notes which it has just addressed to the United States the British government has made a notable concession to neutral opinion. It has virtually admitted that American representations in regard to the recent Order in Council were fully justified. That order undoubtedly outlined a course of action which, to use out State Department's phrase, was "previously unknown to international law."

An interdiction of German commerce was proclaimed, which amounted to a blockade, but was not called a blockade. It therefore left neutrals puzzled as to their status under it and as to the extent of its conflict with the established law of nations. That conflict might not have worked very much to the practical disadvantage of neutrals. Great Britain offered them easier conditions than could have been offered under the rules of the old-fashioned blockade. But the very irregularity and novelty of the British procedure made it a grave menace to the existing structure of neutral rights.

Now Great Britain has conceded the propriety of making her measure of reprisel against Germany conform more closely to international usage and precedent. She is willing to admit that she is establishing a formal blockade. In the not rejecting the suggestion of the United States that some compromise might be reached with Germany as to the conduct of war at sea. Sir Edward Grey said: "The British fleet has instituted a blockade, effectively controlling by cruiser 'cordon' all passage to and from Germany by sea." In the note of the same date, answering this country's inquiries as to the scope of the Order in Council, he said that the latter's object, "succictly stater, is to establish a blockade to prevent vessels carring goods for or coming from Germany."

These admissions will make it much easier for neutrals to adjust themselves to the new situation. No one can deny Great Britain's right to blockade German ports. So long as the responsibility of maintaining an actual blockade is assumed, it is of minor consequence just how the cordon of blockading vessels is drawn. The United States blockaded the ports of the Confederacy successfully without keeping vessels massed continuously at all the points of ingress and egress along the South's coast line. General conditions of warfare at sea must be taken into account in judging the effectiveness of a modern blockade. It will hardly be disputed that Great Britain, with the help of France, can actually seal up German ports, since neutral trade with these ports has been possible for some months past only with the tacit consent of the Allies.

This country will freely acknowledge the validity of a formal allied blockade. We know where we stand on that proposition, having ourselves carried through the most difficult blockade in history. We are willing to live up to our own record from 1861 to 1865. The main point of formal blockade having been conceded, we can readily harmonize our rights with the rights of the belligerents. All that we can ask is that theb lockade shall be officially acknowledged to be what it is, that its area shall be a little more clearly defined, and that a similar blockade shall be declared against Austri-Hungary and Turkey, if the right to seize neutral vessels carrying enemy cargo of a non-contraband nature is also to be asserted in the Mediterranean.—Tribune, N. Y.

A Stormy Outlook

Perhaps it were just as well to give up being optimistic in so far as the Thaw case is concerned. Anybody who is very young and refrains from chewin gtobacco and smoking cigarettes may live to see the final act, but it must be confessed that the thing has a rather blizzardy outlook for grandpap. Foolishly we thought that the conspiracy trial might be the beginning of the end. Hopefully we awaited the restful surcease, but we know now that the case will continue to come around periodically like the phases of the moon and groundhog as long as the setting sun reflects rays of gold from the direction of Pittsburgh.—Evening Telegraph.

Whitman Stands Well

The metropolitan press has become busy telling Governor Whitman how to govern as they used to tell Governor Hughes. But Governor Whitman, like Governor Hughes, proceeds quietly on his way, performing the duties of his office without ostentation or loud claims to the possession of superior wisdom, but just doing the best he knows how as Lincoln said his purpose was when he had to answer his critics. Lincoln stands pretty well now; Governor Hughes stands pretty well. Governor Whitman, pursuing the same track, is bound to come out ahead in the end.—Times, Watertown.

MEN AND PIGMIES

If we await the time when we will not be held up to ridicule before attempting to accomplish a thing worth while, then nothing will ever be done. There would be no books, no telephones, no dramas. Yet originality must always pay the penalty of being criticized, the penalty of being called insincere, the penalty of living under the accusation of having borrowed your ideas or of having stolen your material.

Shakespeare is accused of having stolen his plays—from whom, the accusers are not able to say; but the fact stands, there has been but one Shakespeare, but one Emerson, but one Confucius—but there have been millions of people to criticize, deride and accuse these men.

If you start out to accomplish some particular thing in life, there is always some one on your trail, some one who despises success, some one who envies and despises all good, who can see nothing in other men but that which he finds in himself. A man may spend a lifetime in the formation of character, in formulating the highest principle, in devolping the best possible philosophy of life, yet all these things will be regarded as trash by those who are not in sympathy with you and who do not understand.

To some men there is no virtue, no morality, no good, no purpose of high degree, and this is the type of man who sets out to bring all others down to his kind. Start out along a different path to let your natural, healthy desires lead you on to something higher and better, and the pygmies round about you will come to the roadside and attempt to call you back again—to remain a pygmy. They flatter you; they offer you sweetmeats and what not, that they may destroy you, that they may kill your initiative.

If, in your persistency, you see ahead, you are pursued with jeers, mockery and derision. Your "idea is old," your "thoughts are borrowed," your "purpose is not high," you are "not sincere," you do not "practice what you preach," your "thoughts and ideas are stolen from other men"—all the old familiar sayings, the trade accusations of gossipers, scandalmongers and bearers of empty tales.

The fortunate part of it all is that this criticism, this derision, this mockery, this questioning of sincerity of purpose are the things that create strength and form character in the man who is derided and criticized. It teaches him to stand alone, and for this reason is the very source of strength. It assists him in the formation of character; it assists him to extend his wires of originality; it assists him to maintain an independent viewpoint of life; it assists him to understand that law of nature that commands an eagle to tear her nest of young ones from the crags and compel them to rely upon their own strength that they may learn to fly.

And the moral is—if you would do something worth while, if you would give free rein to the divine in your, if you would use your moments and hours to some great purpose, be about your work and be on your way. If you hesitate, there are those who will quickly come to you that they may lull you back to the sleep of indifference. If you go on, you will build your strength, you will formulate character and find happiness out of the very plans others have made to pull you down.

Opinions

Bull Moose Crowding In

Progressive leaders are rushing in such numbers to the Republican standard that some of the G. O. P. leaders fear they will be crowded out. It wouldn't be bad for the old party if it were to exchange some of its lights which no longer shine brightly for virile and wholesome Progressives. Not all Bull Moose are included in the virile and wholesome list, but there are some brethren who would materially help the Republican party. It is given out that the colonel himself is ready to come back. At once the question of where he will sit comes up and not a few want him placed where the humble pie will reach him. It is foolish to try to locate T. R. It matters not where he starts at the table, he will move up with rapidity. He cannot have the seat of honor in 1916, but he will do such good work for the cause that year that the masses will favor his sitting close to the seat of honor. It isn't altogether that the colonel is so remarkable, but rather that the old party leaders have become enervated. When it comes to candidates T. R. is out of the question, but as the leader of a campaign he is in a class by himself.—Watertown Standard.

Japan as a Bully

Japan is playing the part of the bully. She is taking advantage of the war to press China almost to a point of breaking. The Mikado has now advanced the so-called negotiations so China must either back down or go to war. She cannot go to war and the inference is therefore that she must back down.

ily 21 demands were made by Japan. There seems to be an agreement that some of the old claims were just, but that made of the others were mere encroachments. Among the most important of these were demands that Japanese officials should be placed in the financial, army and navy administrations of China; that Japan be given extraordinary rights in the great Hanyang iron works, the Tayeh mines and the Ping Siang collieries; that immigrants from Japan be permitted to settle in Manchuria, to the exclusion of other foreigners; that certain portions of the Chinese coast be defined as areas for Japanese immigration; that the operation of certain railroads be turned over to Japanese officials and that concessions for other railroads be given to Japan.

Japan has now made two more demands upon China. First, that Japanese officials be permitted to share in the customs administration, which is now almost wholly in the hands of British officials, and second, that Japan be given a share in the administration of the salt revenues, one of the big sources of income. The customs and salt revenues are pledged for the payment of loans obtained from British and other foreign bankers, and are administered by British officials with a view to safeguarding these loans.

China is in no condition to fight. The new republic is weak. There has been dissension at home. She was probably in better condition to go to war in 1894 than she is at present and history tells the termination of that conflict with Japan. Charges are made that the Chinese government is honeycombed with graft, and it is a fact that great difficulty was experienced in floating the last loan of about $60,000,000.

Americans regret to see England playing the game which she obviously is engaged in. Great Britain is unquestionably giving her consent to the aggressions of Japan. The diplomats of the Mikado are keen enough to realize that the present is a most opportune time to press forward her claims.

The question which most interests Americans is, What will the United States do? In the light of the policy of integrity insisted on by John Hay fifteen years ago it is difficult to see how Mr. Bryan can pass the situation by entirely. He will probably try to do so.—The News.

The Yellow Peril in Spelling

A Japanese girl in Oregon, 14 years old, defeated all comers from five school districts in a spelling bee, covering 108 pages of the textbook. The literary acquisitiveness of the folk of Nippon rivals their speedy assimilation of the applied sciences, and the efforts of the society that has been founded for the Romanization of the Japanese alphabet and the displacement of the ancient Chinese characters are typical of an intellectual nimbleness that finds itself quite at home in elaborate collocations of syllables such as the Germans love to devise. There is more than a modicum of earnest in the jesting lines of an American bard:

There was an old man of Japan
Whose name upon Friday began,
It lasted till Monday
Not stopping on Sunday,
And sounded like stones in a can.

It is mortifying to the pursuance of our native-born boys and girls in their mother tongue to have little Fuvieko Fukai beat them at their own language game. If they follow the generous example of some of their elders of the Pacific slope they will proceed to ostracise her from participation in their various childish pursuits. Surely there ought to be some penalty for such precocious audacity and a retentive memory that can take in a page at a glance and hold it ever thereafter. That is why it is dangerous to admit little polite Japenes gentlemen to our dockyards and arsenals. They have the incorrigible habit of remembering what they see, and applying it to their own use.—Public Ledger.

IT'S HIGH TIME

With the development of "pocketbook patriotism" this land will move forward as it hasn't moved since the day the prow of the Mayflower touched its rocky shore. It will mean that we are establishing ourselves on a foundation so firm that nothing but a satactysm of nature can hurt us. It will mean peace.

The time has come and is here now to build up a racial pride in our own home products and the place to start is at home.

Men who are engaged in the advertising business are the pioneers, the hewers, the sappers of business. Broadly speaking business cannot exist without advertising.

As Gladstone said, "The mint is the only business that can make money without advertising."

Recently James Keeley, editor of the Chicago Herald, and Louis Wiley, business manager of the New York Times, gave expression to the foregoing phases in a talk on "America's Opportunity." Nations, communities and individuals are all advertisers. Communities that grow are inventive, alert, pushing and shrewd, and advertising is their medium of acquisition. Loyalty to home markets is the second cause for success. A country without genuine enthusiasm for pride in its own products is not alive as it should be, and a community without local pride is a dead one.

ELECTIONS TOO COSTLY

The New York Times has been trying to collect for the first time accurate statistics regarding the total cost, both to candidates and the public, of an average election in this State. Figures that it publishes, although it admits that it was found impossible to get at them accurately, even by going to the election officials of every county in the State, and to the State officials in Albany, show clearly that an overhauling of election machinery is needed badly. An amazingly large percentage of the candidates completely ignored the law requiring them to file statements of their expenditures with the local boards and no effective effort was made by the officials to force them to comply with the law unless opponents happened to raise inquiries regarding their expenses. Township officials were not required to report their expenses because they were "township charges." Nowhere could an interested voter find more than fragmentary details of the public or private expense, much less an accurate report of how the moneys were expended.

From what could be learned of the cost, too, it appeared that the overhead charge of a New York election was disproportionately large. For every dollar spent by candidates, campaign, State and county committees, the public spent $1.44. Eugene M. Travis, the State controller, reported that a reorganization of the State's election machinery would save $250,000 annually, and that "thousands of dollars are wasted annually in the unnecessary compilation of mistakes." Generous remuneration was given employes to ascertain how many times inspectors failed to write a man's name in full, he said, others to tabulate the errors, and added: "It is not conceivable that such work can serve any other purpose than to keep permanently on the payrolls scores of men who can only be employed with profit to the State temporarily."

The 2031 election districts in Greater New York cost the taxpayers $375.13 apiece for election day and the registration days for their formidable array of inspectors, ballot and poll clerks, and pro rata share of printing and other expenses. It is said that fully half of the temporary employes in these polling places could be done away with. Some of them receive $12 a day. It is also said that a great number of the permanent clerks and employes could be done away with. Each election district is supposed to include about 400 voters. "This casts," says the Times, "some light on one of the extra expense burdens the taxpayer would have to bear if woman suffrage were adopted in New York. The suggestion that the Governor appoint a commission to investigate the matter at first hand, confer with the heads of the various boards now established, and then submit a bill for genuine simplification and reform of the election machinery may be a good one; at any rate, it is obvious that some practicable method of revising the annual cost to the taxpayer, and revising it downward, and of gathering election statistics where they would be available for scrutiny by the public, should be adopted. —Dispatch, Utica.

WHAT IS ELECTRICITY?

It Seems to Be an Effect Produced by Energy on Matter.

It is a curious fact that although evidence of electricity in a primitive way was observed as long ago as the sixth century B. C. and its manifestation has become one of the greatest factors in our modern civilization, no one knows just what it is.

At different times it has been thought to be a form of matter, a thin, weightless fluid, a kind of force, a variety of motion and a disturbance in the ether—which is supposed to fill all space, including pores in most solid metals. Electricity is not something created by man. He has simply discovered ways of turning its manifestations to practical account.

From the time that Thales observed, centuries before the Christian era, that amber, after being rubbed by silk, had the property of attracting light bodies like bits of paper, discoveries of electric phenomena were made from time to time, but they were detached from a realization of the great possibilities brought to light in recent years.

Electricity becomes evident when rendered active by some molecular disturbance, such as friction, rupture or chemical action. Scientists today regard it as neither energy nor matter, but, like heat, light and sound, it is an effect produced by energy on matter.

It has been discovered that electricity is a self existent property, by which we are everywhere surrounded, and human as well as inanimate bodies can be charged with it. From this we can understand that many more remarkable discoveries of its application will be made.—Rocky Mountain News.

ARCTIC FROST BITES.

And the Popular Error That Rubbing With Snow Helps Them.

The idea that when your face or any other part of your body begins to freeze you must thaw it out with snow is declared to be a superstition by Vilhjalmur Stefansson. Few things could be more absurd, he says, and yet this is a superstition that has been carried with many an arctic explorer through long experience in the north. Tales are told of how even the application of snow failed to relieve the freezing, and these are taken as indications of the severity of the case instead of proof that, as a matter of fact, the snow only assists the freezing process. Any high school pupil, Stefansson says, could tell us offhand what would happen if liquid air were applied to a man's cheek or nose. Of course the part would freeze instantly. Snow has the same though less rapid effect.

The whole secret of dealing with frost bites of the face in arctic travel, he says, is to keep the hands warm and to run the warm hand over the face every few minutes to see if any part of it is frozen. Usually, also, one can keep oneself fairly well informed about the condition of one's face by wrinkling it and "making faces." If a spot of skin or cheek the size of a twenty-five cent piece becomes stiff one can always detect it by making a grimace. Then all one has to do is to take one's warm hand out of one's mitten and press it to the frozen spot for a moment until the whiteness and stiffness are gone.—Indianapolis News.

His Blasted Life.

John Grimes, a noted skinflint, residing in a rural district, became engaged to a lady of some means who chanced to be visiting in the neighborhood during the summer. Ascertaining his true character as the weeks passed, she told him all was over between them, whereupon Grimes threatened to sue for breach of promise. Rather than incur publicity and notoriety his former sweetheart, through her attorney, offered to settle for $200. "Two hundred!" shrieked Grimes melodramatically. "Two hundred dollars for ruined hopes, a blasted life! Never, never!" "How much do you think would be about right?" asked the attorney. "Make it three hundred and it's a bargain," declared Grimes instantly.—Argonaut.

"Then crawl on tae my back," said Sandy, "and I'll carry ye in."

"Nae danger, fear," exclaimed Jock; "the Victoria cross for you and anither bullet for me."—Boston Transcript.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

In place of the hackneyed "Hello" the up-to-date suffragist when she takes down the telephone receiver from now on, till victory is won, will say "Votes for Women." The chief obstacles to woman suffrage is the fact that it is a new idea. Hence it is a vital part of the suffrage campaign to endlessly bombard the eye and the ear of the people with that crisp slogan "Votes for Women."

* * *

Not only the General Federation of Women's Club in this country but the State Federations in twenty-six of our commonwealths have asked for suffrage. This is clearly a majority of representative women. For the man who has been waiting to vote for woman suffrage when a majority of women ask for it, the time is ripe.

* * *

The Boston Globe cites the fact that every home in Kansas has a telephone; every seventh home a motor car; and the state a per capita wealth of 1600, and concludes that woman suffrage as a disturber of prosperity is but an imaginary bogie put up by anti- suffragists to scare the timid.

* * *

The women of Colony, Kansas, have put a full ticket into the field for city offices. Mrs. W. E. Payton, one of the editors of the Colony Free Press is the candidate for Mayor.

"The woman's ticket is the result of the failure of men to do the things that the women consider vital to families and children," said Mrs. Myers, one of the candidates for the City Council.

"I don't know whether the women can run the town or not," said County Commissioner Paul, "but they can't do worse than the men have done."

* * *

It was a woman out of the West, Mrs. C. F. Edson, member of the California Industrial Welfare Commssion, who not only rebutted but ridiculed the arguments against minimum wage legislation advanced at a recent meeting of the National Civic Federation in New York city.

In spite of her array of facts and figures showing the successful operation of the minimum wage in western states, the "doubting Thomases" from the East still insisted that it was a dangerous power to put into the hands of the legislature.

Then it was that she twitted them with their fear of their lawmakers and said, "In the West we own our government; and, if legislators betray the people, the people call them to account in short order."

It was not a suffrage meeting and woman suffrage was not on the program, but the West where "we own our government" is equal suffrage territory and the East where men are more afraid of their government than of industrial injustice is where men vote alone.

About Sports Generally

By FRANK G. MENKE

Playing jokes on the players of other clubs or on the newspaper men is one of the real pleasures in life for the major league ball players.

Last summer one of the clubs in the Federal League sent a telegram to Ed. G. Barrows, president of the International League. The telegram asked Barrows if it was true that his league was thinking of going out of business. The players signed the name of one of the newspaper correspondents to the telegram and asked Barrows to "answer by telegraph collect."

Barrows answered—and at length. He denied the "report" most emphatically. The telegram was handed to the newspaper man and when he saw the contents of the telegram and noticed that the collect charges were something like $2 he balked on payment. He figured it out at once that he had been jobbed.

"I refuse to pay for this telegram," he said to the messenger. The messenger refused to take back the telegram because it had been opened. The argument finally was settld by the ball players clipping in about 10 cents each and paying for the telegram.

Birmingham's Goat Getters

Last summer when Joe Birmingham's Naps were trying to push themselves out of the American League. Joe was made the particular target for the jokers with the telegram mania. Never did a week go by without Joe getting at least a pair of telegrams. Every one was of the collect nature and each was about as long as the jokins ball players could make them. When the Naps dropped something like 10 straight the jokers were happiest. After each successive defeat, the jokers would send Joe a new and longer telegram. Each was worded something like this.

"Dropped another, eh, Joe; Well, keep it up, old kid. That gang of yours certainly is making a record. Every one of us believes that you'll establish a new record for losses. That team of your is a world beater when it comes to losing. But don't despair, Joe. Someday you may win. Everything is possible in this life."

Rookies are Targets

The rookies are also particular targets for the veteran players. One trick that was played on James Conley, the Baltimore Federal pitching phenom, gained for him the name of "Snipe."

When Conley joined the Terrapins last spring in the training camp the players took him "snipe hunting." The trick is old and hoary, but Conley didn't know anything about it. Theg ang took Conley 10 miles into the country in an automobile. Then they stationed him in a lonely valley with a lantern and a bag.

"Hold the bag until we go and round up some snipe" they told Conley. "When we find some we'll chase them right to you. Catch them in the bag."

The other players disappeared into the darkness, went up the road, got into the automobile and sped back to the hotel arriving there at midnight.

"Where have you been?" asked Manager Otto Knabe.

"We took Conley snipe hunting."

Knabe ordered his players to go back and get Conley. They refused. Then Knabe hired a machine and after a two-hour search found Conley walking up a lonely road carrying his lantern. It was then close to 4 a. m. Conley had tired of waiting for the snipes to run into his bag and was starting back for the hotel afoot—a 10-mile jaunt.

"DRY" LAWS CUT NATIONAL INCOME

Spread of Temperance Movement Shown by Statistics.

TAXES DECREASE $2,000,000

Prohibition in Nine More States Next Year to Further Reduce the Revenue, Officials at Work Devising New Taxation System—Both "Wets" and "Drys" Use Figures as Arguments.

Washington.—The increase in prohibition territory and in the number of local option zones has caused a reduction this year of $2,000,000 in the federal government's income from taxes on alcoholic beverages. Nine states are to adopt prohibition next year, and officials say that the situation soon may cause the federal government to revamp its taxation laws and devise a new system of taxation to take the place of the diminishing returns from liquor sources.

The belief exists that the 80 per cent of the government's income from the tax on alcoholic liquors will be reduced to 25 per cent in the next two years, due to the spread and the enforcement of prohibition and local option laws.

The problem, which involves a radical change in the system of taxation, in existence practically since the foundation of the government itself, is being studied by students of legislation. In the opinion of legislators it is necessary to approach the question with great care and find means of raising money for the federal government in place of the lost internal revenue income without placing the burden directly on the people.

Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Peters in discussing the situation said:

"The revenues from whisky and alcoholic beverages have shrunk considerably over $2,000,000 a year, and this unquestionably is due to the spread of the temperance movement, and we are preparing to see it continue to diminish from this cause."

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY A. J. PETERS.

The last part of Mr. Peters' statement is based on the fact that nine states from which the federal government derives a total revenue of over $5,000,000 on spirits and liquors will be "dry" next year. These states and the amounts received from them by the federal treasury are as follows:

	Distilled Spirits.	Fermented Liquors.
Alabama	$168,081.52	$49,186.32
Arkansas	55,552.83	17,388.46
Colorado	185,122.14	288,288.90
Idaho	13,788.54	25,662.66
Oregon	281,040.03	227,494.97
Virginia	1,758,253.25	288,287.14
Washington	288,769.64	284,886.97
Iowa	58,105.96	136,288.66
Arizona	21,155.90	28,286.83
Totals	$2,885,151.80	$2,493,672.94

Total liquor revenue, $5,367,886.74.

The government revenues from customs last year were $302,250,016,351, while the taxes on distilled spirits and fermented liquors amounted to $226,356,814.74.

When the Hobson resolution, proposing a constitutional amendment for nation wide prohibition, was under discussion in the house of representatives at the last session of congress the liquor interests laid particular stress on the amount of money that would be lost to the federal government if the tax on liquors was eliminated. Secretary of State Bryan is authority for the statement that about $2,500,000,000, or approximately four times the cost of the Panama canal, is expended annually in the United States for liquor.

Treasury officials say this enormous drink bill is dwindling rapidly. The largest [illegible] producing states, with their [illegible] contributions to the federal [illegible] are as follows:

Illinois, [illegible],000; Kentucky, $31,870,000; [illegible] $28,100,000; New York, $24,900,000; Pennsylvania, $17,200,000; Ohio, $15,700,000; Wisconsin, $8,200,000; California, $7,900,000; Maryland, $5,[illegible],000; Missouri, $5,100,000; Massachusetts, $4,800,000; Louisiana, $3,700,000; Michigan, $3,800,000; New Jersey, $3,800,000; Nebraska, $2,800,000; Virginia, $2,000,000; Minnesota, $1,900,000.

POLAND'S TRAGEDY TOLD BY PIANIST

Paderewski Says Poles Are Made to Kill Poles.

SUFFER MANY HARDSHIPS.

Asserts That His Fellow Countrymen Are the Only Ones Who Know the Utmost Depths of What This War Really Means—Brother Fights Brother and They Destroy Their Own Country.

London.—The visit to London of Ignace Paderewski on behalf of the suffering Poles has already resulted in the formation of a great relief committee. Among the members of the committee are Premier Asquith, ex-Premier Balfour, Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd-George, Cardinal Bourne, Archbishop of Westminster; Lady Randolph Churchill, Admiral Lord Charles Beresford (retired), and the Russian and French ambassadors. The following article was written by the great pianist:

"Is it the death agony or only the birth pangs? is the question which every Pole throughout the world is asking himself as tragedy follows tragedy in the long martyrdom of our beloved nation. You have only heard the deaths of Belgium, but I tell you they are as nothing compared with what has happened in Poland.

"The scene of operations in Poland is seven times larger than that of Belgium, and she has had to endure seven times the torture. Remember, the battle of Europe is being fought in the east, not in the west, and while the tide of battle has reached a sort of ebb along the trenches about the frontiers of Alsace and Flanders, the great waves roll backward and forward from Germany to Russia and break always on Poland. Our country, in fact, is just as Belgium was called—the cockpit of Europe—and it may now be called the battlefield of the world, if not of civilization.

"It is only perhaps we Poles who have known to its utmost depths what this war has really meant. It is not only that there are 10,000,000 human beings on the verge of starvation, nay, actually perishing; there is worse than that. Remember that both Belgium and Poland are still under the yoke. The Russians, it is true, occupy some 15,000 miles of our country, but this is really nothing, for the Germans occupy five-sixths of it, and the desolation passes all comprehension.

"As to actual battles, I can hardly speak of them. It is torture even to think of them. Only consider! Our one nation is divided, as it were, into three sections, which are thrust each against the others to work out their own destruction. It is parricide! It is fratricide, nay, suicide! Compulsory suicide! That is what it is.

"Listen to what it means to us all: I was told by a gentleman from Austria that an army doctor, a Pole by birth, who was deputed to go over the battlefields and verify identification marks on the dead bodies, found among the 14,000 dead hardly any but Polish names. He looked in vain for any others, and in the end went mad with horror at the thought of it.

"Again, in the fierce battle in Galicia during an interval which had been agreed upon by both sides as a momentary armistice to bury their dead and attend to their wounded, the doctors from either side first of all advanced and exchanged cards. Every slip of pasteboard bore a Polish name, while the feeling that ran silently through each breast was the same. Can Poland survive? Is it the death agony or is it but the the birth-pangs? Today who knows? I only know the present, and unless that present is saved the future is lost."

Germany's Defense a Secret.

Washington.—An officer of an American vessel reports that before entering Bremerhaven seventy Germans took his ship, shut the officers and crew in below with closed ports and kept them that way until the ship was docked. It was to prevent foreigners learning anything of the coast defenses.

GEORGIA MOONSHINER ON HIS WAY TO JAIL

Pleads Guilty Each Year, but Allowed to Make a Crop.

Savannah, Ga.—The time is at hand for the annual pilgrimage of the Georgia moonshiner. Today he is up in the hills, tomorrow he will be tried and sentenced, the day after he will be planting his crop in the hills again, the next, setting out for the county jail to serve his sentence.

"'Bout time for co't, M'ria," he will say to his wife. "Guess I'll be amblin'. Don't forgit to git out them [illegible]-shares, an' if any revenoos come a-lookin' keep 'em off the trail to the still."

No deputy manacles his wrists; no prison guard comes for him. But the old man has received the summons of the United States court to appear and answer to a charge of violating the federal law against the illicit manufacture and sale of liquor.

And so the old man shoulders his gun and sets out from his cabin in the hills and glimps down the mountainside to the railroad station twenty miles away. Next week he gets up before Judge William T. Newman of Atlanta or Judge Emory Speer of Savannah and pleads guilty.

"Six months," says the judge.

The old man sighs and remarks, "I'd like mighty well ter go back an' make a crop, jidge."

The judge knows that up in the hills the old woman and the old man's family of sturdy mountain lads and lassies are dependent on the "crap" for a living through next winter. So he says, "Go back and make your crop and report to the jail on Sept. 1."

The old man strides to the railroad station, catches the first train for home and tramps the twenty miles up into the hills again.

Winter will be breaking in the hills, and for weeks to come he will be busy planting the crop of corn. Day after day he will clamber up the rugged path, hitch the gray mule to the plow and turn the furrows of his little patch.

One day he looks into the almanac and says to his wife:

"Me an' th' boys are off to jail tomorrow."

The next day he swings down the trail to the railroad station twenty miles away. As his head drops below the brink of the path he calls back:

"See yer in ther spring, ol' woman!"

And the next week he is swapping cut plug with the deputy at the jail, having reported to the turnkey's office, alone and unofficered.

And next spring?

Why, he will be back in the hills again, making his "crap" and manufacturing moonshine whisky on the side.

Corporal Punishment.

Corporal punishment formerly had a wider significance than mere whipping. Henry de Bracton, chief justiciary of England in the reign of Henry III., divided corporal punishment into two kinds, those inflicted with and without torture. The stocks and the pillory would rank as corporal punishment; also mutilations and other grim tortures when imposed not to extort confessions, but as penalties, and the branding in the hand for felony, which was not abolished until George III.'s time.

Harassing Boys' Shoes.

"If you rub hardening oil into boys' shoes when you buy them," says a mother, "it makes them last twice as long, and renders them absolutely waterproof." You can make this hardening oil yourself. Put half an ounce of beeswax and half a pint of boiled linseed oil in a jar. Heat it over the stove till the wax dissolves. Let it cool, then stir up and apply to the soles of the boots with a brush. Put the boots on trees till the next morning, when they will be quite dry and ready to wear.

Some Forms of Rheumatism Curable

Rheumatism is a disease characterized by pains in the joints and in the muscles. The most common forms are: Acute and Chronic Rheumatism, Rheumatic Headaches, Sciatic Rheumatism and Lumbago. All of these types can be helped absolutely by applying some good liniment that penetrates. An application of Sloan's liniment two or three times a day to the affected part will give instant relief. Sloan's Liniment is good for pain, and especially Rheumatic Pain, because it penetrates to the seat of the trouble, soothes the afflicted part and draws the pain. "Sloan's Liniment is all medicine." Get a 25c bottle now. Keep it handy in case of emergency.

Know Paint

There's a paint-education in this advertisement.

Buy by the job, not gallon. Buy by the paint put-on; that's the job.

The price of paint is so much a gallon; that can't be helped, but amounts to nothing.

The price of painting is so much a day; that can't be helped, but amounts to nothing.

Put them together. How can you do it? You've got to or lose perhaps half of your money.

Devoe, 10 gallons enough for the average job; an average paint, 15. Now reckon your costs. Count labor a day for a gallon. Devoe 10 days; the other 15.

Devoe about $50; the average paint about $70 or $80; the dearer the labor the bigger the difference, always that way.

But that's for the job. How long is it going to last? One twice as long as the other.

PROTECTING MILK FROM GERM CONTAMINATION

No matter how well the milk has been handled up to the time of its delivery to the consumer, it cannot be expected to keep well if it is carelessly treated thereafter. Milk should be kept in perfectly clean vessels and should be loosely, not tightly, covered, in order that there may be access of air to it, since the absence of fresh air favors the growth of certain putrefactive organisms. The entirely open vessel is only allowable in perfectly clean surroundings, not only free from dust, but with no strong flavoring substance near from which orders could be absorbed.

Since dust plants cause putrefaction all exposed food should be covered to keep out dust. Some foods grow bitter, some sour, some odorous and some rancid, and in most of these cases when food spoils it is due to the growth on or in the substance itself of the litttle plants which have been carried to it through ordinary dust. Certain dust plants like the sugar of milk and while feeding on it change a part of it into lactic acid, which coagulates the casein of the milk, causing it to form in loose, light flakes, such as we see in ordinary sour milk.

Millions of Bacteria in Glass of Milk

The cleaner the milk the longer it will keep sweet, for bacteria are thickest where there are dirt and decay. Its opaqueness hides much of the solid dit, which not only seeds it with bacteria, but adds certain soluble matters. Too often the dirty character of the milk is known only by sight of the actual dirt at the bottom of the empty glass. And a glass of ordinary unclean milk contains millions of bacteria, which, although harmless to a vigorous adult, are the cause, direct and indirect, of the death of thousands of young children annually. Therefore we should keep in mind that dust contains living plants which, when they find food in a moist, warm place, grow and multiply.

If the housewife remembers that everything is dusty, that dust means dust plants, that dust plants mean the germ of fermentation and putrefaction or "spoiling," that nothing short of sterilization will insure indefinite keeping, she will know with what she is dealing, and may be able to act intelligently.

All flies, those horrible carriers of disease, should be kept away from milk and the vessels in which it is stored. And milk should never be left exposed in the kitchen or pantry during sweeping, because the moulds and bacteria in the dust will settle on it. Neither should it be placed uncovered by an open window.

Milk received in good condition is not infrequently rendered unfit for food by careless handling in the home. Rapid cooling and refrigeration are fully as important as cleanliness in the production of safe milk. Half an hour in a hot kitchen or in the sun will hasten the time of souring, because the growth of all organisms is quickened by mild heat. At once, as soon as the milk reaches you set it aside in the coolest place at your command.

Milk, cream and butter rapidly absorb odors and flavors, and if kept in a refrigerator should be covered.

When possible it is well to reserve a separate compartment for these products. Sometimes in very hot weather housekeepers complain that in spite of all precautions the milk sours quickly, even in the icebox. This is often due to the fact that the air of the icebox, although it seems cold in contrast with the heat outside, is not really cold enough to check the growth of the bacteria. The temperature should be kept at least as low as 50 degrees Fahrenheit, and should be tested with a thermometer during excessive summer heat.

Receptacles in which milk is to be placed should be freshly scalded to remove any bacteria or mould spores. It has been proved that seamless pans are best, as they provide no rough surface to which stale milk may cling. New milk must never be mixed with old unless it is to be used at once, as the bacteria in the old milk will, of course, be added also and the mixture will not keep as well as the fresh milk alone.

The bacteria, which by their growth render milk unsafe, are present everywhere—in the air with dust, in every particle of dirt, in water, on the hands and clothing, on all utensils and vessels. Therefore no utensil, spoon or receptacle should be used which has not been sterilized, especially when the milk is to be given to the sick or to infants. Although such milk may not contain the seed of any certain disease, it often causes serious digestive disturbances with young children or the sick, and may become indirectly the cause of fatal maladies.

Infant diseases chiefly prevail in the hot season, when flies abound, and the fly is also often responsible for the death of children because of polluting the milk which they drink.

The fluid form and nutritive material of milk afford a medium peculiarly favorable to the development of disease germs, as well as the useful bacteria, which aid in butter and cheese making. The growth of such micro-organisms is hastened by moderate heat, but the majority are killed by raising the milk to the boiling point, as is done by pasteurization or sterilization. Disease germs that in water would not multiply and would probably live but a short time increase abundantly in milk. When in doubt concerning the safety either of the aforementioned methods may be used.

Sterilization requires a temperature of 212 degrees Fahrenheit, continued fo about twenty minutes. This process usually changes the flavor of the milk so that it is disagreeable to many people. The high temperature also causes the fat globules to separate instead of being retained in the form of cream.

Pasteurization takes its name from the noted French scientist Pasteur, and consists in raising the milk to a temperature of about 155 degrees Fahrenheit, keeping it there for fifteen mintues and then allowing it to cool quickly. By this means the flavor of milk is unchanged. Since the solid portions of milk readily adhere to the bottom of a saucepan placed in direct contact with heat and the resulting burned flavor rapidly penetrates the whole of the milk, a double boiler is the best utensil to use when heating it.

It must be borne in mind that no amount of pasteurization or sterilization can make bad milk good. They merely destroy disease germs. The chemical changes in the milk which through age has begun to deteriorate are beyond retrieve.

TYPHUS FEVER IS NO LONGER FEARED

"Camp fever," as typhus is called in the soldier's lingo, is no longer feared by the medical corps of the United States army.

Every American soldier now knows that typhus, which is playing havoe with the Euproean armies, is communicated by the body louse. Soldiers in the Civil War did not know that. They regarded the army "grayback" as something inevitable; annoying, but not a serious menace.

Today the soldier from the day he enters Uncle Sam's service is taught to make war on this parasite.

Modern military training in the American army, in other words, spells training in personal hygiene. "Teaching men to take cae of themselves," is the way the enlisted man expresses it.

Teaching men to take care of themselves occupies a larger place today in military training in America than teaching them to march in perfect step did in bygone days.

Keep clean, keep your feet in good condition, keep your stomach and digestive appartus functioning properly, avoid suspicious drinking water, do not let litter, filth or garbage accumulate about your camp, but destroy then instantly.

These are a few of the precepts of the modern military commander. They are regarded—strictly from a military point of view—of higher consequence than any other, save the cardinal ones of "shoot straight" and "obey orders."

If the Spanish-American War, including the experiencce in the Phillippines and other tropical climates, taught the American army nothing else, it did emphasize the value of camp sanitation.

When the boys from home in the volunteer regiments died like sheep in the training camps in the United States, as well as in active service abroad, the country was horrified.

As a result of it all, there was a swift readjustment of military organization which gave the medical officers greater power and authority.

Today the selection of a camp site is not left to the engineer or the quartermaster, as it once was. The medical man must be consulted.

Today the commissary is not the whole thing in determining what the men shall eat, drink and wear. Again the medical man is respectfully consulted.

And the medical men show results. Camps on the Texas border prove this. Ten thousand men have been encamped there for a year, and yet there has not been a single case of typhoid among them.

It is a demonstrable fact that never in the country's history did so many soldiers remain so long in camp with so low a non-infectious rate. The camp no longer is a disease breeder.

Five thousand Mexican troops and their camp followers of both sexes fled across the border after the battle of Ojinaga, January [illegible], 1914, and were interned at Fort Bliss and Fort Wingate. Typhoid and smallpox were rife among them when they came with their accumulated filth.

The medical corps got busy and speedily rounded the Mexicans into better health than ever they had known before. No similar number of Mexicans in Mexico ever had so low a death and disease rate after Uncle Sam's medical men were put in charge of the refugees

TREES ADVISED FOR CITY STREETS

The trees which are best suited for planting on streets where the conditions for their growth are favorable are listed by the American Forestry association of Washington in reports to its members, together with detailed information regarding planting and care of them. The list, with some instructions as to planting, is as follows:

American Elm.—A graceful tree, attractive in summer and winter. Tall and stately, with strong arching branches. Grows rapidly in rich, well drained, moist soil, but adapted to many soils. Should be planted only on wide avenues, forty to sixty feet apart, according to soil conditions, usually about fifty feet. Very liable to attack by the elm leaf beetle. The English elm is smaller, more compact, not as graceful as the American elm and more subject to insect attack.

Sugar Maple.—Very hardy, but exacting in soil and moisture and is sensitive to dust and smoke. Rounded, symmetrical head. Foliage colors brilliantly in autumn. Plant forty to forty-five feet apart.

European Linden.—Well formed, rounded head, with dense, beautiful foliage, grows quite rapidly, but requires good moist soil and is very liable to insect attack. Should be spaced about thirty-five feet. The basswood, or American linden, has larger leaves and is less valuable for street planting than the European species.

Tulip Tree.—Tall, very regular form, requires good soil. Hard to transplant on account of tender roots; best results if young trees are planted. Subject to scale and other enemies. On account of its great size should be planted only on very wide streets and in suburban sections. Spacing forty-five to sixty feet.

Red Maple.—Adapted to good moist soil, moderate growth, dense shade, fairly free from insects. Fine coloring in spring and fall. Space trees thirty-five to forty feet apart.

Sweet Gum.—Best suited to very moist, rich soil. Has compact form, beautiful foliage, especially in fall. Very free from insects. Spacing about thirty-five feet.

White Ash.—Fairly rapid growth, hardy, suited to many soils. Grows straight and forms a round, symmetrical top. Leaves Compound, and foliage in pleasing irregular masses. Few enemies. Spacing about forty feet.

TREE MOVING MACHINE AT WORK.

Hackberry.—Medium sized, symmetrical tree, not exacting as to soil, moisture or climate. Slow growth, but fairly free from pests and diseases. Spacing about thirty feet.

Los Angeles a Garden City.

Stately palms, set in cement tubs, will line the streets of Los Angeles during California exposition year. The palms will alternate with the electroliers in the business district. They are a part of a general beautifying scheme in which the city, county, civic bodies, commercial organizations and school children took part. In addition 10,000 school children in elementary grades are competing for cash prizes in a home garden contest.

Fighting the Ugly Billboard.

The decision of the supreme court of Illinois that billboards can be prohibited on utilitarian grounds is of national importance. The law which the court sustains requires consent of a majority of the property in residence blocks before a billboard can be put up.

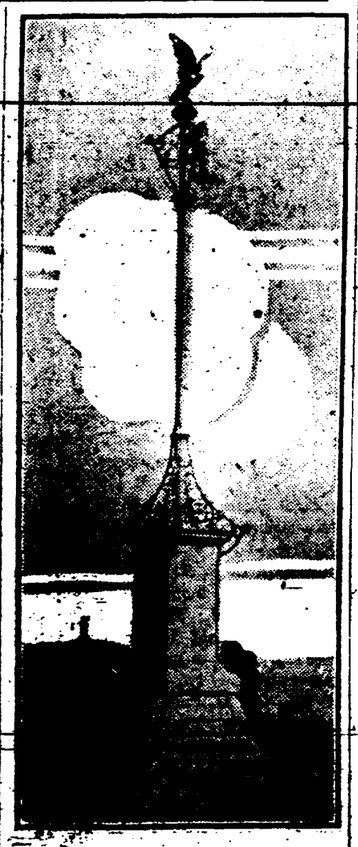
MEMORIALS OF USE AND BEAUTY

Combining beauty with utility, the city of Los Angeles honored the memory of one of its most distinguished citizens, General John C. Fremont, by erecting in his honor an ornamental monument which serves also the purpose of a light standard. It stands at the entrance to Elysian park and bears at its top a hanging electric lamp. The tall, slender shaft of the monument is surmounted by an eagle with outstretched wings. The monument was erected at a cost of $30,000 in 1896.

It has been urged on American municipalities that they erect drinking fountains, ornamental lighting poles, bridges, gates, etc., in honor of their famous citizens, rather than the statues, often inartistic, which they now put up. The monuments in New York city, for example, have often been criticised, and some of them in Central park are now hidden by shrubbery in order to conceal their crudities. Many of the figures in statuary hall, in the United States capitol, bear greater testimony to the gratitude of the states represented than to the skill of the men and women who conceived and executed the figures.



Students of civic art say it is better for a city to have, for example, an artistic drinking fountain, inscribed with the name of the man or woman whom the municipality delights to honor, than an ugly monument buried in some out of the way corner of a park or boulevard. These critics lay stress on the lack in American cities of proper memorials which can be put to good civic uses.

The Los Angeles light bearing shaft is not the only useful memorial bearing the name of General Fremont. A few years ago William Rockefeller completed a fountain in North Broadway, Tarrytown, N. Y., in memory of Major General John C. Fremont and turned it over to the village authorities. It is situated a few hundred feet south of the old Fremont home and at a spring where the famous Pathfinder often stopped to quench his thirst.

Mr. Rockefeller conceived the idea of preserving the spring and at the same time honoring a former distinguished resident. He obtained permission from the village to tear down the old trough and in its place erected a fine fountain from native stone. It is built on a semicircle on the east side of the road, with a stone pillar at each end. In the center is the trough, cut out of a massive rock, and above it is a bronze tablet inscribed:

"Cold Spring. Erected in memory of General John C. Fremont, the Pathfinder, a former resident, A. D., 1913."

General Fremont lived at Tarrytown for a time just after the civil war. Mr. Rockefeller's estate adjoins his old home. The Fremont fountain is the second memorial Mr. Rockefeller erected recently near Tarrytown. In 1912 he rebuilt the Headless Horseman bridge in honor of Washington Irving.

"A HERALD OF PROGRESS"

ODD ADVENTURE ON A RAILWAY.

Ruse of a Criminal to Escape Arrest Comes to Naught.

It was some years ago that Gretchen Hecker, then a girl of eighteen, was put aboard a train for Berlin. Her father having lost his fortune, it was decided that the girl should study music, with a view to earning her own living.

She went all alone on the train and was alone in the compartment until at one of the stops a man got in. The train had no sooner started on than he said to Gretchen:

"Fraulein, I'll trouble you for your coat."

Gretchen looked at the man, not understanding what he meant.

"Your coat, and be in a hurry. Take it off. I'm going to put it on and you shall put on mine."

Before Gretchen could be made to understand that he was in earnest he was obliged to threaten her, and even then the taking off of her outer garment before a man was so obnoxious to her that she did it very slowly. The man was twice her age, but not much taller, being small and wiry. He put on Gretchen's coat, which fit him, compelling her to put on his own coat. Then he took out of a satchel a number of cosmetics and began to make himself up for a woman. He also took out a mustache and, giving it to Gretchen, ordered her to stick it on to her upper lip.

Gretchen, who had never before been out in the world without a maid, was of course terror stricken. She obeyed the man mechanically, expecting every moment that he might find it to his interest to murder her. After they had changed apparel he said to her:

"Little girl, if you do what I want you to do, I'll not hurt you. The next station will be B, and I except to leave the train there. If I decide not to and any one gets into this compartment you must pretend that you are a young man. If you don't, I'll kill you."

When the train stopped at B the man was about to get out when he caught sight of a policeman standing right where he must be passed. The man hesitated and decided not to risk it. He cowered back in the car and remained there while the train was at a standstill. Just before it moved off a young man in a student's cap got into the compartment.

The student was evidently in an amiable mood—most students are—and as soon as he was seated took out a cigarette and, turning to the criminal who he supposed was a woman, asked if she objected to smoking. The man replied in so coarse a voice that the student smiled, and, permission being granted, he offered Gretchen a cigarette. She was about to decline when a glance from the criminal warned her to accept, and, taking the cigarette, the student held a match while she lit it. The student insisted on opening a conversation with her. At the first sound of her voice he looked at her surprised and smiled again.

"You two had better change your clothes," he said. "The woman has the voice of a man, while the man has the voice of a woman."

Poor Gretchen now began to show signs of sickness, and the student asked what was the matter. Gretchen admitted that it must be the cigarette.

"Poor little boy," said the student. "You should be at home with your mother."

Taking her head in his arms, he playfully pulled it down on to his breast. The criminal, not relishing this close proximity and fearing the girl might communicate with the student, said:

"Let the boy alone."

"What business is it of yours?" asked the student haughtily. "One would suppose the boy to be a girl. I'll hug him if I like."

With that he seized Gretchen and pulled her face down on to his chest so vigorously that when he released her the mustache had fallen off.

"Well, well!" said the astonished student. "What's this? Are you trying to escape from justice in disguise?"

"That's it," cried the criminal. "He must be a thief."

The student looked at the blushing, innocent face of the girl, and, noticing that her hair had partly slipped from under her hat where the criminal had placed it, took hold of a coil and pulled it down over Gretchen's shoulder.

"You're a girl," he said, "that's certain. Now, how about you?" he added, looking at the other, who cried:

"A man!" And, whipping out a revolver, he attempted to cover the student, but the latter, who was a renowned member of the dueling corps at his university, quick as lightning knocked up his weapon, and in the scuffle that followed the criminal, being encumbered with a long coat, was overpowdered and lost his revolver.

For the rest of the journey the student kept the criminal covered and got from Gretchen a brief story of how she had been forced into man's attire. On reaching the next station the criminal was turned over to the police, and Gretchen's identity was confirmed by telegraph.

The student proved to be the son of a wealthy baron who knew Gretchen's father. This and the singular adventure was quite enough to induce an acquaintance, which ripened into love, and Gretchen is now a baroness.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Catching Cold.

If you are "always catching cold" look to your general health, strengthen your resistance against cold. Do not overeat. Keep the organs of elimination normal. Take frequent baths. Sleep in a cold, well ventilated room. Avoid crowds and overheated rooms. Keep the teeth, tonsils, nose and throat clean and breathe nothing but clean air.

ANCIENT WAR METHODS.

Did Hannibal Use Dynamite In His Passage of the Alps?

Every one knows the story of how Hannibal crossed the Alps. It is usually asserted that he demolished the rocks that opposed his progress with the aid of fire and vinegar. The word used by the Latin historians which is ordinarily called in English translation "vinegar" is acetum.

The question has been raised by an European officer whether this is the true meaning of the original. He is of the opinion that by acetum the historian intended to describe a substance resembling dynamite in its properties, and he invites chemists to consider the question whether the ancients may not have possessed a formula for making a powerful explosive of this kind.

He calls attention to the fact that two ancient historians, Marcus Gracus and Albert of Aix, speak of the existence of two kinds of acetum, one of which possessed greater energy than the other. A clew to the composition of the explosive may be found, he believes, in the fact that to acetum was ascribed the property of extinguishing the dreaded "Greek fire." He thinks the substance may have been strongly oxygenated.

Although to discover how Hannibal's "dynamite" was made would be to add nothing perhaps to our sense of the greatness of his achievements, yet such a discovery would certainly throw new light on some interesting events in the wars of antiquity.

MILITARY AEROPLANES.

Fitted With Phonographs, Into Which the Observers Dictate.

When the military aeroplane is scouting it usually carries two men. One is the pilot, who runs and steers the craft; the other is the observer, who marks the placing of the hostile troops, the position of their guns, the movement of trains, and the like. The observer also makes many sketches of the ground over which he is flying—work that often interferes with his writing notes and memoranda.

In certain conditions of flight, too, it is often hard for him to use a pencil and paper. To obviate the difficulty the military aeroplane, says the Scientific American, now frequently carries a phonograph, with a speaking tube running to the mouth of the observer, so that by talking into the machine at any time during the flight he can record his observations and still have his hands free for his field glass or his sketching pencil.

Russia's Craving For Alcohol.

Since the sale of vodka was prohibited in Russia many strange methods have been developed to procure alcoholic beverages, and recently statements have come out of Russia that many illicit stills have been unearthed which have been engaged in recovering the alcohol in shellac. The shellac is divested of its alcohol by distillation, and a crude beverage is then made to be sold as a substitute for the prohibited old wines and vodka.

Women in Canada.

In Canada it is necessary for a wife to secure from her husband a written notice to the bank before she can deposit to or withdraw money from an account in her own name. It has been only after twenty years of agitation that the legislature of Quebec passed a law giving to the widow a share of her husband's estate if he died intestate. Previously it had gone to the most distant relative in preference to the wife.

A Reminder of Robin Hood.

The portion of the English coast which recently suffered from German bombardment was connected with Robin Hood. Tradition says that from Whitby towers he and Little John used to shoot at long range with their English bows, and a bay a little south of this town bears to this day the name of Robin Hood's bay. This would seem to bear out the belief that Robin Hood was an actual living personage.

"City of Dreadful Light."

London streets at night are far more beautiful to look at and far more agreeable to walk in than when every shop flares with a vulgar display of hard light and when the disgusting electric light advertisements defaced walls, riverside and space itself. May London never go back to its old, vulgar, hateful system of lighting. We want no more of that city of dreadful light.—London Saturday Review.

A Grasshopper Plague.

Grasshoppers have become such a menace to crops in San Salvador that the government is preparing a novel method of extermination, one used with good results in South American countries. Virus has been procured from Brazil, and numbers of the inoculated insects will be freed in the swarming droves. The disease is said to be remarkably fatal to the pests.

QUEER CONDUCT OF A RECRUIT

Young Soldier Sorely Perplexes His Colonel.

The Franco-Prussian war had just opened, and the German army was hurrying to the frontier. One morning before the day's march began a young recruit was brought before the colonel of the Eighty-seventh regiment of the line in arrest.

"This is Private Herman Meisner," said his captain. "Last night he voluntarily relieved one of the guard and connived at the escape of a prisoner under charge of sleeping on post. He admits this, but says that the man he released, Carl Meisner, is his cousin."

"How long have you been in the army?" asked the commander.

"Two weeks."

"Captain, this young fellow is doubtless ignorant of the enormity of his offense, and we need every man at his post of duty. You may release him. Has the escaped prisoner been rearrested?"

"He has, colonel."

The march was resumed. In the evening as the colonel was refreshing himself with a smoke the captain returned with Private Herman Meisner again in arrest.

"Colonel," he said, "when the prisoners were inspected after the day's march Private Carl Meisner was missing, and this man, Private Herman Meisner, was in his place."

The colonel knit his brows.

"What did you do that for," he asked of the boy, "after my leniency to you this morning?"

"They told me my cousin would likely be shot for sleeping on post."

"That is his affair, not yours. Do you want to get yourself shot in his place?"

"I would rather, colonel."

"That's very, very ridic—very noble of you, but it's unjust to yourself. It seems to me, captain, that this boy has the true elements of a soldier in him, but he needs instruction. You may return him to duty. Has the real prisoner been rearrested?"

"Yes, colonel."

The next morning Private Meisner was again brought before the colonel for having made a third attempt to free his cousin. This time he had failed to even get the prisoner away from the guard. The colonel sent the incorrigible Herman back to take his place with the other prisoners, to stand trial at the proper time for mutiny. "You are a little fool," said the commander.

"Are you sure he's sane, captain?" asked the colonel.

"Perfectly sane."

"Well, take him away."

The next day there was a roar of artillery at the front. As the colonel was mounting his horse the captain appeared and, saluting, said:

"The prisoners desire permission to take their place in the ranks for the coming battle."

"Grant it for any in whom you have confidence. I suppose those two cousins are among the applicants."

"Carl Meisner has applied. His cousin who tried to effect his escape has not."

"That's strange," said the colonel, and, putting spurs to his horse, he rode away.

That day was fought the battle of Gravelotte. When it was over the captain appeared before his colonel, this time with both the Meisner cousins.

"Colonel," he said, "I have to report that I decided to put all the prisoners in the ranks for battle. Carl Meisner, who was in arrest for sleeping on post, distinguished himself by conspicuous gallantry. His cousin Herman ran and hid himself behind a log."

The colonel looked at the prisoner in perplexity.

"And you," he said to Herman, "are the man who wished to get yourself shot to save your cousin!"

The colonel expected him to hang his head in shame. He did no such thing. He simply smiled, smiled with his beautiful blue eyes, his delicately curved lips, every feature in his boyish face.

"I wish," said the colonel to the captain, "that we could [illegible] die to procure material for the army." Then to Herman, "How old are you, boy?"

"Twenty."

The colonel sat thinking. Presently he said to the captain:

"See that the charges against Carl Meisner are withdrawn and make him a corporal. As for this coward—what the dickens he means by trying to get himself shot in place of his cousin I don't know, but we can't be encumbered with him on a campaign. Send him back under charges of both mutiny and cowardice."

Private Herman began to cry.

"What are you sniffling for?" began the colonel, when Carl interrupted him:

"Colonel, she is a woman—my wife. We have two little children at home, and she should be there to take care of them. But she would not let me go to the war without coming with me, fearing I would get killed, just as if she could help that."

"Phew!" exclaimed the colonel. "A woman! That accounts for her strange behavior, ready to die in place of the man she loved, but no desire for a fight. Well, captain, you must send Private Herman Meisner back home to take care of the children. I suppose the government won't give her transportation, so I will."

He took some bills from his pocketbook and handed them to the captain, who, with the pair, withdrew.
